BI-WEEKLY CONFERENCE CALL
APD Extended Management Committee
May 16, 2013 1:00-1:30pm

PARTICIPANTS:

Mary Donaghy, chair	Gerry Doucette	Ray Levesque
Maryse Picard	Shammi Sandhu	Michele Lanouette
Daniel Leduc	Jim Greyeyes	Nancy Tremblay
Michelle Budak	Kathy Magladry	Harley Crowshoe
Claude Turgeon	Rebecca Thompson	Sheila Mungall
Diane Samuel	Line Gauthier

REGRETS: Kathy Magladry

1. Update from Mary:

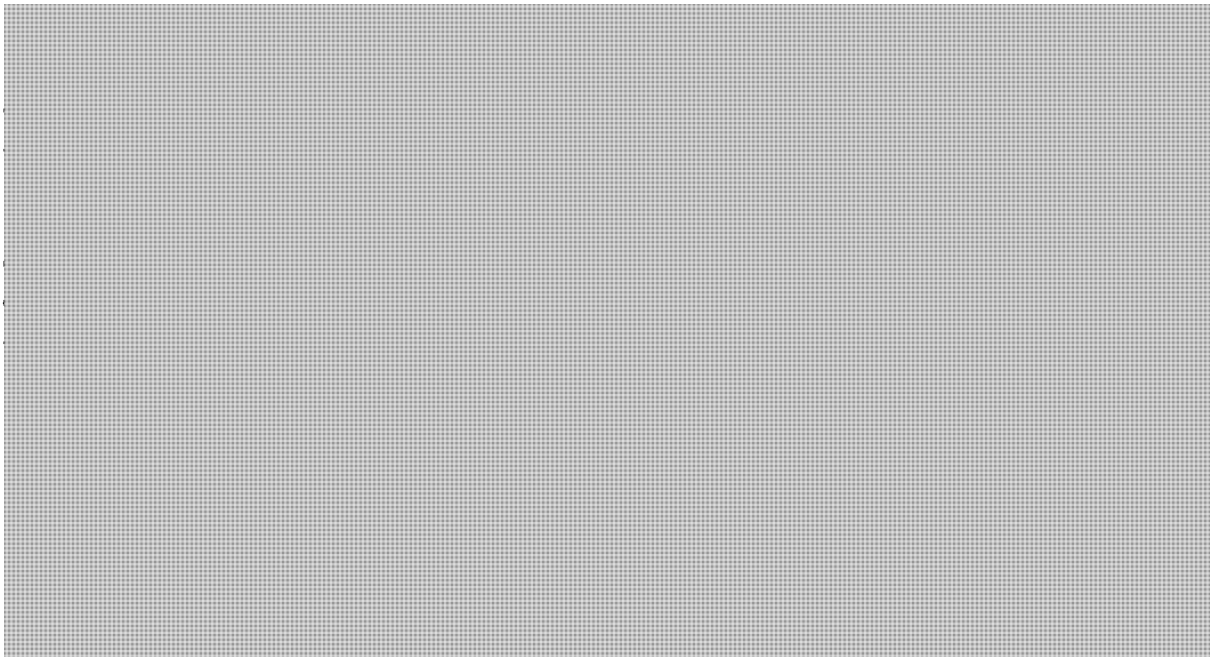

- The DM announced changes effective June 3. Gina Wilson will return to AANDC as Senior ADM, Treaties and Aboriginal Government. Shawn Tupper will temporarily take on the role of A/ADM of EM&RO in addition to his current responsibilities. DGs of both CSPB and EM&RO will meet as a group shortly to discuss how best to assist with streamlining workload. It was announced that Stéphanie Durand will be joining EM&RO.
- Mary said the CSPB and RD Program Management meeting, held on May 14 and 15, was an enormously productive and useful opportunity to brainstorm as a group. The agenda focused on three main themes:
  1) Looking back to 2012-2013: achievements and outstanding issues that still need to be addressed. NCPC agreed to produce and share the "parking lot" documents. It was agreed that more meetings between RDs and the two large programs would have been beneficial. There was a common commitment to organize more of these types of meetings in order to address issues on the parking lot.
  2) The program: History and overview of APD programs and processes, renewal exercise, complexities and grey zones, how we define and measure risk.
  3) The program management framework: We walked through the foundation documents – Claude will send them out as a package as a reminder. We demonstrated that we have a solid approach, a sophisticated management control framework with rigor and structure. We emphasized the need to shift perspective from a fed/prov paradigm to F/P/Aboriginal tripartite relationship in order to contribute to our program delivery. Participants were asked to see how they see themselves contributing.
- Claude will follow up to see if RDs can be persuaded to participate and submit agenda items on existing RM calls.
- Mary proposed that the RDs visit communities with RMs to strengthen the tripartite nature of the relationship that we are collectively building.
- Concern was expressed over the THC reductions while we actually need to be more active.

2. Roundtable:

- Nancy Tremblay told us to stay tuned for a particularly interesting InfoBulletin edition coming up.
- Ray Levesque is currently working with Policy on Ts&Cs, RCMP funding levels and footprint, and a Human Rights Complaint.
- Sheila Mungall: Communications is working on a ministerial quote for Matrimonial Real Property. Royal Assent won't happen before the summer break. The Media Lines are ready for the FNPP Multi-Year Agreement – they're useful when communicating with stakeholders but reminder that calls from reporters are to be directed to Communications.
- Rebecca Thompson provided an overview of discussions on the FNPP at the FPT ADMs' Policing and Public Steering Committee (PPSSC) meeting on May 7th. Committee members expressed keen interest in holding more frequent discussions on the FNPP, and possibly creating an officials-level Working Group to support these discussions. The Quebec representative raised the possibility of an informal DMs' dinner discussion on the FNPP, to be held in the context of the June 2013 FPT Deputy Ministers' meeting in Quebec City. Committee members expressed concern that the policy foundations for the renewal of the FNPP are unclear; that funding levels are inadequate; and that there is no room to address key issues such as infrastructure needs. Some provincial representatives (Quebec, Manitoba) expressed their strong opinion that the federal government is responsible for policing on reserve. PS officials were encouraged by the level of P/T interest in engagement, which should lead to further positive discussions and more regional conversations.
- Daniel Tremblay: currently reviewing all feedback on FNPP templates and planning to get back to everyone on that next week. RMs are encouraged to have as many recipients as possible on Direct Deposit.
- Michelle Budak: currently developing the PPA workplan and will share when complete.
- Claude Turgeon: 1) stressed the importance of Direct Deposit. Pressure was put on the Comptroller to ensure this wouldn't fall off the plate and we expected bigger intake so we need info more promptly. 2) Thanked everyone for their valuable comments on the templates. 3) Continuing to schedule meetings with provinces to obtain template agreements – works out best when lawyers have looked at templates in advance of meetings. Once the meetings with the provinces have been held, the templates will be sent to the FN leaders for their input.
- Michele Lanouette 1) asked for clarification as to when the template drafts will be in "ready to share" status. We can't take the risk of taking too long before starting conversations with FNs. 2) Continuing to firm up dates for template discussions with Province.
- Gerry Doucette: gave an overview of the work Policy has been involved in: 1) contributed to the Matrimonial Real Property TB submission, led by AANDC, but it's now been parked until the Fall. There is $250K going towards training support. 2) The Shareholder Panel agenda will be finalized soon. 3) Policy is connecting with

- Mary asked for a quick tour around Regions for mood of FNs following Idle No More. Seems to be quiet and expecting lots of work is going on behind the scenes. Annual General Meeting of the First Nations Assembly is coming up.

Protest Activity: Risks

Risk: No indication of illegal or violent protest activities and none are anticipated.

Three Risk Levels: in order of diminishing likelihood:

- Low: awareness activities
- Medium: potentially disruptive activities
- High: extremism

- There is no indication at this time that protest activities by First Nations will be anything but peaceful.

- That said, protests are very fluid in nature and can attract support to a specific event, often drawing support from other geographical locations.

- There are three risk levels in order of diminishing likelihood:

    1. Low: these are awareness activities, such as sit-ins, round dances, flash mobs and organized parades.

    2. Medium: these are potentially disruptive activities, such as the deliberate interruption of critical infrastructure or transportation networks. Historically, there have been several flashpoints connected to disruptions to the transportation network.

    3. High: this level is the least likely to occur and includes extremism or serious acts of politically-motivated violence.

Protest Activity: Operating Principles

- Principles based on lessons learned from Ipperwash, Caledonia, recent Idle No More protests and other events
- Measured response including:
  - Proportionality
  - Monitoring and continual risk assessment
  - Using a level of intervention commensurate with the assessment
- Clear distinction between government and police roles
- Continuing dialogue and communications between government, organizers and First Nations' leaders

- Protest activities since December 2012 have generally been peaceful, but have resulted in some disruptions to transportation and ports of entry. Most notably, the CN line in Sarnia, the VIA passenger corridor near Kingston, as well as the Blue Water Bridge in Sarnia, have all been targeted. The impacts of these protests are fluid, and can vary according to the nature and length of disruption. These recent examples demonstrate that there are real economic impacts from protests.

- Overall, the recent First Nations protests were managed effectively. The Government of Canada, including its partners, have learned a great deal with respect to managing the response to large-scale or multiple protest events.

- One lesson learned from the Idle No More protests is to ensure that the local response is measured and sensitive to First Nations issues. This means the response must continue to re-evaluate the risks, be proportional and use a level of intervention that is aligned to the risk assessment.

- Another lesson learned, this time from the Ipperwash Inquiry, is the importance of a clear distinction between the role of government and the role of police in dealing with protests, and minimizing any perception of the government's influence on operational police decisions.

Protest Activity: Response

- Public Safety Canada (PS) has the overarching responsibility for response coordination, supported by AANDC and the federal family.
- Federal Emergency Response Plan (FERP) forms the basis of preparation and response should the situation escalate to an event of national interest.
- The Government Operations Centre (GOC) is responsible for ensuring a coordinated federal response through:
  - Primary federal institutions using the Emergency Support Functions
  - Supporting federal institutions as required providing specialized assistance
  - Federal family within regions through their Federal Coordination Groups (lead by PS Regional Offices)
  - Provinces' and Territories' responsible government institutions
  - Governance in accordance with the FERP escalating through DG, ADM and DM committees
- PS Communications will support AANDC by facilitating a coordinated federal public communications response with partners.

- The Federal Emergency Response Plan (FERP) forms the basis of preparation and response should the situation escalate.

- The GOC, working with partners, will provide at the national level:
  - Situational Awareness; consolidated reporting to partners and senior officials
  - Risk Assessment: including threats and impact to critical infrastructure
  - Planning: Options development for determining a course of action
  - Operations Coordination: including monitoring, validating and coordination of the response based on direction provided to the GOC by the governance structure
  - Support to Decision Makers: Including both information briefs as well as decision briefs to the governance structure

- Public Safety Canada Communications, in support of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada will
  - Establish media relations protocols with other federal partners;
  - Ensure information-sharing with partners on communications messages and activities;

- Monitor the public environment, both traditional and social media; and
- Oversee the "Detect & Correct" of factual errors in reporting.

Protest Activity: Roles & Responsibilities

- Public Safety Canada (PS)
  Overarching responsibility for response coordination supported by AANDC and the federal family
- Government Operations Centre (GOC)
  Whole of government response coordination
- Royal Canadian Mount Police (RCMP)
  Monitors events and provides situational awareness relating to law enforcement issues or policing. Policing within jurisdictions
- Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada (AANDC)
  May provides information on protest activities when the health and safety of First Nations communities could be adversely affected
- Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA)
  Aids protest response in border areas, and works with industry partners to predict protest activities that could affect their operations. CBSA has a protocol in place to deal with demonstrations
- Transport Canada (TC)
  Monitors and manages impacts on transportation and related infrastructure
- Fisheries and Oceans Canada (DFO)
  May be involved if protest relates to maritime or fisheries issues

A Deputy Minister level table top exercise will be held at the end of May/beginning of June on the subject of protest management.

- While there are potentially many departments and agencies with roles and responsibilities during a large-scale protest, the following agencies will likely have a primary role in any response.

- A complete list is maintained by the GOC and they are further highlighted and expanded in the FERP. These roles and responsibilities are reviewed during each interdepartmental planning session facilitated by the GOC.

- To further prepare, PS will host a DM level table top exercise at the end of May/beginning of June on the subject of protests in general; the outcomes will be applicable to First Nations or any other form of protest.

Subject: Global Day of Action - 28 Jan

As an update on today's activities, please see below. Unless there are significant developments there will not be any further messages events today.

Although a number of protests were planned for the "Idle No More Global Day of Action", inclement weather seems to be having an impact on turn out. Currently, 37 events are scheduled for today; all of which are expected to remain peaceful. Some notable protests, where large turns out were anticipated are:

Ottawa: At 11:30 EST, approx. 250 protesters began a march from Victoria Island to Parliament Hill. Once at Parliament Hill, protesters are expected to be joined by another approx. 1000 people coming to Ottawa from Toronto as part of a "Grass Roots Caravan." The rally is expected to last until 16:00 EST.

Ontario: From 13:00 - 17:00 EST, members of the Akwesasne FN (near Cornwall, ON) plan to march along the Seaway International Bridge; which connects Cornwall ON to Akwesasne and Massena NY. As of 10:10 EST, CBSA indicates that bridge operations remain, and are expected to remain, normal. CBSA has assessed that given poor weather conditions and the lack of support for a bridge closure, it is unlikely that bridge traffic will be significantly affected by protest activities.

Saskatchewan: At 13:00 EST, members of the Muskowekwan FN plan to blockade a segment of the CN railway line that runs through the Muskowekwan FN (near Lestock, SK). At present, there is no indication as to how many people will attend nor how long the blockade is expected to last. The affected line is a CN main rail line and part of the Asia Pacific Gateway running between Prince Rupert, BC and Chicago, IL. This line carries VIA rail passenger trains as well. CN has advised that they have Province wide injunctions for British Columbia, Manitoba and Saskatchewan as it relates to aboriginal blockades.

Subject: 25 Jan - Update in preparation for 28 Jan 2012

Information continues to develop on "Idle No More" events planned for 28 January 2013. In Saskatchewan, RCMP is reporting that at approx. 13:00 EST, members of the Muskowekwan FN plan to blockade a segment of the CN railway line that runs through the Muskowekwan FN near Lestock, SK. There is no indication as to how many people will attend or how long the blockade is expected to last. Transport Canada (TC) confirms that the affected line is a CN main rail line and part of the Asia Pacific Gateway running between Prince Rupert, BC and Chicago, IL. This line carries VIA rail passenger trains as well. TC will update the GOC with information regarding planned rail traffic on the line for 28 January 2013 as soon as this information becomes available.

In Ontario, FN protesters in Cornwall ON are also planning a march on the Seaway International Bridge at approximately 13:00 EST. The bridge connects Cornwall ON to Akwesasne and Massena NY. There is no indication as to how long the march is expected to last and whether cross-border traffic will be disrupted. However, a similar type of event occurred on 5 January 2013, where approx. 300 protesters blocked cross-border traffic for about 5 hours. The event remained peaceful.

The days the biggest demonstration continues to be the Unity Rally in Ottawa ON, set to commence at 10:30 EST. Organizers predict approx. 3000 people to participate in the march from Victoria Island to Parliament Hill; where they will be joined by another approx. 1000 people coming to Ottawa from Toronto as part of a "Grass Roots Caravan." Other sources suggest 1,500. Currently, there is no indication as to how long the rally will last.

At present, a total of 19 events planned for Monday, 28 January 2013 are forecasted to take place across Canada. All events are expected to remain peaceful.

Subject: Update in preparation for 28 Jan 2012

In preparation for Monday, I'd like to share the following:

The next significant date in the series of FN protests is scheduled for 28 January 2013, which corresponds with the return of Parliament. Organizers are referring to the protests as "Idle No More International Call-to-Action". While a number of smaller protests / demonstrations are planned across the country (activities are currently planned in BC, AB, SK, MB, ON, NS), the focus of the day's events will be a "Unity Rally" planned to take place on Parliament Hill (Ottawa ON). Organizers are expecting up to 3,000 participants, although some sources suggest only 1,500 are likely. The Rally will comprise a march from Victoria Island to the Hill beginning at 10:30EST.

Based on recent FN protest activities and calls by "Idle No More" organizers for civility, protests across the country, including the march on Parliament Hill, are anticipated to be peaceful. None are expected to affect significantly critical infrastructure. Unlike previous "Days of Action", there are a limited number of planned traffic slowdowns, though incidental and temporary traffic disruptions may occur since some events are scheduled to take place in the downtown core of several major cities.

As a result, it is not currently the intention of the GOC to establish an Event Team for the 28th or to issue SITREPs. Activities will be reported in the GOC Daily Brief and updates shared with operations centres as the day progresses assuming all goes as predicted. If there is a significant event you will receive a message directly and the GOC will then activate its normal processes. A matrix of future events will be maintained and shared with your operations centres as it is currently.

The GOC with its partners will also be monitoring for breaking items that may or may not be factual and have the potential to become viral with spin-off consequences even if not true. As these items are identified they will be confirmed through partners, information related to the item passed through normal channels and if the item is significant it will be passed directly to you. PS Public Communications is engaged and will support in this effort as required.

BI-WEEKLY CONFERENCE CALL
APD Extended Management Committee
January 24, 2013, 1:00-2:15 p.m.

PARTICIPANTS:

Mary Donaghy, chair	Diane Samuel	Harley Crowshoe
Claude Turgeon	Shammi Sandhu	Michele Lanouette
Kathy Magladry	Jim Greyeyes	Gerry Doucette
Rebecca Thompson	Diane Charbonneau	Larry Philippe
		Line Gauthier

REGRETS:
Eric Robitaille, Sheila Mungall, Daniel Leduc, Maryse Picard, Ray Levesque

1. Queen Elizabeth II Diamond Jubilee Medal:

- Congratulations to Harley Crowshoe, who was the recipient of the Queen Elizabeth II Diamond Jubilee Medal on January 18th. Harley was nominated by the Chiefs of Police Association for his commitment to a career in Policing and for his passionate work with Aboriginal Policing in Alberta.
- Mary observed that Harley is one the several APD recipients of this honour, reflecting our commitment to community building. Floralove Katz received this award earlier and a third recipient is yet to be announced… more to follow.

2. DG Debrief:

- The National Summit on the Economics of Policing was held on January 16-17. Next week, Rebecca will be sharing a summary; in the interim, she will forward some related links. As can be expected, there were many informal conversations concerning the FNPP; however we still expect no concrete news until the Federal Budget. RMs reiterated that the jurisdictions are continuing to raise concerns related to the impact of uncertainty.
- Mary mentioned that there is currently lots of Planning Cycle activity at the Branch level.
- We're moving forward on several Policy initiatives.
- There is lots of staffing news on the Policy side:
    - Eric Robitaille's secondment ends January 31, Rebecca will be A/Director until mid-February. A 4-month agreement for a replacement will be announced shortly. Annie LeBlanc's secondment with Social Policy Branch has been extended.
    - We are hoping to fill two vacancies at the EC-6 and EC-4 levels in the near future.
- Effective this January 28, John Ossowski will become our new Associate DM while Graham Flack is leaving PS to become Deputy Secretary to the Cabinet, Plans and

Consultations and Intergovernmental Affairs at PCO. John Ossowski was Assistant Secretary of the International Affairs, Security and Justice Sector at the Treasury Board of Canada Secretariat.

3. Upcoming 2013-2014 Events/Conferences:

- Michele mentioned the importance for budget forecasting that Regions have a long-range perspective of upcoming events and conferences.
- Mary asked Rebecca to develop a list of events and conferences for periodic updating so we could ensure to have the right APD and Regional presence.
- One upcoming conference is the Atlantic National Crime Prevention Conference but the dates are yet to be confirmed. Please send any other details on upcoming Events and Conferences to Rebecca or Fiona Sutherland.

4. Roundtable:

- Claude asked RMs to help with budget-related messaging consistency– i.e. the budget is divided in 1) program delivery related, and 2) NON program delivery related (ex. EM&RO related costs for meetings would not come out of FNPP budget).
- A discussion ensued and Mary confirmed that budget-related discussions were continuing at the DG level with EM&RO related to 1) operating dollars, and 2) supporting program delivery dollars (incl. travel).
- Rebecca gave a quick update on FPT DMs meetings; the progress on the Self-Government Administrative guidelines; and the progress on the International Study on Indigenous Policing contract.
- Diane Charbonneau reported that, while we are waiting for the Federal Budget, we are being proactive and advancing as much as possible with the agreements using assumptions so, after the budget announcement, final amendments can be done faster.
- Claude met with CCJD to discuss a longitudinal crime prevention project they are hoping to fund in communities where APD has a presence. Claude will forward an e-mail from Chantal Marion suggesting sites.
- Gerry mentioned the Social Innovation Workshop which will be held at the Old City Hall, 111 Sussex Drive on March 6-7.
- Gerry is organizing the Next Speaker Series event on February 5 with Bruno Steinke who is the Director at AANDC responsible for leading the Government of Canada's work on consultation and accommodation and developing partnerships with province, territories and Aboriginal communities. This unit was created in response to the Supreme Court Decision regarding the obligation for consultation and accommodation for public and private sectors. Bruno's unit also offers training in this area.
- Harley relayed that communities keep expressing their concerns with timing of amendments. Mary confirmed that messages keep being relayed up the Department and everyone is very aware and paying attention to current events.
- It is evident that following the various side-bar discussions at the Economics of Policy Summit, the notion of a "transitional year" has become known. Worst case scenario, though it would be hard to believe that the budget announcement would

FYI;

An updated report from Transport Canada Ontario Region states that there now appears to be approximately 6 buses and 30 personal vehicles at the Tilbury Staging area just off Hwy 401.

It was also reported from TC from the Windsor Police Service that there is a change in venue. "Windsor Police Service stated that the Ambassador bridge has a court injunction from 1991 which states that you cannot block traffic to the bridge.
Windsor police state that the INM organizers have been made aware of the injunction and will change protest location to the front of the CBSA building.
Windsor police are unsure if protesters will abide by injunction."

FYI;

An updated report from Transport Canada Ontario Region states that there now appears to be approximately 6 buses and 30 personal vehicles at the Tilbury Staging area just off Hwy 401.

It was also reported from TC from the Windsor Police Service that there is a change in venue. "Windsor Police Service stated that the Ambassador bridge has a court injunction from 1991 which states that you cannot block traffic to the bridge.
Windsor police state that the INM organizers have been made aware of the injunction and will change protest location to the front of the CBSA building.
Windsor police are unsure if protesters will abide by injunction."

Tyendinaga Mohawks to launch rail blockade as part of National Day of Action
APTN National News
Jan 16 2013

The Tyendinaga Mohawks say they plan to shut down the CP and CN rail lines in Ontario at 1 p.m. as part of cross-country, National Day of Action events planned from British Columbia to Nunavut, Alberta to Nova Scotia.

Mohawks from Tyendinaga have told APTN National News reporter Kenneth Jackson that they plan to shut down the rail lines at about 1 p.m. The location for the blockade is unknown.

Rallies, round dances and blockades are expected from coast-to-coast-to-coast.

In Ontario, London District Chiefs Council Chair Greg Peters said a planned rally at the gates of the Ambassador Bridge, which connects Windsor, Ont., to Detroit, Mich., would be the biggest First Nations event the area has ever seen. Plans are to rally for about an hour, temporarily stopping cross-border traffic.

"This will be the biggest First Nation event that Windsor has ever seen," said Peters, who spoke to APTN while standing in a parking lot packed with 12 buses of supporters. "We want to send a message that depending on the numbers, should we decide to shut down the border at a future date that is possible, that it could be done.

A portion of Hwy 401 was shut down by police for the convoy to the bridge.

In Cayuga, Ont., near Hamilton, about 60 people from Six Nations rallied and round danced at the local court house Wednesday morning.

"The idle No More movement is connecting to the everyday injustices faced by Native people when they are dragged through the courts at the hands of the (Ontario Provincial Police) when they are standing up for their rights," said organizer Laura Lepper.

Lepper said the rally was partly in support of Theresa Toad Jaimeson who is facing charges from a Feb. 18, 2012, incident after a "anti-Native rights" activist walked into an area of land in Caledonia, Ont., that Six Nations reclaimed in 2006.

A spokesman for the OPP said the provincial police force would be focusing on preserving public safety throughout the day.

"I know there are various activities planned for various locations," said OPP Sgt. Peter Leon. "We are prepared to deal with them as they do present themselves."

Barrie, Ont., police warned drivers Wednesday morning to expect delays as a result of rallies.

Members of Alderville First Nation in Ontario are slowing traffic along Hwy. 45 which cuts through their territory. They are handing out pamphlets, coffee and juice..

Possible blockades are also expected in Ontario and Manitoba. Former Roseau River chief Terry Nelson told APTN National News there are plans to shut down the CP and CN rail lines in Manitoba.

CN, CP and VIA spokespeople said they have yet to receive any reports of rail blockades, but they are monitoring the situation.

In British Columbia, the Pat Bay Hwy in Vancouver Island is also expected to be blocked temporarily.

A highway blockade is also planned near Cardston, Alta., and in the Lubicon Lake nation in the same province plans traffic slowdowns throughout the oil fields in their territory.

"We're not out blocking the roads and shutting things down, we're not at that point." said Lubicon Coun. Bryan Laboucan, in a statement. "All we're doing here today is taking a few minutes to talk to people visiting our territory whether for work or just passing through and educate them on our situation."

In Whitehorse a 24-hour prayer circle is expected to begin at about 6 p.m. local time. In Toronto, an Idle No More rally is planned for the British consulate at noon.

A march is planned in Kanesatake that will begin at the Pines near the cemetery that was once at the centre of the Oka crisis in 1990.

The Algonquins Barriere Lake, Que., plan to slow down traffic on Hwy 117 to draw attention to their opposiont of forestry projects on their land.

Subject: Information on a Possible Protest - Windsor Area January 16, 2013

Good Afternoon;

The following information concerning a possible protest aimed at the Windsor side of the Ambassador Bridge has been provided to the Ontario Regional Office by our Provincial sources.

- It has been reported that the Windsor Police and the OPP met with organizers of this event at the Caldwell First Nation office in Leamington on January 9, 2013. According to the Windsor Police Services, demonstrators from Southwestern Ontario First Nations are expected to meet at the En Route Travel Centre on Highway 401 westbound in Tilbury. They are expected to depart from the EnRoute centre at approximately 9:30am and to travel in a convoy along Highway 401 westbound, ending at University Mall at Huron Church Road and Tecumseh Road in Windsor. The OPP do not plan to escort the convoy, but will help the convoy get onto Highway 401 westbound safely.

- According to our provincial sources, the potential protest is being planned by First Nations groups in relation to the "Idle No More" movement.

- It is reported that the OPP and Windsor Police will be the lead for traffic management and communications during the protest event on January 16. The Ontario Ministry of Transportation will provide traffic management support as needed.

Should more information be provided, this will be forwarded to the GOC as soon as practicable.

On behalf of Onbox

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST003-13C

Incident: First Nations Protests – National Day of Action

Date: Information valid as of 15 Jan 2013, 12:30 EST

Description of current incident: As part of the ongoing First Nations (FN) engagement, a number of FN protests are anticipated as part of a "National Day of Action" planned for 16 Jan 2013.

At this time, partners have identified one protest that is likely to have an impact. On 16 Jan 2013, protesters plan to slow down traffic at the primary entrance to the Ambassador Bridge, connecting Windsor ON with Detroit MI (USA), for approximately one hour between 12:00 EST and 13:00 EST.

In addition, there is potential for other protests across the country. Please refer to attached matrix for a list of known events by province.

Marches and demonstrations are expected to remain peaceful.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, Canada Border Services Agency, media/open source reporting.

Current actions:

The GOC continues to monitor and analyze the situation closely and has established contact with key federal departments/agencies and PS Regional Offices in order to maintain cohesive information sharing and to identify potential impacts.

A consolidated events matrix is being maintained by the GOC and will be distributed periodically, as information becomes available.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

Future actions: The GOC will continue to work with federal and provincial partners to coordinate efforts and to assess impacts.

Assessment/Analysis: The national "Day of Action" planned for 16 Jan is expected to cause interruptions to passenger and freight trains, disruptions to traffic and potential delays at border crossings/ports of entry. Based on past events related to the "Idle No More" movement; demonstrations are expected to remain peaceful.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional situation reports: Further situation reports will be issued as more information becomes available.

Additional Products: An events matrix and geomatics product will be attached to a follow-on message.

Incident Number: ST003-13C

Incident: First Nations Protests – National Day of Action

Date: Information valid as of 15 Jan 2013, 12:30 EST

Description of current incident: As part of the ongoing First Nations (FN) engagement, a number of FN protests are anticipated as part of a "National Day of Action" planned for 16 Jan 2013.

At this time, partners have identified one protest that is likely to have an impact. On 16 Jan 2013, protesters plan to slow down traffic at the primary entrance to the Ambassador Bridge, connecting Windsor ON with Detroit MI (USA), for approximately one hour between 12:00 EST and 13:00 EST.

In addition, there is potential for other protests across the country. Please refer to attached matrix for a list of known events by province.

Marches and demonstrations are expected to remain peaceful.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, Canada Border Services Agency, media/open source reporting.

Current actions:

The GOC continues to monitor and analyze the situation closely and has established contact with key federal departments/agencies and PS Regional Offices in order to maintain cohesive information sharing and to identify potential impacts.

A consolidated events matrix is being maintained by the GOC and will be distributed periodically, as information becomes available.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

Future actions: The GOC will continue to work with federal and provincial partners to coordinate efforts and to assess impacts.

Subject: Information on a Possible Protest - Windsor Area January 16, 2013

Good Afternoon;

The following information concerning a possible protest aimed at the Windsor side of the Ambassador Bridge has been provided to the Ontario Regional Office by our Provincial sources.

- It has been reported that the Windsor Police and the OPP met with organizers of this event at the Caldwell First Nation office in Leamington on January 9, 2013. According to the Windsor Police Services, demonstrators from Southwestern Ontario First Nations are expected to meet at the En Route Travel Centre on Highway 401 westbound in Tilbury. They are expected to depart from the EnRoute centre at approximately 9:30am and to travel in a convoy along Highway 401 westbound, ending at University Mall at Huron Church Road and Tecumseh Road in Windsor. The OPP do not plan to escort the convoy, but will help the convoy get onto Highway 401 westbound safely.

- According to our provincial sources, the potential protest is being planned by First Nations groups in relation to the "Idle No More" movement.

- It is reported that the OPP and Windsor Police will be the lead for traffic management and communications during the protest event on January 16. The Ontario Ministry of Transportation will provide traffic management support as needed.

Should more information be provided, this will be forwarded to the GOC as soon as practicable.

Rapport de situation

Numéro d'incident : ST003-13B

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations – Journée nationale de protestation

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 14 janvier 2013, à 16 h HNE

Description de l'incident : Dans le cadre de leur engagement en cours, les Premières nations ont organisé de nombreuses manifestations pour la Journée nationale de protestation, le 16 janvier 2013.

Le 16 janvier, diverses manifestations seront tenues dans plusieurs endroits du Canada. Selon les médias, les manifestants veulent causer un « ralentissement économique » en érigeant des barricades à des postes frontaliers, sur des voies ferrées, et des autoroutes. Des marches, des manifestations et d'autres types d'activités pacifiques de protestation ont également été prévues par des organisations du mouvement Idle No More afin de sensibiliser les gens aux enjeux avec lesquels les Premières nations doivent composer.

Mesures en cours :

Le COG continue de suivre la situation de près, et il a communiqué avec les ministères et organismes clés du gouvernement fédéral et avec les bureaux régionaux de SP afin d'assurer le caractère uniforme de l'échange d'information.

Le COG tiendra à jour une matrice complète des incidents qu'il distribuera au besoin, à mesure que de nouveaux renseignements deviennent disponibles.

La gestion de l'incident relève des administrations et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, selon les besoins.

Mesures à venir : Le COG continuera de collaborer avec ses partenaires fédéraux et provinciaux pour coordonner les efforts et d'évaluer les impacts.

Analyse/évaluation : La journée nationale de protestation prévue pour le 16 janvier devrait entraîner des perturbations quant aux déplacements de trains passagers et de marchandises, des perturbations de la circulation et des retards potentiels aux postes frontaliers et aux points d'entrée. Par contre, si l'on se fie aux activités précédentes qu'a organisées le mouvement Idle No More, les manifestations devraient rester de nature pacifique.

Les ministères et les organismes qui ont plus de renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Autres rapports de situation : D'autres rapports de situation seront diffusés à mesure que d'autres renseignements deviennent disponibles.

Autres produits : Une matrice des incidents sera jointe à un message subséquent.

Julie,
Further to my previous email, here is a more detailed answer from the RCMP that has also been provided to Global-TV.
Andrew

Once the complaint was made, an Inspector and S/Sgt immediately initiated a review which included interviewing 24 employees - beginning with the complainants.

They also invited any other employee in the unit to come forward.

As is frequently the case where conflict exists, there were varying views on what the issues were and who was responsible.

They immediately addressed the issues which could be readily addressed.

The more complex issues were still being addressed when the Code of Conduct investigation was ordered.
An Inspector was seconded to the unit to continue making the changes which were identified in the review.

There have been many changes made including a new S/Sgt in charge, a change in the selection process for new members going into the unit, a modernization of training methods and principles, and consistency and stabilization in leadership and management practices.

A recent review was conducted and the results were favorable.

Management took action in this matter and we continue to monitor and review this unit.

Julie,
FYI, regarding the story below, the RCMP has provided the following heads up:

This story will appear Sunday in Vcvr Province. Related to S/Sgt Pearson (recent Adjudication case with female member)

Subject: Province on Sunday on Special O
I Don't know if you are aware - just out on Twitter: Province "exclusive" on Sunday called "Spy vs. Spy", with several members of BC's Special O Team talk about problems with Staff Travis Pearson and the leadership of Special O which went "unaddressed by RCMP brass" while he abused power.

Our E division (BC) Comms provided following to Province reporter:

Once the complaint was rec'd, an Insp and S/Sgt conducted 24 interviews and issued an open invite for anyone in Special O to come forward, they addressed the ones that could be readily addressed and they were working on the more complex issues when the Code of Conduct began. We added that there is now new leadership, mandate, reviews, etc.

In June 2008, when RCMP Const. Lorraine Bergerman met her new boss, Staff-Sgt. Travis Pearson, she found his first words strange and troubling.

Pearson - a fast-rising, 38-year-old officer candidate and former professional standards investigator - had just taken over the elite RCMP surveillance unit known as Special O.

In one of the unit's secret Lower Mainland offices, he approached Bergerman, a key administrator and a 25-year veteran, looked at her seriously and said: ``Where are all the young women?''

It would only get more bizarre.

Launched in 1974, Special O gathered evidence on all the biggest British Columbia cases: Robert Pickton; the Surrey 6 shooting; Air India terrorists; former premier Glen Clark, who was suspected of corruption; notorious juror Gillian Guess; international drug cartel players. All were targeted by Special O officers - people who don't look or act like regular cops; many of them lifelong unit members born with natural talents for snooping.

Bergerman was put on her guard with Pearson right away. But she didn't foresee that ``O'' would soon degenerate into a surreal parallel world, in which the nation's purported top police spies would begin spying and plotting against each other.

And although Bergerman and her colleagues quickly noticed that Pearson seemed constantly to be furtively texting and dashing out of the office without warning, they couldn't know that two young women he ushered onto the unit would allegedly become on-the-job sex partners who later claimed they were compelled into relations with Pearson and sexually assaulted.

One thing they never could have guessed is that after complaining to RCMP brass and citing evidence that should have raised red flags, they would be the ones shunted from the unit while management stood idle. They say Pearson's leadership was upheld until August 2009, when a bombshell allegation of rape on a subordinate officer, Const. Susan Gastaldo, led to an investigation, a civil lawsuit from the alleged victim and, finally, a sensational sex misconduct hearing.

Apart from wrongfully having sex on the job, however, Pearson has denied all allegations. ``I'm sorry for my disgraceful conduct and I will always be sorry,'' Pearson sobbed during a 30-minute statement in which he begged forgiveness from the force and his family near the end of the misconduct hearing. ``. . . my wife believes I should face the allegations before the board . . . but she will stand by me for the other slander.''

The RCMP disciplinary board found that the sexual relationship with Gastaldo was consensual.

After considerable soul-searching, Bergerman and others came forward to the Vancouver Province, putting aside fears of RCMP management repercussions, to tell the public their opinion that Pearson wasn't just having sex on the job, but was ruining careers and an elite unit with his scheming, harassment and abuse of power.

``The RCMP is still a great place to work, and I don't want to appear like I'm on a rant,'' Bergerman said. ``But what we went through, the channels we were supposed to go through, didn't work. It can't keep going on like this. I don't want this to happen to other units or other people.''

For the past several months the Province has reported on the disciplinary case of Const. Susan Gastaldo and Staff Sgt. Travis Pearson, who were accused of having sex in a police car during work hours and exchanging intimate messages while Gastaldo worked for Pearson in Special O.

In May 2009, Gastaldo, who was suffering from an anxiety disorder and off on sick leave, was sought out by Pearson and brought into a graduated return-to-work at Special O under his guidance.

What happened next was either a consensual affair, or exploitation of a mentally vulnerable victim, depending on whose testimony you believe.

In the course of the hearing, Pearson admitted to having sex with Gastaldo in his covert SUV during work hours, but rejected a number of allegations in the testimony of Gastaldo and one other employee. That employee - a former subordinate of Pearson's in the North Vancouver detachment - has her identity protected and is referred to as D.B.

D.B. testified she and her family felt they were stalked, and the family is still trying to recover from Pearson's alleged intrusions. Like Gastaldo, D.B. claimed she was assaulted and subjected to veiled threats, and Pearson abused his power to ensnare her. The two women said they feared the consequences of reporting Pearson because of his connections with RCMP brass, and his ``wingmen'' - protected officers that he seemed to gather around himself.

Gastaldo testified that Pearson seemed to run a ``snoop'' network of Mounties and said he could produce damaging information on high-level B.C. Mounties. D.B. testified that Pearson said he would make a ``shovel call'' - what she believed to be a threat of violence from one of the ``wingmen'' - if anyone hindered their relationship.

During the tribunal, Pearson's lawyer argued the relationship between D.B. and Pearson was consensual and challenged the accusations of stalking and implied threats. The tribunal hasn't made a ruling on D.B.'s claims.

Former Special O members told the Province that in their opinion, Pearson played head games and used ``nefarious'' schemes, subtle threats, and abused his power.

``I totally agree with (Gastaldo's) descriptions of intimidation and implied threats,'' said, Const. Lynne Jarrett, a 26-year Special O veteran. ``I do believe it, because it happened to me.''

``People say all Susan would have to do is speak up and tell the supervisor, then everything would be fine,'' Jarrett added. ``You hear all kinds of RCMP brass say, `Just speak up.' Well, we tried two years ago, and look what happened. We were the problem kids. We got shuffled out. That is why we are speaking now.''

Soon after Pearson arrived at Special O, he targeted key positions and ``slowly went about'' replacing experienced members with hand-picked favourites, according to a number of Special O members.

``He was connecting himself with people that had some sort of character flaw,'' Const. Bergerman said. It seemed like ``he was building his little empire.''

According to testimony, one experienced operation co-ordinator was moved from the office to the road shift, and an officer who can only be called Cpl. P (because of a publication ban) was installed in his place.

Gastaldo testified that Cpl. P engaged in drunk driving and once arrived at her home in such a vulnerable state that she allowed him to sleep off the booze in a spare room before driving home to his family.

Sgt. J.D. Martin, referred to in testimony as Pearson's wingman, was brought into the unit in October 2008.

A friend of Pearson's from their days at the North Vancouver detachment, Martin had left the Coquitlam detachment, where he was facing a harassment complaint.

Martin, when confronted by the Province, confirmed he was facing the complaint when Pearson hired him. He would not say what the complaint concerned, but said ``it was dealt with.''

Sgt. John Johnson, the unit leader before Pearson's arrival, told the Province that in Special O's cafeteria on one occasion, Surrey Mayor Dianne Watts appeared on TV and Martin made a crude comment, referring to her sexual desirability.

Const. Jarrett said she spent a significant amount of time with Martin on a training course, and he frequently made crude remarks about women.

In testimony, Martin said he was hired to help change the culture of Special O, and his efforts to get the unit to shape up led to friction.

``I was eager to come over and assist in bringing about some changes in the largest covert unit in the country,'' Martin said.

Const. Jarrett said, however, that during interviews with Special O members in the summer of 2009, Pearson's immediate superior, Insp. Dennis Erickson, claimed to not know who Martin was, or why he was at Special O.

As concerns over Pearson's staff moves and the ``bizarre'' atmosphere in Special O mounted, the unit's civilian financial administrator, Nancy Hirschkorn, decided to take the matter to RCMP management in Ottawa.

She compiled concerns from a number of members and detailed Pearson's alleged policy infractions and immaturity, plus questionable purchases and staffing moves that allegedly detracted from the integrity and operational ability of the unit.

The administrator's complaint was deferred from Ottawa back to B.C., according to email records. And in the end, Hirschkorn was chastised by Pearson's supervisor, Supt. Lorne Schwartz, and told that Pearson was doing exactly what they wanted him to do.

At that point, many Special O members considered the once proud unit a writeoff.

``We were being hung out to dry because there was nowhere to go,'' Const. Jarrett said. ``The atmosphere was that he could do whatever he wanted and screw over anyone because he was invincible.''

In a list of complaints obtained by the Province, one move that seems particularly troubling is Pearson's hiring of D.B. - his former subordinate and sex partner in the North Vancouver detachment - into a high security position for which she was neither qualified nor given sufficient clearance, according to Special O members.

D.B. said in testimony that she agreed to join Special O for several reasons. First, it would increase cash-flow for her family, and she felt she couldn't say no or she would put her family at risk, she testified. According to D.B. the key, though, was that one of her superiors, Staff-Sgt. Glenn Magark, told her if she transferred to Special O, Pearson would come under scrutiny. If Pearson was under the microscope, she said, the relationship could be ended without her instigating the break.

Sgt. Johnson says that in his first meeting with Pearson in the summer of 2008, Pearson mentioned that he wanted to hire D.B.

``I said, `You can't pay her more than $30,000 because she is not qualified, doesn't have security clearance for the job you want,'" Johnson said. ``And he basically hires her contrary to policy at about $70,000. He insisted they get a brand new Mazda SUV for her. It was crazy.''

D.B. testified that she only worked about 11 shifts at Special O in early 2009 before quitting, because contrary to her expectations that she and Pearson would be working in separate locations, he allegedly arranged an on-the-job sexual encounter in his covert SUV.

New RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson, who has admitted the RCMP suffers from a ``culture of bullying and a legacy of botched investigations,'' was not made available for an interview on claims in this story.

Supt. Ray Bernoties of B.C.'s E-Division said the division couldn't comment on specific questions, such as whether the hiring of Sgt. J.D. Martin while he faced a harassment complaint was authorized.

In a prepared statement, Bernoties said ``immediately upon hearing the concerns raised by members in Special `O' in April 2009, an Inspector and S/Sgt began a review . . . many measures have been implemented in Special `O' since the summer of 2009, including new leadership, clear mandates and ongoing reviews.''

Special O members say a series of interviews with Insp. Dennis Erickson actually did not start until June, when members unsuccessfully tried to trigger a ``management review.''

Looking back, Const. Jarrett believes her career in Special O basically ended in her first meeting with Pearson in October 2008, when he asked for her opinion about a pilot project aimed at shuttling young recruits into Special O.

Veterans, including Jarrett, were concerned the move was just aimed at plugging vacancies to make the unit look good on paper, while diluting the talent pool of specialized surveillance officers. Jarrett told Pearson her concerns, and she says he took it badly.

``He put his head down on his forearms, with this Spider-Man toy beside him on his desk,'' Jarrett says. ``It felt like a child preparing for nap time. I thought, `This is how my new boss is handling my first real conversation with me.' I think my fate was sealed, because either you were with him or against him.''

Jarrett and Bergerman say they eventually moved to new units after conflicts with Pearson played out in 2009. But they often call each other and start to cry, talking about how the unit to which they dedicated their careers has fallen.

The two want to stress that Special O can be salvaged, and the RCMP can, too.

``It is unfortunate it had to get to this point, but let's try and fix this and give people somewhere they can go to talk to people," Jarrett said. ``I still don't know what the attraction of management to Travis was, and why that took precedence over the complaints."

In late December a board of RCMP adjudicators rejected Gastaldo's claims that she was raped and coerced into an ongoing affair, allegedly due to her fragile psychological state and Pearson's implied threats and extreme persistence.

The board ruled Pearson and Gastaldo were in a consensual affair, and both guilty of disgraceful conduct. In a move that stunned some, they said Gastaldo could be fired for slandering Pearson - while Pearson faces only demotion. Pearson, who was removed from leadership at Special O when Gastaldo launched a criminal complaint against him in August 2009, will learn his fate when his hearing resumes in February. Gastaldo is pursuing her civil claim.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST003-13B

Incident: First Nations Protests – National Day of Action

Date: Information valid as of 14 Jan 2013, 16:00 EST

Description of current incident: As part of the ongoing First Nations (FN) engagement, a number of FN protests are anticipated as part of a "National Day of Action" planned for 16 Jan 2013.

On 16 Jan, several demonstrations are expected in various locations across Canada. Media has reported that the protestors are seeking to cause an "economic slowdown" by organizing blockades at border crossings, railway lines and highways. Marches, demonstrations and other forms of peaceful protest have been scheduled by various organizations under the "Idle No More" banner in order to raise awareness of FN issues.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, media/open source reporting.

Current actions:

The GOC continues to monitor the situation closely and has established contact with key federal departments/agencies and PS Regional Offices in order to maintain cohesive information sharing.

A consolidated events matrix is being maintained by the GOC and will be distributed periodically, as information becomes available.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

Future actions: The GOC will continue to work with federal and provincial partners to coordinate efforts and to assess impacts.

Assessment/Analysis: The national "Day of Action" planned for 16 Jan is expected to cause interruptions to passenger and freight trains, disruptions to traffic and potential delays at border crossings/ports of entry. Based on past events related to the "Idle No More" movement; demonstrations are expected to remain peaceful.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional situation reports: Further situation reports will be issued as more information becomes available.

Additional Products: An events matrix will be attached to a follow-on message.

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations – Journée nationale de protestation

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 13 janvier 2013, à 10 h 30 HNE

Description de l'incident : Dans le cadre de leur engagement en cours, les Premières nations ont organisé de nombreuses manifestations pour la Journée nationale de protestation, le 16 janvier 2013.

Le 16 janvier, diverses manifestations seront tenues dans plusieurs endroits du Canada. Selon les médias, les manifestants veulent causer un « ralentissement économique » en érigeant des barricades à des postes frontaliers et sur des voies ferrées. Des marches, des manifestations et d'autres types d'activités pacifiques de protestation ont également été prévues par des organisations du mouvement Idle No More afin de sensibiliser les gens aux enjeux avec lesquels les Premières nations doivent composer.

Mesures en cours :

Le COG continue de suivre la situation de près, et il a communiqué avec les ministères et organismes clés du gouvernement fédéral et avec les bureaux régionaux de SP afin d'assurer le caractère uniforme de l'échange d'information.

Le COG tiendra à jour une matrice complète des incidents qu'il distribuera au besoin, à mesure que de nouveaux renseignements deviennent disponibles.

La gestion de l'incident relève des administrations et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, selon les besoins.

Mesures à venir : Le COG tiendra, lundi le 14 janvier 2013, une téléconférence des partenaires pour coordonner les efforts et évaluer les répercussions de ces incidents.

Analyse/évaluation : La journée nationale de protestation prévue pour le 16 janvier devrait entraîner des perturbations quant aux déplacements de trains passagers et de marchandises, des perturbations du trafic et des retards potentiels aux postes frontaliers et aux points d'entrée. Par contre, si l'on se fie aux activités précédentes qu'a organisées le mouvement Idle No More, les manifestations devraient rester de nature pacifique.

Les ministères et les organismes qui ont plus de renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Autres rapports de situation : D'autres rapports de situation seront diffusés à mesure que d'autres renseignements deviennent disponibles.

Autres produits : Une matrice des incidents sera jointe à un message subséquent.

Subject: RE: Idle No More blockade planned at the Port of Vancouver today

Good morning,

Idle No More Facebook site has a number of posts for suggested activities.

- On Tuesday, there was a post concerning the Port Metro Vancouver (PMV) which stated that as a result of the march on City Hall that this event was being postponed. See below for the summary.

Danita Nez
Please help me by reposting this information for me - share it widely - thank you!

DUE TO SO MANY OTHER EVENTS HAPPENING IN VANCOUVER ON 1/11/2013 - I AM GOING TO POSTPONE THE EVENT AT THE PORT OF VANCOUVER - I WILL KEEP PEOPLE INFORMED & IT WILL HAPPEN - SORRY FOR ANY INCONVENIENCE!

- The March on City Hall will depart the Native Education College at 12:00 local. This is expected to end at approx. 1700 hrs local. For the full Facebook event summery, see below.

The plan for the 11th, the City Hall event, is:
We will be leaving the Native Education College at Noon; 12 pm sharp. Then we will proceed to march to Vancouver City Hall.

ATTENTION
Please every one that will be marching with us, and meeting at the Native Education College! PLEASE DO NOT ENTER THE SCHOOL! Classes are still in session and we don't want to disrupt any of these classes and teachings. If there are elders marching with us by all means sit inside and keep warm. But every one else, again..... PLEASE PLEASE DO NOT ENTER THE SCHOOL!

* Also, PLEASE!* If you are not going to join us for the march and you just want to meet us at City Hall, I would suggest not being there until 1pm. We don't want you all waiting in the cold.

There will be seats at City hall, but they are reserved for the Elders.

Idle No More is an awakening of the people. It has waken both Indigenous and Non-Indigenous citizens of this country to what the Government is trying to do. It is not only our Treaty Rights and Human Rights being trampled upon, it is the Rights of EVERY citizen that are being trampled upon. If we don't start taking environmental issues more seriously there will be no more clean water; no more fish; no more wildlife; no more natural resources; No Way Any Of Us Can Live. Whether you realize it or not Canada, our issues are yours to.

Whether you have been to all the Idle No More events or you don't understand what the movement is about. Come out and listen to our songs and voices; share your voice; feed your mind.

Solidarity=Solid!
We have to stay solid with one and other; You and I; Mankind and Mother Earth!

Spread the word!
We will stand Idle No More! This rally is for everyone that calls Canada their homeland - stand up for 'the true north strong and free.'

Speakers:
Opening prayer from Musqueam and words from the three host nations
Alexandra Perich: N.E.C chief/co-organizer
Steven Kakinoosit: Idle No More BC co-organizer

Good morning. This event is not posted on the Idle No More website that I can find. However, CTV is reporting it (no other media source that I can find so far). Past blockades have not lasted very long, however, an injunction was needed to end one railroad blockade last week. As this appears to be a similar type of "blockade", you may want to have an injunction team at the ready. VPD and Port Police are police leads. . I will try to confirm the event and further details this morning.

Also, there appears to be a planned Flash Mob event at Robson and Burrard a block from the DOJ 840 Howe Street office at 5:30 pm today.

CTV news this morning:

Idle No More protesters expected to set up blockade at the Port of Vancouver as Harper meets with chiefs

Global News : Friday, January 11, 2013 12:00 AM

While Stephen Harper prepares to meet with a delegation of First Nations chiefs, Idle No More supporters are gearing up for several demonstrations across Vancouver.

Later today, protesters are expected to set up a blockade at the Port of Vancouver. A march from the Native Education Centre to city hall is also planned.

Other big demonstrations have already taken place across Metro Vancouver and B.C.

Last weekend, hundreds of protesters from both sides of the border gathered at the Peace Arch Crossing.

Another demonstration was held in the Okanagan border town of Osoyoos.

The Idle No More movement is protesting the federal government's recent omnibus bill C-45, and is trying to draw attention to other aboriginal problems.

Prime Minister Harper's long-awaited meeting with First Nations leaders is planned for later today, but it's unclear how many of them will show up. Some chiefs have said they will not attend unless Governor General David Johnston is also at the meeting.

Andrew, Jamie,

The following departments participated in a conference call this afternoon, led by Public Safety (NS):

AANDC
RCMP
Health Canada
PHAC
CSIS
Transport Canada
Public Safety – New Brunswick and Newfoundland and Labrador

All departments stated they are monitoring this situation. There was nothing new to report about days of action.

RCMP stated that they are monitoring six events that will be peaceful.

NDP MP Megan Leslie has organized an event, Solidarity for Idle No More on January 11 in Halifax. The RCMP anticipate a crowd of about 400.

If the need arises, a third call may be convened early next week to share situational awareness.

Subject: FYI: Idle No More: Une voie ferrée de nouveau bloquée jusqu'à vendredi en Gaspésie (Le Soleil, 9/1)

Bonjour tout le monde,

FYI, according to this article published this morning in Le Soleil, Listuguj community (Gaspésie, QC) decided to block again (they were blocked in December but reopened from Jan 2 to Jan 7) all trains until Friday. According to a AADNC colleague, alternative solutions are in place both for passengers and merchandises.

I sent the article to Roger Bisaillon (EM regional colleague), which will share it with the GOC.

Une voie ferrée de nouveau bloquée jusqu'à vendredi en Gaspésie

Gilles Gagné, collaboration spéciale
Le Soleil

(Listuguj) Depuis mardi, les autochtones de Listuguj bloquent de nouveau la voie ferrée aux limites de leur communauté et de Pointe-à-la-Croix, en Gaspésie.

Des discussions réunissant des maires, des représentants de la Société du chemin de fer de la Gaspésie et des autochtones ont eu lieu lundi, dans le but de rétablir la circulation des trains de marchandises, mais elles n'ont pas débouché.

La voie ferrée a été bloquée à tout trafic, marchandises et passagers, du 28 décembre au 2 janvier, et les autochtones ont ouvert la porte au passage des trains de voyageurs du 2 au 7 janvier.

«Les discussions n'ont pas très bien évolué. Après, nous nous sommes réunis sous le tipi et le groupe a décidé de bloquer tous les trains jusqu'à vendredi, inclusivement. À partir de vendredi, nous laisserons la circulation ferroviaire passer et nous regarderons ailleurs pour des moyens de pression», a indiqué mardi soir Alex Morrison, porte-parole des autochtones de Listuguj.

We just completed our ops/communications call on the INM protests. The CBSA command centre (with RCMP participation) were busy monitoring events over the weekend, with lots of reporting flowing between border points and the centre. All protests were peaceful and non-disruptive. Ports of entry affected included Peace Arch, Victoria's Inner Harbour, Osoyoos, Kingsgate and Abbotsford.

Additional protests were held at Richmond Centre Mall (drum and speech event) with approximately 15 protestors and Surrey Centre Mall. The RCMP did not have an update on the latter event, which was supposed to have gathered 300 protestors, so it is expected to have been peaceful.

Going forward: A group called "Coast Salish Pride" is encouraging protestors to join them at noon on January 11 (when the AFN is meeting with the PM) at Peace Arch border crossing. One of the rallying points is apparently a rejection of Canadian passports for Aboriginal peoples.

Regards,
Jasmine

Further to the call today & FYSA, we've recently received info from CBSA Woodstock and RCMP Woodstock which indicates that no organized activity related to Idle No More is planned for the border are over the weekend. The local RCMP Detachment has been working closely with the local Woodstock FN, and has learned from a local elder and Clan Mother (who recently travelled to Ottawa to spend time with T Spence), and she has assured RCMP that demonstrations have been put on hold until after the Jan 11 meeting which was announced earlier today.

CBSA Ops and, likely, Comms will be briefing MinO on Saturday at 9:30 and 15:30. Can you let me know what efforts can be undertaken to have some solid monitoring of the issue to support our briefings?
As an aside, I can add that we are reaching out to AANDC to see what they are planning.

Hi Barry:

One more event planned for today in Sudbury, please see below:

Idle No More supporters will slow traffic in the downtown area this afternoon as they march from Tom Davies Square.

Beginning at 4 p.m., participants are planning to leave on foot from the outdoor plaza at Tom Davies Square. They will travel the following route:

- South on Minto Street

- East on Elgin Street

- South on the Nelson Street pedestrian bridge

- West on John Street

- North on Paris Street

- West on Elm Street

- South on Durham Street

- East on Larch Street

Significant delays are expected on the northbound lanes of the Paris Street Bridge of Nations. Rally participants have indicated they are planning to occupy the northbound lanes of the bridge for 15 minutes.

Motorists traveling from the south end of the city to access the downtown/New Sudbury area are encouraged to consider alternate routes.

The march is scheduled to end at approximately 6:00 p.m.

Members of the Greater Sudbury Police Service will be present, working with organizers to ensure the safety of motorists and rally participants.

Idle No More protesters block main rail line between Toronto and Montreal
Canadian Press
December 30 2012, 7:15 EST

The main rail line between Toronto and Montreal has been blocked by protesters.

CN Rail spokesman Jim Feeny says the rail line has been blocked for a couple of hours just east of Belleville, Ont., and a number of passenger and freight trains have been held up.

He says it's believed the protesters are part of the Idle No More movement and rail officials and police are trying to determine their intentions.

The Idle movement has staged other protests today in support of Northern Ontario First Nations Chief Theresa Spence.

She is staging a hunger strike to back her demand for a meeting with Prime Minister Stephen Harper.

Via Rail has issued a statement saying roughly 2,000 passengers on trains to and from Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal are affected.

Subject: Calls related to Idle no more

Allo Andrew,

I just want to let you know that should any of our divisions received any calls in relation to Idle no more, they will be using standard lines on Rights to protest. Here are the lines for your info:

Generic:

- The RCMP respects and protects the right to peaceful demonstrations as guaranteed under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

- Security operations balance individual rights and freedoms with the need to maintain public safety, peace and good order.

Peaceful Protest:

- Everyone has a right to peaceful freedom of expression. The general public, local residents and businesses, also have the right to a safe environment.

- Police partners encourage peaceful protest and maintain open dialogue and constant contact with demonstration organizers before and during an event.

- In circumstances where people gather peacefully to protest, a simple police presence can be enough to ensure order and protect the fundamental freedoms of peaceful assembly and of expression.

- The RCMP will respond to unlawful acts in keeping with our mandate to protect the fundamental freedom of peaceful assembly and freedom of expression.

Jurisdiction:

- In the Province of Ontario or Quebec, the Ontario Provincial Police or Sûreté du Québec or First Nations Police is the police of jurisdiction in this matter and the lead on all operational decisions.
  - Within municipalities, the local police force is the lead on all operational decisions.

- If called upon, the RCMP is always ready to provide support and assistance to its law enforcement colleagues in other jurisdictions.

- Policing is a provincial authority and responsibility, however, under the Provincial Policing Service Agreement (PPSA)/ Territorial Policing Services Agreement (TPSA), the RCMP provides contract policing services to three territories and all provinces with the exceptions of Ontario (OPP) and Quebec (Sûreté du Québec).

Violence or Threats:

- Violence will not be tolerated. Police will take steps to ensure that those who unlawfully interfere with or threaten the safety of any person or property may be held accountable in accordance with the laws of Canada.

- The RCMP will take a measured approach to mitigate criminal threats that pose a threat to the safety of individuals or property.

- The RCMP uses a carefully measured response to civil disobedience and unlawful acts.

Enforcement:

- The use of force is always a last resort. However, when a civil disturbance or other major public safety threat occurs, the municipal or provincial police force affected may seek assistance from other local police forces, if needed. If this is insufficient to contain the threat, RCMP assistance may be requested.

Security Planning and Measures

- The RCMP works within the existing legal framework that balances public safety with individual rights.

- It would be inappropriate for us to speculate on different protest scenarios. When there are planned or spontaneous demonstrations, the appropriate measures are in place to deal with any situation to protect the safety of everyone.

- The RCMP has extensive experience in planning security measures for these types of events. Our personnel are appropriately trained to apply these measures. We are in a constant state of preparedness and are able to deal quickly with whatever situation arises.

We've been in touch w/ the GOC who, for at least the Ottawa protest activity, find this to be a very minor protest. Martin is in the loop in case things escalate, but there's been very little to report so far.

I think we can assume today's weather will likely severely affect the Ottawa protest.

Dear activists -

While we recognize how busy the past year has been and how many personal issues have befallen our members the fight for basic Human Rights and protests against this governments attacks must continue.

I would ask you to please take an hour of your time TOMORROW, Friday DEC 21st, to attend a Press Conference organized by a grass roots First Nations movement entitled Idle No More.

This is in direct opposition to the Conservatives Omnibus bill. Please take a few minutes out of your day and come out to show your opposition to this far reaching bill.

HALIFAX CITIZENS DEMAND MORE
Protesters Come together to denounce changes to Aboriginal Rights that are being stampeded by Omnibus budget bill

HALIFAX- Members of the Mi'kmaq Nation, Halifax residents, and student activists are outraged at the latest Conservative budget bill and its impacts on First Nations People.

"These changes are unconstitutional and take away our inherent treaty rights", said Mi'kmaq organizer Shelley Young, to a large group of concerned citizens gathered at Parade Square for the Halifax Rally in Solidarity movement, Idle No More. "We won't stand by and let this happen. It is time to come together in peaceful coalition to speak out against Bill C-45."

Shelley along with Molly Peters, and Marina Young, mobilized the Halifax Chapter for the Idle No More movement when social media garnered attention to the growing fear that many Aboriginal communities and lands may be in danger yet again. More specifically, a call to Canada is needed. "This bill is a cancer to the Canadian Charter of Constitutional Rights. If we are the target now, who's next?" said Marina. Direct impact on Mi'kmaq communities in the Atlantic region include imposition of water boil orders, prohibited hunting and fishing, community land rights and hindered traditional ideals which would remove importance of culture from the generations to come.

The Idle No More solidarity march and rally commenced Friday last week in Halifax, following the route taken by Treaty Day supporters, as the youth of the Atlantic region led a peaceful protest to vocalize their refusal of the Conservative government's disregard for Aboriginal rights. Cause for environmental concern is crucial when considering the impact that specific points in the bill propose, namely the protection of Canadian lakes and water ways. Further, amendments to the Fisheries Act, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, and the Canada Labour Code increase concern for environmental issues and human rights issues as well.

"I'm here in support of my Mi'kmaq neighbors," said Erin Wunker, professor of English and Canadian Studies at Dalhousie University. "Bill C-45 is an infringement on Aboriginal treaty rights, it is damaging to the environment and it demonstrates our current government's clear disrespect for Aboriginal rights and Canada's future."

The women and youth organizers emphasize the peaceful and collaborative nature of Idle No More, but are unwavering in their critique of Mr.
Harper and his Government. "This is a question of respecting the future" and Bill C-45 does not respect the future of any Canadian."

IDLE No More Halifax will be holding a Press Conference on Friday, December 21 at the World Trade Convention Center (1800 Argyle Street, Halifax) from 9-11am. All persons concerned with the damages and impacts this bill will have on Canada's lakes and water ways, Canada's Labour Code and Aboriginal treaty rights is urged to attend.

Subject: Canada's Criminal Code and the Idle No More Movement

Dear Vic, Peter. [redacted] I am convinced that armed violence not seen before in the history of Canada is definitely coming out of this activist Idle No More Movement. It is going to be much, much worse than Ipperwash or Caledonia ever was. You and Peter need to prepare Canada's Armed Forces to handle this one. Manitoba Grand Chief Derek Nepinak told the press today; "The idle No More movement has the numbers that can bring the Canadian economy to its knees. It can stop Prime Minister Harper's resource development plan and his billion-dollar plan to develop resources in ancestral territories. We have the warriors that are standing up now that are willing to go that far."

Vic the Idle No More movement has been breaking numerous federal, provincial and municipal laws with impunity for weeks now by shutting down roads, railways, streets etc with certain police chiefs in Ontario refusing to fully enforce injunction orders against the Idle No More Movement. This total recklessness in not enforcing Canadian law has led these activist groups to now believe the can get away with one heck of a lot more now Vic! And they are really going to push it starting tomorrow at the AFN meeting with the Prime Minister, which is in total disarray. The movement is dictating to the Prime Minister and the Governor General, to sit down with them Friday for hours and hours to discuss and commit themselves to everything they want - is absolutely beyond reason! The Government of

Canada and all Canadians are being threatened and dictated to by people who have received multi millions of taxpayer money who get angry when questions are asked about where the money goes. This is unreasonable, but they want more money and no discussion on financial accountability.

The Prime Minister and Aboriginal Affairs Minister John Duncan have made it known that meetings are scheduled that are going to address all issues. But the Idle No More Movement have made it known they will have none of it. They want trouble and that is where you come in Vic. The police have bent over backwards to accommodate this activist group, the CBC and other media have lathered them with lots of air time to express themselves way beyond reason in my opinion. But none of this is good enough!

The rule of law must prevail Vic. No more accommodation with this group. They are unreasonable and potentially very dangerous to Canada as a nation. This is being underestimated! All police chiefs in Canada and especially those in Ontario, should be told that they are to uphold the Criminal Code they are sworn to uphold! Ontario Superior Court Judge David Brown has made it known that he is very upset that his orders are not being acted upon in some jurisdictions, specifically in Sarnia and Windsor. This is no time for police forces to give the green light for this anarchist movement to go to the next level of intimidation, which they say they are going to do now. Friday will be that next level for them!

One last thing Vic. On January 3, 2013 Christie Blatchford of the National Post wrote a very chilling account of a very detailed and well written book by Lieutenant-Colonel Doug Bland of the Canadian Armed Forces (retired). Bland was until 2011 the Chair of Defence Management Studies at Queen's in Kingston.

His 2009 book, "Uprising" was written originally as an academic book but was later published as fiction. Christie reports that "It is the story of armed revolution, or insurrection, by aboriginal young people trained and led by a disciplined core of native veterans of the Canadian army, all of them brought together by a charismatic aboriginal leader named Molly Grace. Christie further notes that Lt.-Col. Bland's "three decades in the Canadian Forces and his intimate knowledge of how the army establishment works and how the political one often doesn't — render this scenario plausible." Peter, you need to seriously consider what Doug Bland wrote in his book!

A new chapter is going to be written in Aboriginal-Canadian Government relations Vic, Peter. And I am sure it is going to be a violent one!

I always appreciate everything you do. You have my full support always. What is coming tomorrow and thereafter is really going to test you both tremendously.

Dear [redacted]

Thank you for your correspondence of January 10, 2013, regarding First Nations blockades. I apologize for the delay in responding.

Your concerns are of interest to me, given my overall responsibility for federal policing in Canada. However, law enforcement and the administration of justice are provincial responsibilities.

While we respect the right of all Canadians to peaceful protest, we expect local law enforcement to ensure that the law is respected.

It should be noted that law enforcement during these blockades is the responsibility of the police of local jurisdiction, which is not necessarily the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Thank you again for taking the time to write.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Sir
[redacted]
The question is...does the Canadian Government not have laws in place that would restrict the blockade of public highways and railway lines?
Would a group of non-native citizens be allowed to block traffic in this manner?
Would we be allowed to blockade all roads leading to an Indian reserve?
I would appreciate an honest answer
Thankyou
Regards,

BI-WEEKLY CONFERENCE CALL
APD Extended Management Committee
January 24, 2013, 1:00-2:15 p.m.

PARTICIPANTS:

Mary Donaghy, chair	Diane Samuel	Harley Crowshoe
Claude Turgeon	Shammi Sandhu	Michele Lanouette
Kathy Magladry	Jim Greyeyes	Gerry Doucette
Rebecca Thompson	Diane Charbonneau	Larry Philippe
		Line Gauthier

REGRETS:
Eric Robitaille, Sheila Mungall, Daniel Leduc, Maryse Picard, Ray Levesque

1. Queen Elizabeth II Diamond Jubilee Medal:

- Congratulations to Harley Crowshoe, who was the recipient of the Queen Elizabeth II Diamond Jubilee Medal on January 18th. Harley was nominated by the Chiefs of Police Association for his commitment to a career in Policing and for his passionate work with Aboriginal Policing in Alberta.
- Mary observed that Harley is one the several APD recipients of this honour, reflecting our commitment to community building. Floralove Katz received this award earlier and a third recipient is yet to be announced... more to follow.

2. DG Debrief:

- The National Summit on the Economics of Policing was held on January 16-17. Next week, Rebecca will be sharing a summary; in the interim, she will forward some related links. As can be expected, there were many informal conversations concerning the FNPP; however we still expect no concrete news until the Federal Budget. RMs reiterated that the jurisdictions are continuing to raise concerns related to the impact of uncertainty.
- Mary mentioned that there is currently lots of Planning Cycle activity at the Branch level.
- We're moving forward on several Policy initiatives.
- There is lots of staffing news on the Policy side:
    - Eric Robitaille's secondment ends January 31, Rebecca will be A/Director until mid-February. A 4-month agreement for a replacement will be announced shortly. Annie LeBlanc's secondment with Social Policy Branch has been extended.
    - We are hoping to fill two vacancies at the EC-6 and EC-4 levels in the near future.
- Effective this January 28, John Ossowski will become our new Associate DM while Graham Flack is leaving PS to become Deputy Secretary to the Cabinet, Plans and

Consultations and Intergovernmental Affairs at PCO. John Ossowski was Assistant Secretary of the International Affairs, Security and Justice Sector at the Treasury Board of Canada Secretariat.

3. Upcoming 2013-2014 Events/Conferences:

- Michele mentioned the importance for budget forecasting that Regions have a long-range perspective of upcoming events and conferences.
- Mary asked Rebecca to develop a list of events and conferences for periodic updating so we could ensure to have the right APD and Regional presence.
- One upcoming conference is the Atlantic National Crime Prevention Conference but the dates are yet to be confirmed. Please send any other details on upcoming Events and Conferences to Rebecca or Fiona Sutherland.

4. Roundtable:

- Claude asked RMs to help with budget-related messaging consistency– i.e. the budget is divided in 1) program delivery related, and 2) NON program delivery related (ex. EM&RO related costs for meetings would not come out of FNPP budget).
- A discussion ensued and Mary confirmed that budget-related discussions were continuing at the DG level with EM&RO related to 1) operating dollars, and 2) supporting program delivery dollars (incl. travel).
- Rebecca gave a quick update on FPT DMs meetings; the progress on the Self-Government Administrative guidelines; and the progress on the International Study on Indigenous Policing contract.
- Diane Charbonneau reported that, while we are waiting for the Federal Budget, we are being proactive and advancing as much as possible with the agreements using assumptions so, after the budget announcement, final amendments can be done faster.
- Claude met with CCJD to discuss a longitudinal crime prevention project they are hoping to fund in communities where APD has a presence. Claude will forward an e-mail from Chantal Marion suggesting sites.
- Gerry mentioned the Social Innovation Workshop which will be held at the Old City Hall, 111 Sussex Drive on March 6-7.
- Gerry is organizing the Next Speaker Series event on February 5 with Bruno Steinke who is the Director at AANDC responsible for leading the Government of Canada's work on consultation and accommodation and developing partnerships with province, territories and Aboriginal communities. This unit was created in response to the Supreme Court Decision regarding the obligation for consultation and accommodation for public and private sectors. Bruno's unit also offers training in this area.
- Harley relayed that communities keep expressing their concerns with timing of amendments. Mary confirmed that messages keep being relayed up the Department and everyone is very aware and paying attention to current events.
- It is evident that following the various side-bar discussions at the Economics of Policy Summit, the notion of a "transitional year" has become known. Worst case scenario, though it would be hard to believe that the budget announcement would have no money, it would be logical that at the very least there would be some transition. However, it is clear that there will be no details until the Budget is tabled.

- Harley attended a 4-hour open forum organized by the Calgary Police Service to deal with the Idle No More Rallies in a peaceful way. It was a very successful opportunity for dialogue, clarifying issues, continued education/awareness which sent a strong message of a community looking after the Aboriginal youth in the city.
- Michele mentioned that the DM will be coming for a 3-day visit in BC. She proposed it would be useful to have a functional model that APD could feed into incl. Federal Council, FPT Partner. Mary reminded RMs to liaise with the FPT team in APD in such situations. Rebecca will write proposed guidelines and standard language for consistency in preparing MIN/DM/AsDM material.
- Diane asked about the THC approval status in order to book flights as soon as possible for the March meeting. Mary is not anticipating a problem with the THC approval, expected back on February 1st.

1. Update from Mary:

- The DM announced changes effective June 3. Gina Wilson will return to AANDC as Senior ADM, Treaties and Aboriginal Government. Shawn Tupper will temporarily take on the role of A/ADM of EM&RO in addition to his current responsibilities. DGs of both CSPB and EM&RO will meet as a group shortly to discuss how best to assist with streamlining workload. It was announced that Stéphanie Durand will be joining EM&RO.
- Mary said the CSPB and RD Program Management meeting, held on May 14 and 15, was an enormously productive and useful opportunity to brainstorm as a group. The agenda focused on three main themes:
  1) Looking back to 2012-2013: achievements and outstanding issues that still need to be addressed. NCPC agreed to produce and share the "parking lot" documents. It was agreed that more meetings between RDs and the two large programs would have been beneficial. There was a common commitment to organize more of these types of meetings in order to address issues on the parking lot.
  2) The program: History and overview of APD programs and processes, renewal exercise, complexities and grey zones, how we define and measure risk.
  3) The program management framework: We walked through the foundation documents – Claude will send them out as a package as a reminder. We demonstrated that we have a solid approach, a sophisticated management control framework with rigor and structure. We emphasized the need to shift perspective from a fed/prov paradigm to F/P/Aboriginal tripartite relationship in order to contribute to our program delivery. Participants were asked to see how they see themselves contributing.
- Claude will follow up to see if RDs can be persuaded to participate and submit agenda items on existing RM calls.
- Mary proposed that the RDs visit communities with RMs to strengthen the tripartite nature of the relationship that we are collectively building.
- Concern was expressed over the THC reductions while we actually need to be more active.

2. Roundtable:

- Nancy Tremblay told us to stay tuned for a particularly interesting InfoBulletin edition coming up.
- Ray Levesque is currently working with Policy on Ts&Cs, RCMP funding levels and footprint, and a Human Rights Complaint.
- Sheila Mungall: Communications is working on a ministerial quote for Matrimonial Real Property. Royal Assent won't happen before the summer break. The Media Lines are ready for the FNPP Multi-Year Agreement – they're useful when communicating with stakeholders but reminder that calls from reporters are to be directed to Communications.
- Rebecca Thompson provided an overview of discussions on the FNPP at the FPT ADMs' Policing and Public Steering Committee (PPSSC) meeting on May 7th. Committee members expressed keen interest in holding more frequent discussions on the FNPP, and possibly creating an officials-level Working Group to support these discussions. The Quebec representative raised the possibility of an informal DMs' dinner discussion on the FNPP, to be held in the context of the June 2013 FPT Deputy Ministers' meeting in Quebec City. Committee members expressed concern that the policy foundations for the renewal of the FNPP are unclear; that funding levels are inadequate; and that there is no room to address key issues such as infrastructure needs. Some provincial representatives (Quebec, Manitoba) expressed their strong opinion that the federal government is responsible for policing on reserve. PS officials were encouraged by the level of P/T interest in engagement, which should lead to further positive discussions and more regional conversations.
- Daniel Tremblay: currently reviewing all feedback on FNPP templates and planning to get back to everyone on that next week. RMs are encouraged to have as many recipients as possible on Direct Deposit.
- Michelle Budak: currently developing the PPA workplan and will share when complete.
- Claude Turgeon: 1) stressed the importance of Direct Deposit. Pressure was put on the Comptroller to ensure this wouldn't fall off the plate and we expected bigger intake so we need info more promptly. 2) Thanked everyone for their valuable comments on the templates. 3) Continuing to schedule meetings with provinces to obtain template agreements – works out best when lawyers have looked at templates in advance of meetings. Once the meetings with the provinces have been held, the templates will be sent to the FN leaders for their input.
- Michele Lanouette 1) asked for clarification as to when the template drafts will be in "ready to share" status. We can't take the risk of taking too long before starting conversations with FNs. 2) Continuing to firm up dates for template discussions with Province.
- Gerry Doucette: gave an overview of the work Policy has been involved in: 1) contributed to the Matrimonial Real Property TB submission, led by AANDC, but it's now been parked until the Fall. There is $250K going towards training support. 2) The Shareholder Panel agenda will be finalized soon. 3) Policy is connecting with LPB on identifying opportunities to collaborate. 4) working on an FNPP deck for Mary's presentation at FN Chiefs of Police Association on May 23.

- Maryse Picard: The Wendake memo to Minister will be ready today.
- Shammi Sandhu: There is only one outstanding agreement: Akwasasne. Currently going through files for next four years and having discussions on how to achieve greater efficiency.
- Jim Greyeyes: provided an update on the status of SK signatures on agreements.
- Harley Crowshoe: All agreements are in.
- Mary Donaghy informed us that since November, the OAG have been auditing what was first announced as Safety & Policing on Reserves, but they now seem to be focusing on 1) an Emergency Management Study, and 2) Policing in FN Communities. The OAG have conducted preliminary meetings at the ADM and DG levels in addition to meetings with provinces, regional managers and even communities in Manitoba. APD will continue to receive many requests and Leslie Allain is the designated coordinator for all the OAG requests within APD. In order to have one key control center, please keep Leslie apprised of any requests and meeting invitations you receive from the OAG.
- Mary asked for a quick tour around Regions for mood of FNs following Idle No More. Seems to be quiet and expecting lots of work is going on behind the scenes. Annual General Meeting of the First Nations Assembly is coming up.

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

EVIDENCE

OTTAWA, Wednesday, May 29, 2013

The Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples met this day at 6:45 p.m. to examine and report on the federal government's constitutional, treaty, political and legal responsibilities to First Nations, Inuit and Metis peoples, and on other matters generally relating to the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada.

Senator Lillian Eva Dyck (Deputy Chair) in the chair.

The Deputy Chair: Good evening. I would like to welcome all honourable senators and members of the public who are watching this meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples on CPAC or on the web. My name is Lillian Dyck. I am from Saskatchewan and I am the deputy chair of the committee. This evening our chair had another engagement, so I will be chairing the meeting.

The mandate of this committee is to examine legislation and matters relating to the Aboriginal peoples of Canada generally. In considering what studies the committee might like to undertake, we from time to time invite individuals, organizations and departments to give us an overview of issues of concern within their mandate.

Recently we have heard from witnesses on the subject of Aboriginal peoples within the criminal justice system. Today we will carry on with this subject by hearing from representatives of the Assembly of First Nations.

However, before hearing from our witnesses, I would like to take this opportunity to ask the members of the committee who are present this evening to introduce themselves. I will start on my left.

Senator Sibbeston: I am Nick Sibbeston, from the Northwest Territories.

Senator Watt: Charlie Watt, from Nunavut.

Senator Raine: Nancy Greene Raine, from B.C.

Senator Patterson: Dennis Patterson, Nunavut.

Senator Demers: Jacques Demers, Quebec.

Senator Tannas: Scott Tannas, Alberta.

Senator Seth: Asha Seth, Ontario.

Senator Beyak: Lynn Beyak, Ontario.

The Deputy Chair: Members, please help me by welcoming our Assembly of First Nations witnesses. First, we have Shawn Atleo, the National Chief. Welcome, Chief Atleo. You are well known across the country.

Accompanying him are Cameron Alexis, the Regional Chief of Alberta; and Roger Augustine, Regional Chief, New Brunswick & Prince Edward Island.

We understand, Chief Atleo, that you have another engagement and limited time of about 45 minutes but that the regional chiefs can remain to answer any questions that might still be outstanding. Could you please proceed with your presentation.

Shawn (A-in-chut) Atleo, National Chief, Assembly of First Nations: Thank you so much, madam chair, Senator Dyck and to your colleagues. Senators, thank you for the opportunity to speak with you today. As mentioned, I am very honoured to be here with my colleagues, Regional Chief Roger Augustine, to my left, with whom I have worked for a good long time now; and our colleague Regional Chief Cameron Alexis, as you mentioned, chair, representing Alberta, but also he brings with him a lot of experience in policing, being a former RCMP member. We are very appreciative that he has accepted national responsibilities on the portfolio of justice.

I know there would be awareness on a discussion like this amongst senators that our people, First Nations, continue to face a state of institutionalization. Far too many families have gone from Indian residential schools to medical facilities or foster homes, as well as to federal and provincial jails. This is a context that, as I say at the outset, I am sure there is a lot of awareness about, that our people continue to be overrepresented in every area of the criminal justice system, as victims and offenders, in both the youth and the adult systems.

We know that indigenous women and girls are more than five times more likely to die as the result of a violent act than amongst Canadians generally. We know that currently over 21 per cent of the prison population is indigenous. When we look at federal women's prisons, the number rises to 32 per cent. When we go further to look at maximum security, the overrepresentation of First Nations women is truly staggering. These are symptoms and indicators of something that is deeply broken. As legislators and as leaders, it is truly our collective responsibility to take action to fix it.

This is not a new or emergent issue. All of us around this table have thought about this and spoken about it before.

There have been numerous inquiries and reports commissioned that have made concrete recommendations. Many have concluded that not only are the principles and procedures of the Canadian criminal justice system incompatible with indigenous customs and laws, but clear steps need to be taken to work towards reconciliation, to address the intergenerational effects of forced institutionalization and social and cultural harm.

It has been recommended that indigenous communities be empowered to establish their own justice systems, and this has been supported by the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

Comment [n1]: http://social.un.org/index/IndigenousPeoples/DeclarationontheRightsofIndigenousPeoples.aspx

Furthermore, the Law Reform Commission of Canada also supports that the justice system should not be uniform and that indigenous justice systems must shape and mould to fit the needs of indigenous people, be community based and controlled by indigenous governments.

Comment [n2]: http://publications.gc.ca/site/eng/search/browseSerialPublications.html?st=3&oi=154

Maybe the question, madam chair, that must be asked and examined for your study is not what is the issue or what should we do to address these issues but what has prevented us from getting the job done.

Last year, changes brought forward in Bill C-10 mandate prescribed minimum penalties for certain offences, thereby limiting the discretion of judges. In Gladue, the Supreme Court of Canada instructed sentencing judges to consider other systemic issues faced by Aboriginal offenders, including social and economic conditions and the legacy of dispossession and colonization faced by Aboriginal peoples.

In Gladue, the Supreme Court also established that Aboriginal offenders should, in certain cases, be treated differently. In section 718.2(e) of the Criminal Code, it directs sentencing judges to undertake the process of sentencing Aboriginal offenders differently, in order to endeavour to achieve a truly fit and proper sentence in the particular case. The changes made through this bill will actively prevent the use of alternative resolution or consideration of the background of Aboriginal offenders.

This is not a restorative agenda — this is not an agenda that seeks to prevent future harm or address the conditions that have brought people to a critical or criminal incident. This is an agenda that seeks to both police and punish behaviour.

First Nations communities have the remarkable distinction of being both over- and under-policed. Disproportionate attention is given to our people by police services, often resulting in more frequent stopping, holding without charge and harsher, sometimes physical treatment in police custody. We have recently had a report from the international Human Rights Watch on RCMP misconduct, failure to investigate and outright abuse in British Columbia. This is now subject to an investigation by the Public Complaints Commission. This is but one example of the overall climate of mistrust and misunderstanding between our peoples and the police.

Comment [n3]: http://www.justice.gov.sk.ca/publiccomplaintscommission

Ironically, at the same time, First Nations police services have developed into effective, professional and culturally appropriate, community-based approaches. However, these services face critical challenges. They are underfunded, based on a formula that does not reflect their operating costs or real needs based on calls for services and culturally appropriate responses. While First Nations police services are the first responder, know the communities and people they serve and have demonstrated clear results in reducing crime, they are considered only enhancements or augmentations to other police services.

Again, we raise the question: How does this make any sense from a financial perspective, from a practical perspective and from a results-based perspective? These are critical, essential services and should be treated like any other police service in the country.

I know there is deep experience at the Senate, including, madam chair, the chair who is absent this evening, about policing all around the country. Very rarely are police told that they will not get the money they need to do their jobs. Very rarely are they subject to cuts or budget restraints. For First Nations, this is not the case.

First Nations communities have the solutions. Across the country, we see our own peoples taking responsibility and control, in some cases through small justice circles that support victims, or those coming out of jail in their healing. In others, we see full articulation of traditional systems, of our own ways of dealing with those who cause harm and of supporting each other.

Ultimately it is our communities and nations that will rebuild our own justice systems and institutions — that respond to our values, that support our children and families and truly work to reconcile the paths of our citizens, whatever may have led them to where they are today.

However, again, where significant efforts have been made towards establishing systems to administer justice on their own terms — such as the Teslin Tlingit court system, which was negotiated as part of their self-government agreement — they face constant barriers to achieving their vision and continue to have critical federal decisions delayed. We also see this in a federal piecemeal and programmatic response to First Nations issues and myriad efforts in various departments on crime prevention, violence prevention and restorative justice. These are all worthwhile but do not provide the comprehensive vision or support truly needed for First Nations.

Comment [n4]: http://www.tto-tealin.com/

Our communities want to restore their own systems — to enjoy security, to support their children to thrive, learn and grow, to be safe in their homes and to be safe wherever they may go.

One of our most pressing and urgent priorities is to seek justice for indigenous women and girls who have gone missing or have been killed. I know this is a matter, senators, that you are all familiar with. I commend Senator Lovelace Nicholas for calling for a Senate inquiry into missing and murdered Aboriginal women. As well, we acknowledge the House of Commons committee that has been struck to examine this issue — but I think this is another area where we can deservedly ask: Why have we not addressed this? After all the studies, the work and the statements, why do our women continue to be targeted?

We welcome a study by the Senate on justice matters related to indigenous peoples in Canada.

I would recommend that the Senate critically examine why, after countless recommendations and studies, governments have not taken the steps necessary to truly address the issues our peoples face in the justice system. Such a study could focus on the harm of institutionalization to our peoples and the real social and financial impacts of the current legislative and policy agenda.

What are the costs to society or to a family of caring for children whose mother has been murdered?

What are the costs of locking away a generation of young men for gang activity rather than investing in their learning and supporting their development?

These are not abstract or hypothetical questions. For too many First Nations citizens, these are everyday challenges they face. Maybe honestly examining these questions and outlining the costs to society, to governments and to our families and communities would provide what is needed for sustained commitment to action.

I believe we know what the problem is. I believe we know what the solutions are, but what we need is the determination, the will, and the leadership to get there. Unifying our approach through dialogue and understanding is the first step; fully supporting our governments and our nations to implement their own solutions will clear the barriers to achieving justice.

I look forward to our conversation tonight. Thank you again, madam chair and senators, for your efforts and your willingness to further study this issue. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, national chief. We will now open up for questions.

Senator Demers: Thank you very much, chief. You have been here before. It is always clear, and I really like that.

You have a very young population. We were at a meeting the other day, and they were talking about 25 years. What is happening right now, from the four years I have been on this committee, to the progression of violence, especially concerning women? The fact that you have such a young population, what do you need to get to these young kids? Is it structure? The worst age is between 18 and 25. I see more women and young men getting involved.

As a former police officer, how do you communicate and work with these young kids so they become better citizens? Where is the help? How do you get this help?

Mr. Atleo: I know you are pointing to my colleagues.

Senator Demers: As a former policeman, maybe he can answer, but I would like to hear your answer.

Mr. Atleo: I think we need to be very clear about the links when I make a comment about investing in our young people.

Education for our leaders has been a top priority not just in the last year and not just in the last six months. The Assembly of First Nations has been focused on Indian control of Indian education since the early 1970s and it was a priority long before that.

Making the point in a moment like this when it comes to cost, it is more cost effective to open the door to a school; you then close door to a jail cell. Right now we have higher incarceration rates amongst our young people in some cases than we do graduation rates. It has been acknowledged, and I believe well regarded and understood, that First Nations young learners are underfunded compared to learners in mainstream Canadian society.

This is a system that we have collectively inherited. Therefore it is about investing in those young people. It is recognizing that that is a choice that we as a society are facing right now. We need 60 schools right now. To open the door to those schools means closing a door to a jail cell. That is not something that we have seen take place.

We now have national attention on the issue of education. That work needs to rapidly move to investing in young people. It very much links to what we have been raising nationally, both last year and most recently in January of this year. We need to see the treaties implemented. The issue of land negotiation needs to move forward. We need to reform outdated policies and bring them up to date with advances in common law. We need to achieve economic prosperity for our people so there are opportunities for work and employment that match education success, while at the same time recognizing there are a myriad of other challenges including the need for housing and safe drinking water. Sometimes it feels like this is a daunting task. It is incredibly complex. In the area of justice, we do have many First Nations who have established their own justice systems. Those need to be supported.

I should add, as a final note, the point around Teslin Tlingit. They negotiated a settlement agreement with Canada and they continue to make trips here to sit with me and to lobby on Parliament Hill to say the spirit and intent of that agreement, which they negotiated with an army of lawyers over one or two decades, are not being supported.

Within those agreements includes their vision for justice. There is something we need to recognize. I am making a recommendation at the outset. There is a lot of work that has gone on in this area. In this regard, the Senate needs to examine why we have not implemented nor done what we know needs to be done. Maybe there is a need to take a closer look at the powerful economic imperative, which is an aging, retiring mainstream Canadian work force, matched with the fastest growing segment of the Canadian population of indigenous people under 25, and tremendous potential to match that growing cadre of young people with skills and training with the labour market. Make no mistake, if we do not invest then those patterns where incarceration rates outpace graduation rates does not serve First Nations nor does it serve this country.

Senator Demers: Great answer; thank you very much, Chief Atleo.

Senator Sibbeston: I agree with Chief Atleo that we need the government to do something. How can we get the government and the authorities, as it were, to do something real about Aboriginal people in their jail system? I know that from my own experience in government that the area of justice and criminal system, the jail system, is probably the hardest thing to change.

Aspects of education, housing and health can be changed, but when it comes to the justice system, you have very strong, well-entrenched people. The police are very strong. The prosecutors are very strong. The judges are set in their ways. The jail authorities love for people to come to jail. It gives them cause to live and justifies their existence. The system is a very difficult one to change.

The other aspect is that Aboriginal people, particularly those who get into trouble, are not the focus. It seems, like in any community, there are so many issues that need to be dealt with. I have been a lawyer and I spent a few years defending people. The reason I eventually moved away from that is I do not want to spend my life dealing with people who get into trouble. I want to spend my life doing positive things for society, as it were.

This is a very difficult situation to deal with, and so, obviously, we need to somehow or another impress government and impress individuals that they need to do something. The answer is simple. There is a solution. It is a community solution where you set up community justice. I have worked in that field for a couple of years too and it is just like magic. You get people sitting around dealing with the problem and the solution is healing. It is like magic when you get the offender in amongst a group of people, with elders talking to the person.

The emphasis must be on healing and changing their ways. It is a challenging thing but there are solutions. You need people in government to have the idea that we could change things and do something about it.

I ask Chief Atleo, in his dealings with the government in the last few years, has he ever raised the issue with Prime Minister Harper and the senior government people and has he received any indication there is a possibility that something can be done about this?

Mr. Atleo: I have a couple thoughts. The efforts, both at the Crown gathering last January and the meeting with the Prime Minister, which was my last conversation with the Prime Minister this last January, have to do with the recognition, the need to recognize that First Nations have the right to jurisdiction over the issue of justice. It is also articulated in the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. It is given expression in different ways. One example is the Teslin Tlingit, who negotiated an agreement that includes the right to, as they would describe it, draw down on the authority in the area of justice in order to carry out Teslin Tlingit vision for justice just Senator Sibbeston articulates. Yet, we found the reason we are pressing for, at the highest political level, attention to be paid to support First Nations to implement their treaty right and their vision for a jurisdiction in justice is that very reason.

Comment [g5]: http://www.ttc-teslin.com/

Even with a modern-day agreement, what we are finding is that there is lacking the support to implement even a modern-day agreement that, as I said, has been negotiated with legions of lawyers and I's dotted and T's crossed, we still struggle. That is not just one agreement. There is a land claims coalition that was forged by those who hold modern-day agreements because there is the lack of support particularly at the federal government level for the implementation of agreements.

That sentiment is expressed in all treaties, whether they were forged recently or whether the treaty was forged, for example, 1 to 11, or the Robinson-Huron treaties or the Mi'kmaw treaties that are 400 years old. That sentiment exists across the board.

Comment [g6]: http://www.aadnc-aandc.gc.ca/eng/1100100028970/1100100028972

First Nations feel strongly about the right to jurisdiction in an area like justice. Groups like the Teslin Tlingit have gone about negotiating how that would interact with the rest of society. They found there are barriers to implementing the agreed to concepts within the agreement. That is the first piece.

The second piece has to do with this notion of the challenges that our young people face and it picks up on the point of Senator Demers. I want to quote a former court judge and a man who spent five years serving as Lieutenant Governor for British Columbia: That is Stó:lō chief, Steven Point. At a forum recently he referred to this issue of our people, the conditions that we face and the way it feels like we have been treated. I hope he will not get upset with me for repeating his words, but he did say this in public. As my elder, I want to say that this is what I received from him.

Comment [g7]: http://www.stolonation.bc.ca/

Comment [g8]: http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/british-columbia/story/2012/11/01/bc-steven-point.html

He said the way we are often spoken to is like breaking the leg of a man one day and then the next day blaming him for limping. He said that is how our people so often feel we are spoken to or treated, with the issues and challenges of generations of institutionalization, the 1960's scoop and residential schools. The list just seems to go on and the patterns seem to continue to perpetuate themselves. The bills I have been referring to and the policies that have been unfurled are not looking to bring harmony back or to break the cycle of institutionalization; rather they are seemingly perpetuating them.

I know this is not what any of us would want to see happen. We want to see our young people succeed. We are here to say that we have answers that have been negotiated between First Nations governments and the federal Crown that would stand to serve as examples of what a real vision could emerge to look like. It is not so much that we need to study those elements; those elements are already there and they have already been studied. I think about the recent interaction I had with the office of the provincial health officer and in terms of the special report done in British Columbia recently by Dr. Perry Kendall. It is one more report that adds further credence to the need to ensure that First Nations supports, and a focus on First Nations solutions in, the area of justice are required.

Senator Demers and Madam Chair, I was thinking particularly about the young people. Maybe Chief Alexis can be permitted to respond to the plight of young people, because he brings 20 years of experience on the force as an RCMP member. That is why we asked him to take a lead on justice. I leave that with you, Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Would you care to respond now, Chief Alexis?

Mr. Alexis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and members of the Senate. I thank you for giving me this opportunity to come before you to speak on these issues of mutual concern. I thank the national chief, and my colleague, Mr. Augustine, for being here as well.

This is the second time I have spoken before the Senate, so it is quite an interesting position to be in, and I am very thankful for this opportunity.

Thank you very much, Senator Demers, for your comments. I am a First Nation person; I am from the Alexis Nakota Sioux First Nation in central Alberta, which is Treaty 6 territory. I do speak my language.

[The witness then spoke in his native language.]

If I was to drill down, sir, there are a lot of issues that perhaps overarch in all of this; they overlap in many different realms of situations, including health, education and economics. Why economics? I touch on that because, historically, the First Nations communities were the oldest communities in this country that do to a degree still live in poverty.

Poverty is where a lot of situations begin; due to poverty you end up with situations with drugs and the situation with alcohol. Some of our young people go to major urban centres to heighten their education, as an example. Unfortunately, they do not always find that. They go to major urban centres to get quality of work, perhaps; unfortunately, to some degree, some end up on the wrong side of the law, so to speak.

The demise begins there for some of them in which there is no return. It is sad to see that, because I have been on the streets of major urban centres. Watching my people suffer in major urban centres is not pretty, especially for a First Nations person.

The main issue that we have to tackle collectively is — and it is not limited to this — poverty. If we can eliminate poverty in this country, not just for First Nations but all inclusive, perhaps, we can have a better life for everybody in terms of all Canadians.

The other issue I would like to touch on is the issue of treaties. Treaty rights in this country should be portable. I go back to the children and youth again; treaty rights do not always follow the child. If someone wants to go to post-secondary education or university, they will find that sometimes the funding does not follow the youth. To a degree, that is what happens.

One more quick comment, if I may, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Yes, please.

Mr. Alexis: On the justice side of things, we all need a paradigm shift; the lens with which we see this world at this time in Canadian history needs to start changing.

Our population is increasing. What's the answer? We do not have an answer. Our institutions are increasing in capacity — that is dependency on an institution. What will you do? That overarches in other areas, as well. We have to drill down to every facet of review on justice completely, in my view.

In saying that, senator, you raised a good point. On the corrections side, they do have unions. We need to speak about unions and how much authority they have. Do the federal statutes always interlock; do they work together? I do not always see that, because there are protocols within the statutes and entities. Those things need to be drilled down and looked at and reviewed in its entirety, and built from the ground up.

Senator Raine: Thank you all for being here. If you do not mind, I would like Chief Atleo to expand a little bit and explain the Teslin Tlingit court system they have proposed. I am not familiar with it. Could you outline that for us?

They have a proposal to put in place — a justice system for their First Nation. What kind of supports are they missing?

Mr. Atleo: I could not answer the details. It might be good to actually engage them directly on that.

My interactions have been around supporting their challenges to come to a negotiated agreement about implementation of provisions in their agreements that they have already negotiated.

I can speak more broadly, though. I know there are communities that set up their own justice and court systems that could also be described. Akwesasne is an example, covering the borders of both Quebec and New York state.

I can be more specific and talk about Ahousaht, my own village. We instituted our Ahousaht justice system. There are times when the RCMP, in my village, we would ask them to vacate the premises, because we would take over during the time of a potlatch. They respected that; we would have an accord — an understanding. When our laws are put in place, there would be periods of time where the depth of peace and stability is unlike any other time when our own laws are in place.

We have had offenders go through circle sentencing. As Senator Sibbeston was describing, that is about helping to repair relationships and put people on the path to healing and reconciliation. It is to break the cycles of intergenerational trauma that resulted in interaction with the criminal justice system.

It is getting at those underlying reasons, but using the local knowledge and laws. Every First Nation would have within their collective memory the ability to apply systems of justice that work for them and that they can understand.

For us, we used a modification of a form of banishment when we had those who were doing bootlegging and going against our local laws of our village. We had well over 90 per cent success rates, where people would willingly go along with banishment from the community on the premise that if they did not choose that, they would have to leave the community.

The sense of the strength of the relationships of our peoples is such that it compelled them to go along with this work, to be supported by the elders, to receive modern forms of healing and counselling, but also our ceremonies and traditions using our language and the wisdom of our elders and our knowledgeable ones on our lands.

I would be able to bring forward a number of those same people from my own village, who could sit before you and talk about the changes in their lives and the changes in behaviours away from going against not only our laws but mainstream laws. It is a much higher success rate than the kinds of experiences that we are finding with young people being sent into the jail system. It seems to be just a further training ground for people in the area of criminality. It is not the kind of experience that helps us to break cycles.

I think about Dr. Perry Kendall's reflections on the Safe Streets and Communities Act, Bill C-10, and the implications of this act and disproportionate impact on vulnerable populations, particularly our people, this cycle that we are trying to break of crime, along with poor health, issues of poverty that very difficult to escape, and that we need to focus on prevention, on rehabilitation. It comes back to Justice Steven Point's point when he says it is like breaking the leg of a man today and then tomorrow blaming him for limping. In essence, on the institutional and crime bill sides, that is the experience we are receiving, not a focus on the healing or the rehabilitation or the prevention, notwithstanding the point I made about investing in education.

We are before the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal on child welfare. This comes back to what my colleague was talking about. These issues are within the scope of treaty implementation, implementation of the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, settlement of the land question. These are the major points we have raised now in our two major meetings with government, both last January and most recently this January. It is inextricably linked. I know this is the lens of justice, but I think it is right and proper to link it to the bigger discussion about the relationship between First Nations and the Crown and implementation of agreements that have already been negotiated in recent days.

Senator Raine: Your community has self-governance, I believe.

Mr. Atleo: No.

Senator Raine: Not yet? Are you able to have your own justice system working? Are you doing that in partnership with the RCMP? How did you set it up? It sounds like it is on the right path.

Mr. Atleo: On the one hand, we have a local agreement with the RCMP. In Ahousaht, we have one of the first if not the first RCMP detachment in the country. That local relationship goes a long way back. I have to say that right now our relationship with the federal Crown is principally expressed through the Indian Act, so we are not a self-governing community. By extension, every First Nation, every indigenous nation, has inherent laws and rights in areas across the full spectrum of what we call policy, including justice. Some are implementing those. That would not be recognized in a formal way by the federal government or by mainstream law. It could be the issuing of fines by First Nations in their areas, fines that are being paid to First Nations courts that have been established or the kind of system I am describing in Ahousaht, which is very formal from the Ahousaht law perspective but is not formally recognized. That is distinct or different than in the Yukon and the Teslin Tlingit, who have negotiated a modern agreement, where lawyers on every side were dotting I's and crossing T's and agreeing there would be a Teslin Tlingit vision of justice that would be supported.

What I am saying, senators, is that examples like that need to be supported to be implemented successfully. By doing so, you are empowering and supporting local solutions that can produce real results. If we support that work nationally, it means supporting the kind of outcome we press for, that the Prime Minister committed to in January 11, to support First Nations, to implement treaties on a nation-to-nation, treaty-by-treaty basis. That is the work before us. I think through the lens of justice is important because it is about our most vulnerable. It is also about the young people and the need to move quickly to support the young people and invest in them.

The Deputy Chair: I will ask a supplementary question. You were talking about the different types of arrangements. It made me think about the different arrangements we see across the country with respect to education. In some instances, we have a bipartite agreement, in other cases tripartite. I am wondering if that is an approach that can be taken, where you go from local agreements with your nearest municipality and then move on from there to the full control by a First Nation of their policing.

As a follow-up to that, has anyone ever done a national survey to what you have just described to describe the various initiatives across the country? Is there anywhere we can go to see what is there?

Mr. Atleo: Madam chair, I think that may be a good question that immediately does not come to mind that that has been done. We can certainly examine that. I think we have some examples that we would bring on a day like today. We know reports have been done. I would not want to call it best practices, but I do see that part of your question is answered in part, in my view, by suggesting there is no one size fits all. Top down has not worked in the past and it does not work now.

Given that I must now take my leave, madam chair, perhaps my colleagues can bring important reflections on your question. We support for regions and nation-led solutions, wherever they may be, and to provide full support for that. I think that is a great question, one that we should perhaps consider reflecting on together.

The Deputy Chair: Just before you leave, I am wondering if that might be a suggestion that you might suggest the committee look at if we do not have that information.

Mr. Atleo: For me, it builds on the notion that there is a strong sense, like in education, like in justice, like in other areas, that I would be over six feet tall if I were to stand on the reports that have been written about these issues. Our people have a sense, and especially the young people, that it is time for action. If this committee could consider the action side of this, that would be incredibly helpful.

I know excellent examples and experience are with my regional chief colleagues here. Thank you to the Senate committee for the privilege of being here with you this evening, and thank you for your attention to this important topic.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, national chief, for your wisdom.

We shall continue with Senator Seth.

Senator Seth: My question was for the chief. I understood from him that there are some programs targeted towards crime diversion that you have developed for the First Nations, for youth as young as 10 years old. Are you aware of any program Justice Canada provides for these youth? Are they successful?

Mr. Alexis: Thank you very much for the question. When you go back to RCAP, since 1991, there have been several volumes of recommendations and several initiatives that took place relative to engaging with the youth, so to speak. I will give you one example. Restorative justice programs were initiated from Australia, from the Aboriginals, was presented here in Canada. Restorative justice in sentencing circles, led by elders of communities, was working, and they are still to a degree used by the court systems, but not enough. If you go back to the Gladue principles of 1999, for example, in Manitoba you will find very little has been used, so it now needs to be perhaps reflected upon and maybe find some best practices that will work. Look at the paradigm shifts, the emerging issues of gangs, of new street drugs, population increases and how we will deal with all these things. We have to look at those issues.

Madam Chair, I have one quick comment on the policing side. There are community tripartite agreements.

There are agreements that are 51/49 with the provinces for policing in the provinces. Those agreements still exist, but are they used? That is another question. I wanted to touch on that.

In Alberta, for example, I will use my own community of Alexis, if I may, Madam Chair. For 35 years, the provincial courts of Alberta have actually used a court system in Alexis for the people of Alexis and the surrounding area. It has not been funded, but it has been in existence for 35 years. Perhaps upon conviction, they are brought before the elders for sentencing, and the sentencing could take place in the shape of, "You will now work with the elders in terms of sweat lodges, sundance ceremony preparations and learning your culture, to be immersed in your culture." Those programs do exist, and I support that. Do they always work? Perhaps not, but not for lack of trying. It does work, and I have seen it work. Restorative justice takes a little more time, in my observation, because it becomes volunteerism, but it does work. I hope I answered your questions to a degree.

Senator Patterson: I might direct this to Regional Chief Augustine because I believe there have been some initiatives in education in the Maritimes. Just to give a bit of quick background, we are here to talk about justice tonight, I know. However, it has come up and been observed that the higher risk of involvement with criminal justice system is linked to a lack of education, so I want to ask a bit about education.

Your national chief talked about reports and the growing stack of reports. There were two important reports on education last year, as you know. There was the special panel that was commissioned by the minister of Aboriginal Affairs, and then there was this committee's report. They both, I think, said the same thing, that we need to develop a First Nations education act to focus funds on education and to develop a fair and adequate funding formula. That is a quick summary of what our committee recommended. I know that consultations are now under way. I know that it is a priority of the national chief and others before him, and I believe it is a priority of the former and present ministers of Aboriginal Affairs.

I am wondering, Chief Augustine, whether you could give us your view on how that is going.

Roger Augustine, Regional Chief (New Brunswick & Prince Edward Island), Assembly of First Nations: I want to give you a brief background of my work. I was first elected councillor for Eel Ground First Nation — that is my community — in 1976. This month, I celebrated 38 years of First Nations politics. I used to be tall, dark and handsome. Now, you see what you see.

Comment [KL9]: http://www.nsmdc.ca/content/16920

I have a son who works with The Correctional Service of Canada. He is a corrections officer. I have two nephews who are RCMP officers. I have a son who is a social worker. You see all these things that are taking place in our communities and the work that they have done, and, from some of the reports that I still hear from our people who are in the business of corrections, a very hurtful history still rings true. When I think about it and hear their stories, it takes me back to 1976.

Comment [KL10]: http://www.csc-scc.gc.ca/index-eng.shtml

We have so many unresolved situations in our communities with corrections and the police officers. I truly admire the work that you are taking on, and it will take a long time to be able to resolve it.

In terms of education, in 1976, I started the first drug and alcohol education program in our community, from kindergarten to grade 7. It took 10 years to see the benefits and the progress of the success of that program. It is still going on. From that, we were able to work with men and women who continued on, becoming drug and alcohol counsellors at treatment centres. In my community, we have a treatment centre. We have a youth centre, and we have a very strong social structure. We spent years and years putting that together.

Senators, the sad part about all of that is that it just seems that we completed that circle and are right back where we started. It is not a comfortable feeling knowing that some of the communities might be suffering more than we are.

There is a lot of work going on, senator — and I will answer your question directly — that the national chief has supported. I was one of the few regional chiefs who attended the great meeting that took place, in January, with the Prime Minister. It was a very complicated event for us. It resulted in Idle No More, and the story went on. However, the spirit of the Assembly of First Nations and the regional chiefs continued to pursue it, and soon, I hope, we will be able to again have that meeting with the Prime Minister. I know our office was criticized over the initial meeting with the Prime Minister, the Crown gathering. We went ahead and did that. I could see, from the history and from experience, that we are making headway. I know that tonight, in my story — and before I finish I want to share something with you — I still see hope. I still see hope. I think that, with the leadership of National Chief Atleo and the regional chiefs across the country, we are working hard. It is a complex situation for us. The regional chiefs still continue. Today, we had a very productive meeting. Today, we talked about issues that, three months ago, probably would have started a war. I believe National Chief Atleo and the regional chiefs have set that stage for what the future will looks like for First Nations.

I tried not to be too negative about what I saw in the past. I try not to be too negative about the stories that could break your heart. It has not really changed. Just recently, I was contacted by one of our band members, and the problem there was that she was visited — and, she told me, this was only two weeks ago — by members of the police commission. She said, "My daughter was raped by a police officer not too long ago. I reported it. I live alone, and I was visited by police officers and interrogated. I am harassed constantly by the police force. What could I do?"

That is story number one. A lot of our young men, growing up, were beaten. Young girls were raped. We are not talking 50 or 60 years ago; we are talking in the past 10 years.

As far as the work that is taking place now and the work that needs to be done by the Assembly of First Nations with our leadership today, we continue to work hard. We continue to listen to our people. We continue to express our differences, like we did today, and move on. We will not be beaten. We are in this together. It does not matter what colour we are, we are in it together.

With the leadership that you see here tonight and the ones who work constantly as the executive, along with the staff of the Assembly of First Nations, we are here. That is why we are here, because we believe. We have faith that you will do the right thing and will hear the words and cries of our people as we move on to make this country a better place. That is all we are asking for.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Chief Augustine. You have given us some very heartbreaking news, and we receive that with the greatest respect. Thank you for sharing that with us.

Senator Patterson: I would like to thank the regional chief for that answer. I want to drill down a bit more.

The National Chief talked about taking a step and making something happen. I am just one person, I am not speaking on behalf of the government, but my view is that with all the focus on education last year, and with what I have heard from the political leaders at the AFN and in the Department of Aboriginal Affairs, there seems to be an agreement to make education a priority. These consultations are going on right now towards an act. I think we believe, our committee believes, that the creation of a First Nations education act would allow for the targeting of funds for education to ensure that they do not go anywhere else, and we believed and recommended that that would be the basis for the formula that is needed and has been called for, an adequate formula.

What I would like to ask, if you know, or if you could share this, is how are those consultations going? You said we are working hard and we are making progress.

Mr. Augustine: Yes.

Senator Patterson: Is education, and what seems to be a common goal of developing an act, legislation, one of the areas where we are making progress? You said you see hope. Could you perhaps comment on that, please?

Mr. Augustine: Thank you again, senator. I apologize for not answering your question directly. There were certain things in my heart that I needed to say. I am placed here to represent the people and to voice their concerns and cries.

With regard to education, yes, the work is taking place. One of the regional chiefs, I believe, Regional Chief Morley Googoo is the one responsible for that file. We did not get the report today, but in talking with him, yes, there is some progress there. I cannot exactly tell you where it is at, but there is some movement there. There are still some politically sensitive issues there, but we are moving ahead.

Comment [ma11]: Confirmed: http://www.afn.ca/index.php/en/about-afn/executive-committee

Senator Raine: In one of our last meetings we had testimony from a woman who has done many studies with the Department of Law and Legal Studies at Carleton, based on her research on Aboriginal communities. She spoke particularly about restorative justice initiatives, and felt they do not provide a solution to the problem of Aboriginal overrepresentation in the criminal justice system.

Comment [ma12]: Confirmed: http://www1.carleton.ca/law/

Subsequent to that we heard from another witness who talked about the Department of Justice programs that are available. It seems to me there are probably not enough of them: they are small programs. They are all individual programs, but they are doing very well.

I agree with what the National Chief said when he said there is no one size that fits all. These solutions have to come from the community level up.

At the AFN, are you watching for programs at the community levels that are working and then spreading the word? I think that is the wonderful thing about the AFN: you talk to each other, find out what is happening in your regions and you can sort of cross-pollinate. Is that happening? Is there anything we can do to speed it up?

Mr. Augustine: As regional chiefs, most of us live in our communities, so we see all these things. We report back what our local chiefs ask us to report. Basically, in our community, one of the things we need to do is evaluate everything that has been done in the past. Restorative justice is one aspect. They had other circles they talked about in terms of justice circles and sentencing circles. Those things were done in different areas. Some succeeded and some did not. Now is the time to revisit everything.

In talking with one of my sons who works at one of the institutes, I asked him if cultural awareness was working in this prison. He said no. He said some of the prisoners just use it to take some time off, and he tells me he is not sure if they are working.

My brother, who was a police officer for our First Nation for years and years, now works in that field. He believes it is working. He believes and has some faith that we are reaching some of the native inmates through the sweat ceremonies and talking circles. They are different stories: there are some successful ones and some not so successful.

In this case, where I am from, it is 50-50, I would think. One thing that is really important to address here today, senator, is First Nations policing. That is one thing that was strong when I was chief, and I truly believe that was the right process. I know some changes were made in some policies and it did not really work well for the community. However, today, the RCMP, with their budget restraints, is not servicing communities. My community is small.

For example, the population of Burnt Church First Nation is 2,000, so there are about 5,000 First Nations within a 100-mile radius. The police force in one of the communities is RCMP and First Nations RCMP, and that seems to be working. In other communities that is not the case, even though some of the RCMP now are First Nations. I have three, I think, from my community who are RCMP, but they are devoted and loyal to the commission. They are not loyal to the chief and council. We need to address that down the road. I do not know how we will do it, but it is a serious problem.

Comment [ma13]: Confirmed: http://www.tourismnewbrunswick.ca/Products/B/BurntChurchEsgenoopetitiFirstNationPowwow.aspx

I would like eventually to see First Nations policing right across the country. That is the true way of being able to deal with the cultural problems and cultural issues in our community. That is one way.

Chief Alexis mentioned poverty, education, lack of housing and the history, for example, of residential schools. We have leaders in our communities now who are residential school survivors. That sometimes can get very complicated.

Senator Raine: In looking toward more First Nation policing by First Nations people, what kind of training is available? How do they get the training and how are they selected? Are there people who have a natural talent for this kind of work, are they being mentored and is there a way to grow them so they can serve?

Mr. Alexis: Thank you very much for the question, senator. There are several models across Canada. I mentioned the CTA, for example. That is a First Nation agreement between the province, the RCMP and the First Nation of choice that wishes to have the RCMP as the police service of choice. They provide, for example, a community-based storefront office on the nation. Perhaps in some degree, the clerk might be a First Nation person. They go through any other process that is done by the government where they have to apply, the education has to meet the minimal requirements, and they, too, have to go through, in some instances, the unions as well. They go through the regular job application and they get the job

On the RCMP or policing side, the local province or territories through their Solicitor General's office does do the benchmark, if you will, for hiring of police persons across any province.

They must pass tests like anybody else. Once they attain those tests, they pass the tests, in some instances, in Alberta, for example, they used to go through Solicitor General's office in Alberta at the college. They have to go through five months of training and then five months of recruit field training in the field with perhaps an RCMP officer. They have to pass recruit field training.

It is no different from any other place. It is a career path, and they must meet the benchmarks like anyone else. There are several models out there and I just touched on one. The other one is self-administered police services, which, in my view, should now move to a level called "essential service," and Chief Augustine touched on it. Community policing must begin with the community, and the community should have a police service of choice.

If they choose to have their own police service, that should be honoured and respected. Within the provinces, I will touch on Alberta as well again, and perhaps B.C., where I served as a police officer, the provincial government contracts the RCMP for police services of choice.

In Ontario or Quebec, that is not the case. There are choices, and that is how the models begin within the provinces, territories, and, of course, the federal police force, the RCMP.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Poverty was mentioned here and has been mentioned many other times in all the reports that are stacked up on our tables.

I know there are communities that are well off or that are not poor. In those communities, are the policing issues less severe? Are there lower rates of incarceration in communities that look as though they are economically strong? Is there anything that would indicate that that has happened?

Mr. Alexis: I will try to answer the question to the best of my ability. Again, it goes back to one size does not fit all, and the same holds true across Canada. Some communities, although affluent, have high rates of crime. In other instances, you may have some poverty, but at the same time your crime rate may be low.

It is a difficult thing to answer. That would be an important question to put within your mandate, in my humble opinion.

The Deputy Chair: Also, one of our witnesses really did suggest that the community-based approach was the way to go, and healthy families essentially were the backbone of your community. She also indicated that to have a healthy family, you have to have adequate and proper housing. If you do not have the housing, then you cannot have a community that is going to prosper and the members are not going to then be lured into gangs or drugs and alcohol.

Is housing part of the issue as well, from your perspective?

Mr. Alexis: If I may touch on that again, Madam Chair, there are two parts. You touched on community policing as a strong component to all these discussions. The answer is yes. I was actually seconded as a chief of police to the First Nations police service that was in development in northern Alberta. The picture that I would like to present here to the Senate is that when you look at RCMP detachments, for example, RCMP detachments are located in the local town, not on the nation, for the majority.

We found that having the police service of choice in the community worked very well in delivering not only the police service, but also reduction of crime, community-based policing at its best, because the doors are open for perhaps the police committee to be a commission of elders and local people who vote and decide on the best interests of that police service.

Housing is a big issue because if you do not have a healthy home to go home to, that is one of the big issues that we have. I have lived through that pain where I have never seen a home in 15 years. My mother never had a home. If you do not have a home, you do not have a healthy, holistic person.

That is one of the things that really needs to be reviewed, because housing is definitely an issue in First Nation communities across this country.

Senator Patterson: I would like to ask Chief Alexis, the federal Department of Justice has an Aboriginal justice strategy. It is supposed to assist Aboriginal people to assume greater responsibility for the administration of justice in their communities, community-based justice programs.

There seems to be some money available. I understand there is roughly $17 million a year in that program in the last five years or so. Would you have any comments about that program and whether it is effective or could be made more effective?

Mr. Alexis: I am not totally familiar with all the programs that exist right now in justice. However, I would like to point out one thing, if I may. We did put a proposal to the respected minister a few years ago relative to Aboriginal gangs in this country. Our proposal was not accepted. That was with two provinces and one territory. No reasons were ever given as to why that proposal was not accepted.

Having said that, in my humble opinion, these proposal-driven initiatives need to be examined because some communities do not have the writers to do a bang-on, hit-the-pillars proposal. If you do not hit the pillars of the proposal, you will not get the funding. Those things need to be examined as well.

Since 1991, going back to RCAP, if I may, there have been programs that have worked and others that have not. You mentioned it yourself. I am glad you are going to look into that because it is crucial.

On the issue of justice, sometimes the overarching responsibilities of individual federal institutions, for example, do not always connect, and that needs to be examined.

Senator Patterson: The other thing is that sometimes a program gets developed like the gang-related program you mentioned, but it does not fit the criteria of the federal program. That is important information you gave us, and maybe something we should look into.

I would like to ask another question, if I may, again, to Chief Alexis.

I understand that last year there was a national justice forum convened by the AFN to work on developing a national Aboriginal justice strategy. Could you comment on where that stands and what came out of that work, which I understand brought Aboriginal people together from across the country.

Mr. Alexis: That is a good question. I was not at that forum because of emerging issues in my community, so I was not privy to those discussions. I am sorry about that.

Senator Patterson: That is fine.

The Deputy Chair: There being no further questions for our witnesses, I would like to thank you for appearing this evening. You have painted a picture that we have known of for many years. We have numerous reports on the pressing issues. The National Chief left us with an overarching question: What has prevented us from getting the job done?

We thank you.

(The committee adjourned.)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

OTTAWA, Tuesday, June 4, 2013

The Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples met this day at 9:30 a.m. to examine and report on the federal government's constitutional, treaty, political and legal responsibilities to First Nations, Inuit and Metis peoples, and on other matters generally relating to the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada.

Senator Vernon White (Chair) in the chair.

The Chair: Good morning. I would like to welcome all honourable senators and members of the public who are watching this meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples on CPAC or on the Web.

I am Vernon White, from Ontario. I am chair of the committee. The mandate of this committee is to examine legislation and matters relating to Aboriginal peoples of Canada. In considering what studies the committee might like to undertake, we, from time to time, invite individuals, organizations and departments to give us an overview of issues of concern within their mandate. Recently, we have heard from witnesses on the subject of Aboriginal peoples within the criminal justice system. Today, we will carry on with this subject by hearing from a representative of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations.

Before hearing from our witness, I would like to take this opportunity to ask the members of the committee present this morning to introduce themselves. I will start with the deputy chair.

Senator Dyck: Good morning. My name is Lillian Dyck, and I am a senator from Saskatchewan.

Senator Lovelace Nicholas: Senator Lovelace, from New Brunswick.

Senator Watt: Senator Watt, from Nunavik.

Senator Patterson: Dennis Patterson, from Nunavut.

Senator Demers: Senator Demers, from Quebec.

Senator Tannas: Scott Tannas, from Alberta.

Senator Raine: Senator Greene Raine, from B.C.

Senator Seth: Asha Seth, Ontario.

The Chair: Honourable senators, please help me to welcome our witness, Simon Bird, Vice-Chief of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations.

Vice-Chief Bird, we look forward to your presentation, which will be followed by questions from the senators. Please proceed, and, again, thank you very much for coming today.

Simon Bird, Vice Chief, Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations: Thank you very much. I want to say, first, our greetings in my own language.

(The witness spoke in his native tongue.)

What I said was that it is an honour to be here before you to speak on such an important issue. I acknowledge our Creator for giving us the opportunity to be able to gather like this today.

With that, I will not spend too much time with the greetings. I hold the portfolio for justice as the vice-chief for the Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations, representing 74 First Nations in Saskatchewan. I have a background in education. I am a teacher by profession. I have my Masters in education, and I have really gotten to spend a lot of time in First Nations' communities, in First Nations' schools and among First Nations elders, so my experience in justice is just that, with our elders and our communities. We have excellent staff members who serve us as the executive, and so this is the material that we have prepared.

Once again, thank you for this opportunity to present the First Nations' perspective about some of the reasons for our over-representation in the Canadian criminal justice system and to provide some solutions in response to this major problem.

In a province of 1 million people, Saskatchewan First Nations make up 13 per cent of the population but 60 per cent of the incarcerated population. These alarming statistics show that more First Nations are entrenched in the criminal justice system than in post-secondary education in Canada.

Also, Statistics Canada predicts that First Nation incarceration will increase further by 2017, due to the Criminal Code amendments and mandatory sentencing provisions imposed by the Safe Streets and Communities Act passed last year.

The record of studies, reports and academic papers has changed little in the way that First Nations interact with the criminal justice system. Some recommend tinkering with the current system, but few go as far as the 1983 Penner Report and the 1996 RCAP Report. The Penner Report noted the need for a new relationship but strongly stated the pitfalls of building a relationship through the Department of Indian Affairs, which had too much control in all aspects of First Nations lives. RCAP set the stage for a new relationship, based on past experience, present conditions and hope for the future.

This country was built on the treaty covenant of the 1870s that was intended to be a relationship of mutual respect and coexistence. This type of relationship did not develop. Rather, our lives were disrupted, and the impacts of our colonial experience continue to be evident today. The experiences of our families and communities are rooted in cultural genocide and oppression. Oppressive measures were implemented through: the residential school system, where children were forcibly removed from family; the Indian Act that controlled our lives from birth to death and displaced our laws and governance structures; the denial of our collective right to live in freedom, peace and security; and the criminalization of our traditional ceremonies and spiritual practices.

This history is held in common whether we are from a First Nations community or an urban centre, so healing and recovery from colonization are important steps in our journey. We must decolonize our thinking and ways of being and doing in order to rebuild a healthy indigenous identity in ourselves, our families and our communities.

What the criminal justice system witnesses are the symptoms of the underlying causes such as: substance abuse, violence, anger, revenge, alienation, poverty, marginalization, discrimination and despair. Clearly, the demographics that describe First Nations in the administration of justice are very much about the systematic controls over authority, power and resources that prevent growth, opportunities to thrive, positive relationships, ways to coexist and cooperate with one another and access to the means to earn a livelihood.

Positive change must begin by rethinking justice matters. Rethinking justice matters means refocusing on the areas that have the most impact on the lives of First Nations. These are areas of: good governance, lifelong learning, economic well-being, health and social well-being, which I will cover.

Governance, and justice for that matter, is about relationships, relationships among people, institutions, structures and processes. We need to deconstruct our colonial reality and rebuild our community-centred governance structures and processes that have worked for centuries.

This process begins with confidence rebuilding, knowing that our legal traditions and customary laws are the cultural fit that is required to develop a collective vision for creating a movement for social change. It is a well-known fact that societies that govern well do better economically, socially, politically and culturally.

How do we organize for social change? We set our priorities, justice being one of them; engage our peoples for priority setting and community mobilization; and develop our plans for the future. The communities understand their own issues and must be engaged in solution development processes. Organizing for change is a long-term process that cannot be dictated from the outside or through a top-down approach. This rebuilding process is community rebuilding from the inside out.

The second area of this discussion is education. Everyone is part of the learning process, which must take place within a respectful and open environment where we acknowledge that shared learning experiences are the basis for community and capacity development. Our indigenous languages are critical to understanding and maintaining the relationship teachings that emphasize the importance of discipline, respecting personal boundaries and developing the skills to live healthy lifestyles within our families and communities.

Good schools and post-secondary institutions are absolutely essential for organized social change. The elimination of barriers must be built into the relationship permanently. These barriers do not go away by themselves. The media plays a large role in how First Nations are portrayed and what people learn about First Nations people. Better communication and working relationships will provide balanced media coverage.

The third is economic well-being that maintains self respect, dignity and self worth and promotes prosperity. Gaining prosperity requires an economic base that includes our traditional economies, the sharing of the natural resources with this country and sustained development. The removal of systematic barriers will provide equitable employment opportunities and create long lasting change.

Increased community employment, career options for youth and personal development will enhance community economic well-being, give hope to our peoples and ensure First Nation participation in the economy, a right of every citizen.

The fourth area is health and social well-being. Community capacity rebuilding is related directly to health, healing, economic and social well-being of First Nations, the ability to govern and contribute to the community, to have healthy relationships, and to live in peace. Freedom and security are related directly to the health of a nation. Adequate housing is a top priority for First Nations to have stable, safe and secure living environments, to build confidence and self-worth and to increase living standards. Adequate shelter positively affects children's learning abilities and access to employment opportunities.

The four areas outlined place emphasis on building people and healthy communities rather than on punitive, retributive and condemning judgments. This is the First Nations' quest for just relationships in the long term. The rebuilding process is time- and resource-intensive but will bring lasting change for the future health of our peoples and communities. Maintaining peace and order includes the responsibility of building strong, stable institutions. An institutional focus for an effective First Nations' just relations system must include the restoration of First Nations' traditional forms of justice and peace-making methods. Governments need to support our indigenous peacekeepers on the ground so they can appropriately fill the gap in the current policing services delivered to our communities. Peacekeepers for First Nations must be relevant to the needs of those they serve.

Entry into the criminal justice system begins with the police. Peacekeepers have a major role in maintaining peace and order within our communities and working with the police in a collaborative and supportive environment. The Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations signed a protocol agreement in June 2012 with the goal of resolving disputes at the First Nation community level and preventing incidents that can potentially escalate into conflict situations. The protocol is a significant step toward rebuilding relationships between the RCMP and First Nations. However, referrals and the discretionary powers of police and the courts have yet to be understood mutually. It should be the responsibility of all parties to work mutually toward community involvement.

A peacemaker tribunal is another peace-making institution that offers a less formal and adversarial process to resolve community issues, and has flexibility for resolution. This type of tribunal will provide an intervention vehicle that essentially must be developed from the inside out. When a person engages in negative behaviour, the law has been breached and the relationship must be restored. Approaches must change so that prevention-based investments and intervention strategies, such as developing peacemaker tribunals, stem from the communities in implementing intervention vehicles, such as the peacemaker tribunal. Understanding indigenous cultures is critical. All issues are integrally linked and must be dealt with in relation to one another.

Returning to the community: The entire community is affected when our citizens are incarcerated whether they enter provincial or federal correctional facilities. Law enforcement people arrest and rearrest the same individuals in their jurisdictions. Despite the huge investment in enforcement and court and corrections resources, current spending is not reducing the First Nation recidivism rates. We need to create viable options to assist individuals in overcoming the systemic barriers when returning to the community. Our Indian Justice Commission approved our participation in a multi-stakeholder group that is attempting to leverage resources and deliver cost-effective solutions that would support the successful reintegration of First Nation offenders. This is a fiscally responsible effort.

The Supreme Court of Canada acknowledged that First Nations were overrepresented in the criminal justice system and legislatively implemented section 718.2(e) of the Criminal Code, which:

Comment [mj4]: http://fasdjustice.ca/sentencing/7182e-of-the-criminal-code-and-r-v-gladue.html

> . . . instructs judges to look at all reasonable alternatives to jail for all offenders and to pay particular attention to the circumstances of Aboriginal offenders.

Comment [mj5]: http://fasdjustice.ca/sentencing/7182e-of-the-criminal-code-and-r-v-gladue.html

Twenty years have lapsed but the incarceration and recidivism rates for First Nations have not decreased; they are increasing and more jails are being built.

On the federal side, the Office of the Correctional Investigator Canada tabled its report in Parliament. The investigative report examines the use of the provisions under section 81 and section 84 in federal corrections for the period ending March 2012. It identifies some best practices and assesses the commitment of Correctional Service Canada to adopt principles set out in the Supreme Court's landmark decision in R. v. Gladue* 1995.

Comment [mj6]: http://www.oci-bec.gc.ca/index-eng.aspx

Comment [mj7]: http://scc.lexum.org/decisia-scc-csc/scc-csc/scc-csc/en/item/1695/index.do

The investigation concludes that CSC has not met Parliament's intent for section 81 and section 84 of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act. CSC has had 20 years to address issues of relationship, trust and risk management in the implementation of section 81. Of all CSC's corrections strategy elements, the application and implementation of the Gladue principles appear the least understood and the most misrepresented. The report recommends the creation of the position of deputy commissioner for Aboriginal corrections to coordinate components of Correctional Service Canada, federal partners and Aboriginal communities; and that CSC reaffirm its commitment to section 81 healing lodges with elder involvement; re-examine the use of non-facility-based section 81 agreements as healing lodge alternatives; and partner with First Nations collective tribal councils, Metis and Inuit to develop protocols for section 84 releases into the respective communities.

Honourable senators, that concludes my report.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Mr. Bird. We appreciate having you here and hearing your comments.

Senator Dyck: Mr. Bird, you have given us much information to digest -- a very good overview. Much of what you said emphasized the fact that the community needs to be engaged in changing what is happening now with respect to people being incarcerated and that community members need to be involved in setting up different systems, such as the peacekeepers that you mentioned.)

My question will relate to the initiative with regard to the indigenous peacekeepers. You say that you have signed a protocol, and I presume that would be with the federal government because it is dealing with a protocol agreement between the FSIN and the RCMP. I am wondering whether this initiative was in place beforehand. It is a short time, but have you seen any success with the peacekeepers initiative? I know I am asking you a lot of questions all at once. Could you describe what the peacekeeper initiative is? In practical terms, what does it do?

Mr. Bird: The establishment of the protocol is to regain the trust of the peacekeepers, who are the RCMP, the police in our communities. As you know, last year was the start of a new indigenous movement that really brought a lot of pressure to our leadership and to our communities because the indigenous movement was borne out of a mistrust. Many people call it Idle No More, as an example. It is incumbent on us and critical for us as leadership to we reaffirm the trust in our First Nations citizens that the police are not there to somehow spy on our people or to somehow just lay the law down. That is one of the primary reasons. It was a major event in terms of protocol signing, just trying to get back to the relationship that has been missing. One of my statements is that maintaining peace has to be on both sides.

Senator Dyck: To follow up on that, let us say there is a reserve in Saskatchewan. Does each reserve then have someone who is called a peacemaker who is actually an RCMP member, or is it something different?

Mr. Bird: That is something we are striving for.

Senator Dyck: You are trying to have an RCMP officer on every reserve?

Mr. Bird: Yes.

Senator Dyck: The agreement, then, would be between the FSIN and the federal government, Indian and Northern Affairs?

Mr. Bird: Between the FSIN and the RCMP.

Senator Dyck: With respect to that, does that protocol agreement include things like resources in order to make that happen or programs to train local First Nation men or women to serve as the RCMP officers on reserve?

Mr. Bird: That is something we are striving towards. One of the unfortunate things we have not been able to do is secure the appropriate resources. As I mentioned, we are trying to ensure that we reassure our First Nations communities that the leadership are pushing for something that our grassroots people need, which is a stronger presence of the RCMP to maintain peace.

Senator Dyck: I have a couple of quick questions to follow up on this peacekeeper initiative. Are there other provinces, such as Manitoba, that would have a similar program where there is someone based locally who can deal with local issues?

Mr. Bird: I am unaware of that at this time.

Senator Dyck: Are there examples in Saskatchewan? Are there any particular reserves that have started that initiative whereby you might begin to see whether or not it works and whether it is a better alternative? If it is a reserve near Saskatoon, for example, you would have to call in someone from Saskatoon. Is there a reserve where we do have local RCMP on reserve?

Mr. Bird: Increasing the number of RCMP within a First Nations community?

Senator Dyck: Yes. Do you have an idea as to how many reserves are able to do that?

Mr. Bird: I do not have the exact number, but I do know that in our last justice commission representing our 74 First Nations, appointed by tribunal councils, we had a presentation from Beardy's Okemasis, who were taking on a case, I will call it, with regard to a breach of treaty regarding policing. I have had an opportunity to sit in one of their presentations and hear exactly why they felt that the lack of RCMP or engagement in their community was a breach of treaty. They said it was because the time spent on the reserve itself was not adequate and the number of members within the community was not adequate. They wanted more preventative measures -- rather than, after 10 complaints, the RCMP shows up at the door and takes a person away, trying to ensure that they work more closely with the community. The Beardy's Okemasis First Nation is actually representing more than 30 other First Nations as co-signers of this complaint because they strongly feel that there is an inadequate level of RCMP services being delivered on First Nations.

Comment [DM8]: http://www.beardysband.net/

Senator Dyck: You mentioned that with Beardy's, the RCMP would show up at the door. When the RCMP would come, what would be the major reason why they would show up? What would be the major complaint?

Mr. Bird: I am not sure at this time in terms of statistics and reasons, but I do know from listening to the leadership that basically taking someone away to jail as a last punishment effort is not really what the community needs. If there is a noise complaint, they would like to have someone go knock on the door and maybe just settle things down before they get out of hand. However, with regard to the leadership's description, after everything has got out of hand is when the RCMP would show up, and then it does not really resolve something but just take the offenders away, and we have the whole thing repeat as soon as the offenders get reintroduced into the community.

Senator Dyck: If I understand you correctly, then, behaviour could be stopped earlier before it actually becomes so severe that the person actually has to be locked up or charged?

Mr. Bird: Yes.

The Chair: As a short follow-up, does the peacemaker process include community members who are engaged with the police in trying to deal with some of the conflicts?

Mr. Bird: That is one of the goals. However, being new in this portfolio, I cannot provide exact details.

Senator Lovelace Nicholas: My question is along the lines of those asked by Senator Dyck. You mentioned that you are trying to rebuild relationships between the RCMP and First Nations. With the cultural difference between the RCMP and Aboriginal people, do you think sensitivity training between the RCMP and the peacekeepers would be a go-ahead or a good thing to do, because of the racism and difference of cultures?

Mr. Bird: Thank you, Senator Lovelace, for that point. Yes, I definitely think that has been stated from time to time. It is a trust factor. In my report, I have also mentioned a tribunal, once again, to try to resolve things inside the community. However, I think that having the RCMP have a better understanding of who they are dealing with will go a lot further.

I come from a Northern community called South End, Saskatchewan. It sounds like it is on the south end of Saskatchewan, but it is actually on the north end. (It is very isolated, three hours north of La Ronge, for those of you who are familiar with Saskatchewan.

From time to time, we have RCMP members coming to the community, engaging the youth. They take the evenings to coach. That so much prevents the wall that sometimes the RCMP have with our First Nations people because that builds a relationship and is very conducive to trust. As you say, cultural training will go further, but the relationship needs to go even a step further in order to really understand our First Nations people in each community.

Senator Lovelace Nicholas: The RCMP are given contracts in communities. The government had promised they would extend it for another five years or so, but then that was cancelled. What would the peacekeepers and the RCMP do for infrastructure monies?

Mr. Bird: That is one of the things that would be my job, as a -- I do not like to use the term -- "politician," to ensure we understand the needs of our communities and still push for what our leadership is asking for.

Senator Munson: Vice-chief, thank you for being here. I would like to follow a line of question dealing with education. You described yourself as a teacher. First, what do you teach? Are you in grade school, high school? First, I would just like to get that, so I can ask my other questions.

Mr. Bird: In university, with middle years, I had an opportunity to deal with behavioural students from about 9 years old to about 13, and I have also had an opportunity to be a high school teacher.

Senator Munson: There is an old saying, "healthy body, healthy mind." Saskatchewan has the fastest growing rate of young Aboriginal people moving into the school system at all levels. What do you see when you see a child coming into the school system? Are you looking at a healthy body and a healthy mind, or are you looking at a troubled mind?

Mr. Bird: I think that every one of those kids, especially when they are younger, have the healthiest minds that we can have. I think the problem comes when they realize that surrounding them is poverty. I think that is when it starts to get polluted, for lack of a better term.

Senator Munson: They are in school, and they are being taught to the best of your and your colleagues' abilities. For some reason, they are incarcerated; they are thrown into jail. It could be a juvenile institute or whatever it is. They are in an education system, and they are being taught. Within our judicial system -- this could be a naive question -- does education continue for that incarcerated young man or woman? Are there programs there that say, "Okay, you made a mistake. Now you are behind bars." Are there any programs under way in Saskatchewan or elsewhere across the country? This could be happening elsewhere; I do not know. Should it happen? Should the curriculum continue either with elders, others in the school or other educators within the judicial system?

Mr. Bird: To the best of my knowledge, it does. When I was a principal, I was also a high school teacher, and I had one of our young people who had gone to a youth correctional facility in North Battleford. Along with his cumulative file came his grades for the classes that he attended within the youth corrections facility.

Senator Munson: So there is a system inside the jails? Why, in your estimation, when they leave jail, are they back in six months or so? What is wrong? Where is the system broken? You talked about the repeating rates, just a cycle. To me, there is just not enough in terms of education and health and holistic approaches to that. Is it because of the communities they live in? I am curious to know some of the factors as to why it just keeps repeating. It is kind of depressing to see some of your figures. You talked about how it is increasing, not decreasing.

Mr. Bird: I will refer back to this young gentleman that I had in my school, a very bright young kid. He just had very little opportunity to be able to grow up with many of the benefits that a strong family would have, as an example. This young gentleman, upon returning to the community, had to do some "community hours" as they call them. Because of our smaller Northern community, opportunities to volunteer or to work are few and far between. Employment opportunities are lacking. Because we have one school, one gymnasium, the majority of the kids who are active in that particular community all enjoy something like volleyball. They take up the evening.

This gentleman, having an opportunity to go to the outside, is, coming back in, somewhat on the outside of the "small society," I will call it. Because there is a lack of recreational facilities and a lack of opportunities to engage our youth, he tends to go back to the same group of kids who are more inclined to get into trouble because they are not able to be engaged.

Senator Munson: Saskatchewan, compared to other provinces, is a booming province. There seems to be a lot going on in Saskatchewan. You gave us the figures. I think most of us know about the makeup of the population -- First Nations, 12.5 per cent. First, are Aboriginal youth prepared, with the education they have, to tap into the resource sector and everything else that is going on in Saskatchewan? Whether they are or are not, are they getting a fair shake in being hired?

Mr. Bird: I will repeat the question so I understand it fully. Are Aboriginal youth prepared, with the education they have, to tap into the labour market?

Senator Munson: Yes, and are they getting, with what they have, a fair shake from industry to apply for the new technologies, to be able to work in various parts of the emerging technologies that are happening in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Bird: Let us go back to Aboriginal youth being prepared with the education they have. The education they are provided with is below standard. Coming from an educational background, I know that you have a tuition, as an example, that averages about $6,500 per child within the federal system, within a reserve school. You compare that to a provincial school that goes anywhere from $10,500 to $11,000. The quality of education will be severely different.

Comment [KL9]: He seems to mean "expenditure" here, but I left it as is as I did not want to assume.

Fortunately, I have been part of a provincial-wide consultation -- the Joint Task Force on Education and Employment. I was able to go to Aboriginal communities -- First Nations, urban, Metis -- to ask the stakeholders, including teachers, parents, grandparents and students, what exactly is missing. All pointed to the lack of investment in our First Nation schools. Many of our

Comment [mj10]: http://www.fsin.com/index.php/task-force-rfp.html

Saskatchewan First Nations communities have provincial schools that are no more than five kilometres away. A parent may not realize that a First Nation is just a have-not when it comes to investment in education. However, a parent will see that some students are getting extracurricular activities, high school-specific teachers in biology, chemistry, et cetera, while First Nations may just have a recreational coordinator in the evenings and no football or soccer program. Parents tend to see the provincial school as better, and it kind of looks like that. However, many of our communities, with the little they have, are doing wonderful things. I would not compare apples to oranges in that circumstance, but the industry is responding favourably in terms of recognizing that Aboriginal students need investment so they can be prepared to fill the jobs. Is it good enough? No, it is not, given the lack of investment in education that we have currently and have had in the past.

Senator Sibbeston: Mr. Bird, do you feel that our society -- in particular First Nations communities -- is spending enough time and resources on dealing with the matter of justice for their people? It seems there is no provision in the Criminal Code for judges to consider community-related solutions. In my experience, restorative justice is the answer; but the initiative must be taken by First Nations and native people. White people cannot do it for native people. I have always wondered something: In our busyness and struggle to get on our economic feet and have good governance and so forth, does the whole area of justice get pushed aside such that not enough energy, thought and resources are put towards it? Do you feel that more could be done and that the responsibility is on First Nations because no one can do it for them? Can you comment on that, please?

Mr. Bird: Before I do, may I clarify who is putting justice to the side, in your mind?

Senator Sibbeston: I am Aboriginal, and I live in a small community. Things are in place now. The RCMP is a very strong force in the community. If anything goes wrong in a community, if something is stolen or someone is hurt, the first thing people do is phone the RCMP. The RCMP arrives on the scene and deals with the person. Either the person is put in jail, if it is serious. If it is not too serious, he is charged and eventually goes before JB court. The court system deals with the person. That is the formal justice system we have in place; however, we all recognize that it is not suitable and not the best way. The best way would be for communities to deal with the situations with the cooperation of the RCMP to do the investigation. Then, at some point, bring the matter to the community for a resolution, rather than just bring the person before a judge and have him thrown in jail or heavily fined. The problem is not that the person is a criminal. It is more of a social problem. With some help, he can be restored and healed to be a good person. You know what I mean in that regard.

Could communities not do more of that sort of thing, rather than just saying that it is a police problem and a court problem -- let the White people deal with it. When I worked in the community justice area, I used to challenge the chief and communities and tell them: Look, do not wait for the White people to do it; do it yourself. You have the ability. You know how; so just do it. There is that idea of doing it ourselves and leaving all the dirty work to White people.

Mr. Bird: I believe you touched on something in that many First Nations have been conditioned to put that authority and responsibility off to someone else. I will refer back to education. Schools get the kids more than the parents get them at home. Role modeling goes to one institution. You talked about justice, and yet many First Nations communities have been conditioned to pick up the phone and dial 911 -- the problem is over -- not an issue.

However, I agree that justice definitely has been pushed to the side. However, that does not only happen at the First Nations level. In our federation that represents 74 First Nations, we have two staff members from Justice. That says a lot in terms of the provincial and federal government priorities and what they want to see in an organization such as the FSIN. Recently, we lost even more funding. I believe that so much progressive and preventive work is done by First Nations; but there is a lack of champions with the appropriate authority, background and experience to be recognized by the First Nations as credible; and that buy-in is very important.

As you know, Aboriginal people started accessing post-secondary education in the 1970s, as an example, at acceptable levels. We still have a generation of people who are conditioned to think that when you have a problem, you deal with this or that department or this institution. It is only recently that we have been able to take on that restorative justice path, realizing that our First Nations have the tools for the problems their communities have.

Senator Sibbeston: Have you ever had a chance to travel to see the Navajos? They are a big group of First Nations who live in the Arizona and New Mexico area. They have always epitomized the way that First Nations or native people in our country could do things. They have their own police system and judges; and they have their own laws. They have peacemakers. I have always thought that is pretty advanced. They could be a good example. If First Nations saw that, they would be encouraged and maybe want to do the same sort of thing and set up their own system.

I think, Mr. Chairman, we should go down to see the Navahos and --

The Chair: Is this your question or a preamble?

Senator Sibbeston: My question to Mr. Bird is whether he has ever had a chance to see the Navajos and, if he has, what he thinks of it.

Mr. Bird: Personally, I have not been able to have that privilege, but I heard a lot of positive things before I took on my role in leadership about the incredible amount of sovereignty that they practice in the Navajo nations.

I will go back with regard to your previous question to taking on more community responsibility. An interagency approach has recently been introduced into my community where you have staff members from the school, the health department and the band office. The RCMP are involved. Leadership are involved, as are local store owners and anyone who has a major role to play -- for lack of a better word, institutions that contribute to the community. I find it a big success. In fact, I started to really learn that other communities are doing it. Prince Albert has an internationally recognized program that is basically an interagency program, which they call the hub. I think it is being introduced in North Battleford as well. That is a good way of going about empowering the community itself.

If you do go to Navajo country, please invite me.

The Chair: I am glad you mentioned the hub concept. I know that Deputy Minister Dale McFee is probably one of the strongest proponents of the hub concept, and I think it will be a real success story. I was going to ask you about the hub concept.

Comment [DM11]: http://gtds.gov.sk.ca/pages/Details.aspx?organizationid=a9b1c8f4-c009-4312-bdde-ad6f1cd7a987

The other point that you made, and I think Senator Patterson was the premier of the Northwest Territories when we policed Paulatuk, which at the time had two days of policing a month, and when we increased it to full-time police officers, I think the crime rate when up 700 per cent. Before that, the community was dealing with community issues in a community way. The minute the police officers were there, they became police problems. Nothing changed in that community other than the fact that a couple of white guys from the South were now living there. Nothing else changed. I do appreciate your commentary, because I do not think it matters where that happens. There is this expectation that the community moves away from solving their own problems, and it is not healthy. I think the hub concept will actually make a difference, and I glad that you are a supporter.

Comment [DM12]: http://paulatuk.lgant.ca/

I had no question. I am as guilty as Senator Sibbeston.

Senator Raine: You both talked about the hub concept, but I do not know what it is. Could you describe it a little fuller for those of us who are not familiar with it? Exactly what is the hub concept?

Mr. Bird: The hub concept is basically an interagency approach. In a community, you have different agencies, such as the education, the RCMP, local business owners, various community stakeholders that come together once a month and talk. Perhaps the RCMP will say how many drunk driving charges or break and enters have happened, or the health will come in and talk about there having been a spike in solvent abuse. Education will come in and talk about how there have been new students into the community. It is really a touchstone, if you may, or a gathering of community agencies to talk about not only problems but some of the solutions and some of the good things that are happening. Perhaps that could be the best way that I can describe the hub. The hub is a lot more in larger communities. Not only do they have volunteers but they have people from different agencies that have been seconded to make sure that they volunteer their time at least two or three times a month. It is a little more structured than what you would have in a community that has to rely on whatever resources it gets.

Senator Raine: When you have a hub system in place, then, there would be more community engagement in the factors that are causing the crime?

Mr. Bird: It is not only the factors causing the crime. It is more the community members that are impacted by the crimes and that have a stake in the community. It will be to my benefit as a school to able to be engaged in this hub just so I can hear what the RCMP are doing and hear what the leadership is going through. Then, when I deal with a child that broke into a store, I get to listen to the store owner and I can deal with this child with a better perspective. If I deal with social services, talking about the child's issues or problems, I as the school can take this further information, rather than a child misbehaving and you kick them out, not knowing that you are just sending them back to a repetitive pattern.

Senator Raine: Thank you. That was well-explained.

The Chair: I have a CD from Deputy Minister Dale McFee, who used to be the chief of police for Prince Albert. I will share it with any senators who would like to see the hub concept. It is in

English only. It is a Saskatchewan piece of work, but I will share with any senators who wish to see it. Thank you for the great explanation.

Senator Demers: Good morning, Mr. Bird, and thank you for the great presentation.

I have two questions. Young First Nation women are particularly overrepresented in the correctional system. Why is this the case, according to you? What preventative measures are being taken in First Nations communities to keep young women out of the system, and what main obstacle do communities face in this regard? It seems there are more women in jail than men, from what we heard at the last meeting.

Mr. Bird: Thank you for the question, senator. As I stated, this is a new file for me, justice. In the couple meetings that I have had with leadership, this information was not given to me, nor was it prepared for my appearance here, so I cannot answer definitely as to why First Nations women have such a high representation in incarceration or what is being done to prevent that.

However, I can tell you that I have had an opportunity tour a healing lodge for women. I have been able to learn in my tour, as well as from talking to the federal correctional investigator, that it is something that definitely works. You are removing a First Nation woman from what may be a hostile environment or situation and providing them an opportunity to equip, for lack of a better term. I have seen ceremonial rooms within this healing lodge and an opportunity for the inmates to be engaged in the community.

In talking to the leadership, despite the great opportunities I have been able to see of the inmates interacting with the communities, it was even more so with the last administration of that facility. That is something that they miss. That is something they have seen as a very progressive and productive way of healing our First Nations women who were in that facility, and that is something that they would like to see again. Unfortunately, for one reason or another, the administration at that time drew back the ability and the opportunity to engage in the community. I do recall our First Nations leaders talking about sundances and raindances and community feasts that they used to be engaged in in the neighbouring community.

Senator Demers: When you presented your exposé at the beginning, there was something that really hit me. There were a lot of good things in it, by the way, Mr. Bird. Twenty years have elapsed, and incarceration seems to be so much more that you are building more jails. Was it a lack of planned structures? To me, when you start 20 years ago, there should be a major improvement and the building of fewer jails. Now, you are building more jails 20 years later. To be successful, you have to have a plan. You have to have the structure. You can blame anyone around, but someone is just not doing the right thing to put these kids in a positive situation so that they are going to become good citizens. Now, we are building more jails. How will it be in 2023?

Mr. Bird: Your question is: With 20 years of realizing that we have a problem and continuing to build jails, what is being done about it? Who will do something about it?

Senator Demers: Yes.

Mr. Bird: I am just looking back at my notes as to exactly when and how I said it. I apologize; it is a lot of chicken scratch.

Senator Demers: It is on page 8.

Mr. Bird: Thank you very much.

Senator Demers: Towards the end, a couple paragraphs before the end.

Mr. Bird: Thank you. For some reason, it is page 5 in my notes, but I do see it. The Correctional Service of Canada "has had 20 years to address issues of relationship, trust and risk management in the implementation of section 81." Section 81 and section 84 refer to Aboriginal engagement. They refer to implementing the Gladue report. I believe that was in 1995. All it is talking about, if I am not mistaken, is a lack of movement. Like I said, I had an opportunity to speak with the federal correctional investigator on his report that was released two months ago -- fairly recently -- and he recognized that the federal system is dropping the ball in trying to ensure that the Gladue report is being followed and that every measure is taken to understand the Aboriginal offender before they have to be put away in jails. After reading an article about the Gladue report, I have asked the correctional investigator whether there is any substance to what I read in terms of Ontario and Alberta being the only ones trying to push for that recommendation. He said yes. In fact, those are the only two provinces that are investing their time in following those recommendations.

Comment [KL13]: Verified in Mr. Bird's written presentation.

That is all that I can say with regard to why we are building more jails. I guess that is what you get when you have a tough on crime federal government mandate. We, as First Nations people, have always said that prevention will definitely do more than punishment.

Senator Seth: Thank you very much for being here. It is quite interesting. I see that, in Saskatchewan: "Statistically, First Nations make up 59.99% of the incarceration population in this province." This says that, "Statistics Canada predicts that First Nation incarceration will increase further by 2017, due to the Criminal Code amendments and mandatory sentencing provisions imposed by the federal government. Prisons are playing an increasing role in First Nations lives, [which] will only intensify with the Safe Streets and Communities Act passed last year."

Comment [KL14]: Used this, instead of "per cent" as that is the way it appeared in the presentation being quoted.

Comment [KL15]: Verified in Mr. Bird's written presentation.

Comment [KL16]: Verified in written presentation.

Could you elaborate on what this means?

Mr. Bird: Can you repeat the latter part of your question?

Senator Seth: "Statistics Canada predicts that First Nation incarceration will increase further by 2017 due to the Criminal Code amendments and mandatory sentencing provisions imposed by the federal government. Prisons are playing an increasing role in First Nations lives, [which] will only intensify with the Safe Streets and Communities Act passed last year."

Comment [KL17]: As above, verified in written presentation.

I would just like to understand this better.

Mr. Bird: Thank you very much. I am glad that you brought up that very issue, the Criminal Code amendments and mandatory sentencing provisions imposed by the Safe Streets and Communities Act, passed last year is. Alluding to what I previously said, the getting tough on crime mandate is basically exercising the law more extensively for more laws broken. In my understanding, that is the way I can summarize it best. This also refers to what many of our leadership have said in the past. One reason we have so many First Nations people in our jails to begin with is because they cannot afford lawyers, and we have -- I do not know what you call them -- Legal Aid, the people who are supposed to advise you on the laws. They are basically telling their clients, "If you just plead guilty, you will save yourself from going to trial. It will be a lot easier, and you will go back to your community in half the time if you are found guilty by the judge and the court or the jury."

It is a fast track to ensure that the poor and the underprivileged segment of a population will go straight to jail. If you have anyone who knows the system and who has money to pay lawyers, they will not be going to jail. This, to me, is what it says. When you have a mandate to get tougher on crime, that is only going to impact the segment that cannot afford lawyers, that are already streamlined into jails. That, to me, is what it says.

Senator Seth: Is it not damaging to the people who are incarcerated? The longer they stay in jail, the worse it is.

Mr. Bird: Yes, it will definitely have a detrimental impact. Our staff members and our leadership are saying that when you have a system that is even more fine-tuned to ensure that we catch the bad guys -- I am a teacher by trade and tend to talk like this -- then you have a real problem. You are putting more rules on top of the rules for a major portion of the people who statistically will go to jail and do not have an understanding of the legal system that is sending them to jail.

Senator Seth: What was in the Safe Streets and Communities Act that was passed last year?

Mr. Bird: I cannot explain that in detail; I apologize. The briefing that I had is basically that if we have more rules, we have more problems for the people who will definitely be impacted the most in terms of Aboriginal people.

Senator Patterson: Thank you for a very thoughtful and comprehensive presentation.

I would like to focus on one of the themes that you discussed in the justice matters section of your presentation, education, and rely on your background as an educator and as a participant in the Joint Task Force on Education and Employment, as I understand it.

This is a kind of Ottawa view, but a couple of important reports came out last year on education: one from this committee and one from a special panel created by the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada. Their recommendations would have dealt with the per capita funding disparity that you talked about for Aboriginal children compared to provincial education systems.

We have heard, since those reports were released, that it will be a priority of the federal government, AANDC and the minister to work on education reform. We know that, like you, the Grand Chief of the AFN has a strong background in education and has talked about making education a priority. It is all about developing a First Nation education act that would target federal funding to schools ensuring that it is focused on education and would lead to the development of a formula that might be better or fairer than the present ways of allocating money.

As someone active in Aboriginal affairs in Saskatchewan and participating in the Joint Task Force on Education and Employment, are you optimistic that a First Nations education act, which I understand AANDC is consulting with First Nations on now, would give us some hope in dealing with the lifelong learning theme that you talked about, which we all know is implicated in reducing involvement in the justice system? Are you hopeful that this is an area where we are making progress and agreement on priorities?

Mr. Bird: I am glad that you raised the point in terms of education. We can all agree that preventive measures are invaluable when it comes to justice.

I also want to state for the record, first and foremost, that I do not believe we need an education act to have the same amount of funding as the provincial school system has. It is just a matter of the priority of any jurisdiction that has education, namely, the federal system. With regard to Aboriginal Affairs consulting with First Nations, I believe that an education panel toured the whole country in less than a year. It is not consultation when you have the panel members trying to sell you on legislation. In my biased opinion, it is just a formality.

With regard to whether I am hopeful that the development of an education act would benefit First Nations, after speaking to our last assembly, it was obvious that many of our First Nations accept education legislation as becoming the new reality when introduced in 2014. They cannot see themselves fighting that any longer because some part of it is being forced. However, some First Nations are saying that since it is going to be coming upon us anyway, we might as well try to influence it in any small way.

That is not consultation. If you are going to treat a person with respect, you go to them and have a relationship. You do not say: We are going to have a consultation; we are going to tour across the country; we are going to be in your province, so show up or do not show up; and we are going to talk to you about legislation maybe twice within the span of this education panel. The majority of our First Nations in Saskatoon on February 8 decided that this was not the way to consult and not the duty to consult First Nations, when you have a handful of First Nations preselected to show up on one afternoon. The morning of that so-called consultation was First Nations technicians and the afternoon was the leadership. I heard a number of First Nations say that if this is going to impact the children, then all 74 First Nations should have a timely consultation process. That is all that is missing.

I strongly agree that we need to work together -- First Nations, the federal government and the provincial government -- to ensure the end goal: a better education for our kids. We cannot fast track it. We need to work together in a meaningful way. I agree; and I hope that answers your question.

The Chair: We have other people on the second round, so respectfully, shorter questions and responses would be helpful.

Senator Patterson: Our committee, which studied this subject, recommended a First Nations education act, so maybe we are part of the problem. I do not know.

Education is implicated in problems with the law. The concern that we experienced, and we heard from First Nations leaders involved in education, was that the money that comes from Aboriginal Affairs for education goes to band councils right now and can be diverted to other priorities. The idea of the education act was to ensure that the monies allocated for education go to schools and students. I will just ask you whether that makes any sense to you.

Mr. Bird: I believe you are asking about financial accountability, senator, which is a very hot topic these days, especially with where we are right now. I heard a very passionate leader who cares very strongly about his community talk exactly about that. He said that we have non-First Nations governments that are not following accountability in finances, yet we have new laws that are impacting our First Nations people. Why are there two sets of standards? We can see that accountability in finances needs to be a priority for everyone.

I do not disagree that there are some First Nations that may take that opportunity to offset the cost of housing, for example, or some area of their community that is underfunded. In my short time as an educator, I can tell you that teachers are being underpaid because of the simple fact that education is underfunded. Schools are being neglected because of the simple fact that education is underfunded. If for some reason schools, teachers and the whole education system are being shortchanged because of band councils somehow siphoning the money, I have not seen that.

I am here to serve our First Nations governments, but top of mind is always the children of our First Nations people. If I see an injustice, I do make that point. It does not matter who I am in front of.

Senator Tannas: Thank you for coming, chief. We appreciate your presentation. I have a very quick question. Unfortunately, although I will try to make it about justice, it is about education. Can you talk a little bit from your perspective around truancy and your experience with the communities where you have taught and their response to kids not making it to school?

Mr. Bird: Any time that you have a young child or a student who needs that extra connection from home to school, it is a good investment. I have had an opportunity to work as community liaison in the city of Saskatoon. The parents who cannot afford to go to school really valued that a sincere, respectful person was checking up as to why their kids were not going to school. When you have a big school in a big city, you lose track of some of the kids. It is very hard to start developing a prejudice, saying, oh, this child is not there because they live in this neighbourhood, for example. Perhaps they are babysitting or whatever the case. It is not a poor investment to have extra.

First and foremost is funding. Investment should be at the school. Second is supportive measures to ensure that the school and the home have a strong connection. I hope that answers your question.

Senator Tannas: Thank you.

Senator Watt: Thank you for your presentation. Some of us do live similar to where you live. You live on a reserve. I do not live on a reserve but, in a sense, it is very similar. I am in the sub-Arctic. I appreciate the points you have raised.

I would like to put on the record what we heard approximately two and a half weeks ago from a Professor Jane Dickson-Gilmore, who made a presentation to us basically telling us that we were not really focusing in the right direction in terms of dealing with Aboriginal people across the board, whether it is First Nation, the Metis or the Inuit.

In her testimony to the committee, Jane Dickson-Gilmore, Associate Professor in the Department of Law and Legal Studies at Carleton University, stated that, based on her research of Aboriginal communities, Aboriginal communities and restorative justice initiatives, including sentencing reform, are unable to address the problem of crime and conflicts in the Aboriginal community and furthermore do not provide solutions to the problem of Aboriginal over-representation in the criminal justice system.

How would you respond to the assertion that the community and restorative justice approach are not effective as a solution to the Aboriginal over-representation in the criminal system?

Mr. Bird: Thank you for bringing that to my attention, senator. I do have the notes as to your last meeting, and I did catch that as well. I do not agree that restorative justice does not work. I believe that it has not been properly implemented and it has not been given the proper amount of -- I would not say time, but an opportunity to show that it does work. I do think that restorative justice goes back to what I have always said, and I stand by what I have said: First Nations people know their problems and they know their solutions. Going back to the Chairman's point, in the N.W.T., before the introduction of RCMP, all you had was restorative justice. The introduction of the RCMP with the 700 per cent spike in incarceration just proves the professor's words invalid, in my view.

Senator Watt: In a sense, what she was pointing to was that it could work, I do agree with you, providing that conditions in the community have managed to improve themselves, not if the community is going to continue to starve economically. You talked about investment in school, and I think not only investment in school is required in order for people to catch up, so-called closing the gap. We will never succeed in closing the gap unless the community is made to feel that they are part of the system and they have full rights to enjoy the benefits that any other Canadian has. That is not the situation today.

I know for a fact that the First Nations do not pay taxes if they are on reserve. The Inuit pay taxes even if they are within their own category 1 land per se, which is identical to reserve land. This problem needs to be rectified because our purchasing power varies right across the board. You are probably aware of that, even though you do not pay taxes. Maybe there is no chance in the community for an economy to flourish on that account so that the fact that you do not pay taxes does not make any difference in your lifestyle.

In a sense, if the committee is going to come up with responsible recommendations, not only does it have to make an investment in the school, but it has to make an investment in housing, provide access to good drinking water, and access to whatever is accessible to Canadians. We are so far from that.

Do you not think that restorative justice will only work depending on how you feel in the community? If you have to comply with a system that is not your own, that creates animosity within the community. That needs to be removed.

If that is not removed, I do not see a positive future for our people. Would you share the sentiment?

Mr. Bird: You want me to share my sentiment with you with regard to taxes?

Senator Watt: No. That is just the one aspect. It is not only the tax issue.

Mr. Bird: Let me try to rephrase your many sentiments. You talk about how First Nations pay no taxes; the Inuit do pay taxes. The problem needs to be rectified so First Nations can realize purchasing power.

I live in the city of Saskatoon and own a house and have a mortgage, and I somehow do not pay taxes.

Senator Watt: If you are outside the reserve, you are supposed to be paying taxes.

Mr. Bird: That is correct. That is what I am saying.

Senator Watt: That is what you pay.

Mr. Bird: That is what I am saying.

The community feeling that it is a part of the solution is up to the community. As a First Nation, I believe you are sovereign. I cannot speak for all the First Nations at this point. Having previously held the portfolios of justice and education did not provide me with an opportunity to talk about taxes.

With regard to many of our First Nations who have signed the convention to the federation, they come from treaty First Nations. I believe the treaty First Nations have outstanding federal government treaty obligations that have never been fulfilled; namely, education and justice in terms of the RCMP. I mentioned the Beardy's-Okemasis, as an example.

What you are alluding to is that fixing the problem can work in some parts of world. However, when you have a First Nation that has signed on to a treaty, a covenant, it is up to that First Nation how they want to go about managing their affairs and their communities. At the federation, we believe that these First Nations are sovereign. I can tell you that some of the First Nations are doing a fantastic job of ensuring that they protect the little bit of ancestral land they have. The majority has been stripped away.

As a collective, those lands are an integral part of a First Nations' identity. It has been argued many times that when you divide that up to ensure you have purchasing power, you lose one's sense of communal identity.

I would be very cautious to say that if you have the First Nations pay taxes, you fix the problem. It goes beyond 1905, with the establishment of the Province of Saskatchewan; beyond the 1870s, with the establishment of the treaties; and beyond 1492, with the arrival of Columbus.

That is an issue that only a community can answer, which is why the duty to consult is so important. When you have a relationship with a First Nation, perhaps you can have dialogue, but that is up to that First Nation.

Senator Watt: I go back to your point that you need to invest in education.

You and I believe that we need more investment from the government in the community, not only for education purposes, but also for the infrastructure requirement of those communities. Only then would I say that maybe the restorative justice issue would start to move forward in a positive direction, but it depends on how the community feels.

That is what I am trying to say; I am not arguing with you on the question of taxation. I raised the taxation issue to indicate that even though people on the reserve do not pay taxes, they still have financial difficulties in terms of purchasing power.

We have a problem in the Arctic that is similar to yours. Those people living on reserves do not pay taxes, because there is no money to be made on the reserve itself.

Mr. Bird: I have been to the Arctic, and I have friends in the Arctic.

With regard to more investment by the federal government, I do not think we are asking for more. I think it is what rightfully should go to First Nations. I think it is a debt that should be properly acknowledged.

In our era, there is no reason why a First Nation school should have less funding in comparison to the provincial school system.

Senator Watt: In a sense, rather than looking at it as a gift from the federal government, you say it should be considered as part of the royalties that you are entitled to. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. Bird: I am cautious to use the word "royalties" at the moment. For that reason, I have to reserve my response, because I do not know that "royalties" would be the appropriate term to use.

Senator Watt: Let us put it this way: You want them to benefit from access to resources.

Mr. Bird: I have said time and again that our First Nations need access to resources. We talk about the traditional economy. There needs to be a fine balance to ensure we have ownership of the land and are able to use it in a fair, equitable, and sustainable way, with the new economies that are knocking at the doors.

The Chair: Thank you very much, vice-chief and senator.

Senator Dyck: To get back to the criminal justice system: In your presentation, you were talking about preventing crime. During some of the questioning, you talked about a youth who was being released from some kind of facility and had to reintegrate into the community.

Are there any indigenous programs that deal specifically with or have solutions for reintegrating youth into the community once they have brushed up against the law?

Mr. Bird: Not to my knowledge.

Senator Dyck: To follow up on that idea, certainly reintegration of both adult and youth into the community is probably a big factor in decreasing recidivism or sending people back to jail. They just keep doing the same thing over and over again. My concern is with youth, because we all know that the demographics of the Aboriginal population are such that the majority of the population is under the age of 25. Do you think, therefore, that there should be a study done on Aboriginal youth to determine ways of preventing them from getting into trouble and reintegrating them if they get into trouble, so that we have an opportunity here to change things around? The education part will do it as well, but we also need a focus on the criminal justice system, especially for those communities where the likelihood is increased that they will end up getting into trouble. Do you think such a study would be of importance and worthy of doing?

Mr. Bird: I most definitely think so -- any time we can have a spotlight, I will call it, with the Senate around the table as it has the authority to grant such a study. I would recommend and strongly support that endeavor.

Senator Dyck: To go off topic for a minute, since so many have, I will follow up my question of truancy. In my years of going to school, which were many, I was not truant. However, I recall when my older brother was in about grade 1 or 2 in North Battleford. He and his friend, who was the son of an RCMP officer, were picked up for being truant. That was my, or my brother's, experience.

The Chair: I am sure he appreciates your announcing that nationally, senator. It will be appreciated, so we will make sure he finds out.

Senator Raine: I want to go back to the protocol that you signed in 2012 with the RCMP. What is the vision of the First Nations in Saskatchewan for policing services on reserves? Is it the RCMP or what we in British Columbia call tribal police or is it community peacekeepers? You hit on the fact that it has to come from within to have peace, security and safety on the reserves. Could you paint the vision and the steps that you see going forward?

Mr. Bird: With regard to the vision of the FSIN, which gets its mandate from the chiefs in assembly for all 74 First Nations, you are right: Any time our First Nations can have a direct role in restorative justice measures, or, in this case, policing, it is ideal. With regard to tribal policing, some First Nations have taken it upon themselves to have their own security, which definitely lends to the overall vision of what our First Nations would like to see. If it is not possible to have a tribal police force, then they would like to see adequate RCMP involvement in their communities with adequate police resources.

Senator Raine: You mentioned that good governance is essential on reserves to have these kinds of things in place. As I see it, the hub system is part of that governance structure. Many things have to fall in place. It is kind of like the chicken and the egg. What is the role of First Nation governance in directing restorative justice and policing?

Mr. Bird: It has to come from the community. First Nations governance is only the mouthpiece of the body, and the body is First Nations community members. Any time that First Nations members have the ability and authority to apply pressure to First Nations government, you have the best possible resource available to speak on behalf of that First Nations community in dealing with the police. Many of our First Nations communities have a policing management board made up of community members. Often, the leadership -- the governance piece -- is in place as a supportive measure. Many of our First Nations have that inside-out approach. It is something that needs to be implemented more in different communities.

The Chair: I have a lot more confidence in terms of how things are moving in Saskatchewan. I know the deputy minister there as well, and I think he is a strong proponent of successful communities. I also know that the commanding officer of the RCMP will be a strong supporter.

I truly appreciate your comments today and your frank dialogue with members of the committee, who at times were off track but you were good at getting them back on track. Thank you very much. We are adjourned.

Attachments: PS-SP-#758609-1-NOTES -- ECONOMICS OF POLICING SUMMIT -- JANUARY 2013.DOCX

Good afternoon,

As you may be aware, I had the opportunity to attend the Economics of Policing Summit that took place in Ottawa on January 16-17, 2013. I'm sharing with you my notes from the Summit, as well as an introductory summary of recurring themes I noted during the discussions. Claude/Daniel, you may wish to share these notes with Regional Managers as well.

LPB has committed to making the Summit presentations available electronically. I'll let you know when the presentations are posted to the Public Safety web site. The final, official report on Summit discussions is expected to be ready in March.

In the meantime, I invite you to review the attached notes. I would be happy to respond to any questions you may have.

Thank you,

Rebecca

Please note: these notes were taken by APD officials during the Economics of Policing Summit, held in Ottawa, Ontario on January 16 and 17, 2013. They have been developed to inform internal APD and CSPB discussions, and are not intended to constitute an official report on the Summit. An official report on the Summit is expected to be made available by the end of March 2013.

Bold type is used to indicate remarks of particular interest.

Recurring themes

- Concern about the paucity of research in this area led to calls for federal government and private sector funding to support related research and the creation of a national research institute. Curt Griffiths, Simon Fraser University, remarked that we're making multi-million dollar decisions based on opinion, politics, and personalities rather than data or research. Debra Frazer, Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police (CACP), noted that Police Chiefs want to see additional research in five specific areas, to be announced in March, and will seek funding support from the federal and provincial governments and the private sector.
- We need to do a better job of tracking and demonstrating policing outcomes – underscored by Minister Toews, B.C.'s Minister Bond, and RCMP Commissioner Paulson, among others.
- There was a fundamental difference of opinion regarding the purpose of innovation in policing, i.e., innovating to make policing more effective vs. innovating to cut policing costs. Linda Duxbury, Carleton University, asked: do we want to reduce costs or do we want to reduce crime? In her view, these are two separate questions and goals. Speakers tended to fall into one of three camps:

    - Participants who had been forced to create efficiencies and innovative ways of functioning because policing budgets were reduced (e.g., Sara Thornton, Chief Constable, Thames Valley, UK).

    - Those who called for innovation to keep pace with change and improve effectiveness (e.g., Jim Chu, Chief of Police, Vancouver Police Department and President, CACP; Dale McFee, Deputy Minister, Corrections and Policing, Saskatchewan).

    - Those who cautioned that there is no room for additional investment in policing, and that police in Canada need to work with governments and other stakeholders to innovate and adjust (e.g., Minister Toews).

- Several law enforcement representatives, including Commissioner Paulson, noted that police culture is resistant to change and that police are risk-averse. Benoit Dupont, Université de Montréal, observed that it's difficult to encourage police to embrace risk while we are creating more accountability mechanisms.
- There was considerable focus on vulnerable groups within society, the need for adequate treatment for people suffering from mental illness – this was emphasized as a huge drain on police resources.
- It is difficult to identify a consensus emerging from the Summit, given the diversity of perspectives and points of view presented. Public Safety Canada has committed to the following next steps:

    - Collective drafting of a shared forward agenda, including the identification of next steps (Spring 2013).

    - Follow up with other levels of government and stakeholders (engagement/collaboration phase) (Spring/Summer 2013). Ontario, British Columbia and Saskatchewan have each agreed to champion one of the three pillars around which the Summit discussions were organized: Ontario will champion Pillar #1, Efficiencies within Police Services; Saskatchewan will champion Pillar #2, New Models of Community Safety; and, British Columbia will champion Pillar #3, Efficiencies within the Justice System.

    - Develop concrete set of actions/shared forward agenda for policing in Canada, for consideration by Ministers in Fall 2013.

Day One

Speaker: Vic Toews, Minister of Public Safety, Welcoming Address

- Conversation at the Summit will be about the evolution and sustainability of policing. These are challenging times, with greater financial constraints and greater public expectations.
- The federal government cannot "buy" a solution by investing more money.
- Spending on policing has steadily increased, but the volume and severity of crime are on the decline. More public scrutiny with respect to police budgets.
- Police performance measures are not standardized or widely reported.
- Need to look at efficiencies in policing and more effective ways to address crime.
- Expects policing reviews under way in provinces and federally to translate into more effective policing.
- Canadian police services have an opportunity to get ahead of the curve and respond with well-thought out strategies – drawing on ideas such as tiered policing, partnerships, use of the private sector, HR management, cost recovery, improved technology, and integrated efforts by multiple local agencies, especially focusing on children and youth at risk.
- Other countries (US, UK, New Zealand) have had to take drastic action to control costs and reform policing.
- Police services have two options:
  1. Do nothing and be forced to cut budgets drastically, or
  2. Get ahead of the curve and play a role in implementing reforms.
- Need to turn the fiscal challenge into an opportunity, and we can only do this through the constructive engagement of everyone involved.
- Need to improve service and accountability to all Canadians.
- We have to tackle the issue from every angle, including the possibility of legislative change.
- We need a sustained commitment, over the long term.
- Confident we can create a sustainable vision for policing in Canada.

Speaker: Shirley Bond, Minister of Justice and AG, British Columbia, Welcoming Remarks

- To sustain excellence and responsiveness we need to ensure police have tools to protect the public.
- In Charlottetown, January 2012, Ministers resolved we needed to face this issue.
- How the justice system continues to adapt is critical.
- Governments don't have the luxury of spending more without knowing how we will measure results. We can't just add more resources.
- Crime rates in Canada are at historic lows.
- Public expectations are growing, but we're facing fiscal challenges.
- The desire for more police visibility has cost implications.
- Provincially, we are planning to release a policing plan with policing goals for B.C. over the next decade.
- Criminal justice system – complicated due to shared jurisdiction.

- Jurisdictions across Canada need to be nimble. Our taxpayers don't accept finger-pointing. They want effective services, and they don't care where the money comes from. We have to ensure we get the best return on taxpayers' investments.
- We need to find better ways of doing things. I'm a firm believer that before we add more resources, we need to ensure the billions we are already spending are being used effectively.
- In B.C., we are working hard to reform the entire justice system. We consulted broadly with criminal justice system partners. They told us the system was affected by a culture of delay. An independent review was conducted as well.
- This led to an October White Paper, intended to increase transparency and reduce court delays.
- In B.C., the crime rate has dropped 33 per cent. The Justice Reform Plan will address this paradox of declining crime rates vs. rising costs and delay.
- Prime BC System – a records database that tracks and analyzes crime – has led to additional arrests, and works across jurisdictions.
- Amendments to the B.C. Police Act to require information sharing across services.
- Identified drivers of rising costs: expectations; demands; events and technology.
- More than half of recommendations in Oppal report refer to policing.
- There is no endless pot of money, so how do we deliver effective policing?
- Salaries have risen significantly. Need good HR management in critical areas. We need to ensure labour costs are reasonable. In some cases, we need to think outside the policing box.
- In B.C., we created an immediate roadside prohibition to deal with impaired driving – using administrative sanctions to suspend and fine impaired drivers on the spot. The program pays for itself.
- The program was challenged in the courts but was worth doing.
- Policing costs are a worldwide challenge.
- In the U.K., thousands of officers have lost their jobs.
- In Canada, we are not there yet, but we need to continue our cooperation and discussion, and look at cost containment over the long term.

Pillar # 1: EFFICIENCIES WITHIN POLICE SERVICES

Panel: Evolution of Policing

Paul McKenna, Dalhousie University, Moderator -- policing is central to our capacity for living in society; responds to basic need for order, security, risk and truth

Alok Muhkerjee, President, CAPB – spoke to origins of Toronto Police Board

- Noted that if the trend in increasing policing costs is not reversed, local governments' ability to pay for other services will be severely undermined.
- Need a strategy to produce lasting results rather than a short-term, ad hoc response.
- We do not have a sound economic model for policing in Canada. We finance municipal policing through the local tax base, but we cannot actually demonstrate the impact of this model on community safety, economic development, etc.
- Noted Ontario's work on the Future of Policing and the four working groups convened pursuant to those efforts.

Jim Chu, Chief of Police, Vancouver Police Department and President, CACP

- Reviewed policing history and provided forecast of where things may be headed.
- Police used to be the social agency of last resort – now they are often the social agency of first resort
- Noted level of oversight is higher than ever before, increased public/media scrutiny due to social media and "unstructured accountability"
- Need to find new ways to connect with the public

Sara Thornton, Chief Constable, Thames Valley, UK

- Current approach to policing focuses on devolution and transparency
- "Cut the budget, not the front-line service."
- Reducing crime and improving service are important, but important to cut costs as well.
- Central government grant was cut by about 20 per cent; greater impact on heavily urban areas that are much more dependent on government grants than the local tax base – acknowledged a risk that this reinforced inequality.
- To improve productivity,
    - Realized 1/3 of savings by looking at value for money, procurement, cuts to O & M, use of fleet, eliminated some accommodations
    - Reviewed pay conditions – cut back on a variety of allowances
    - Improved collaboration – with neighbouring force, share traffic support, dog handlers, technology.
    - Removed a layer of management, thus creating shorter lines of communication.
    - Streamlined processes, encouraged officers and public to self-serve, e.g. prefer to have people obtain information they need by looking on-line.
    - Tripled the number of special constables over the past five years.
- Also emphasized importance of maintaining a solid reputation for police services: "professionalism is the key to police legitimacy". Her ideas included:

  - Introduction of a leadership Program.
  - Providing officers with greater flexibility to use their discretion.
  - Providing more services to victims of crime.
  - Consolidations of police regulations, policy (600 UK documents) into one simple library of knowledge.
  - Introduction of College of Policing in the UK.
- Her advice for proceeding:
  - Strong leadership needed – take the heat and hold steady
  - Alignment – need to repeat the same messages until the language within the organization starts to change/adapt.
  - Understanding the politics
  - Try to be the "good King" – with power comes responsibility to benefit the whole community and organization.

Question: In Canada we have identified best practices, but have little evidence to back them up – e.g. only do a victimization survey every five years in Canada. We need to have better evidence, regular crime surveys.

Answer (Thornton): evidence-based practice is key. Important to establish better relationship with universities. However, relationship between reported crime levels and crime levels as indicated by the British Crime Survey are fairly consistent.

(Chu) – POLIS is looking at metrics. Individual police agencies may publish satisfaction surveys; this is an important measure.

Question: How important was it in the UK to develop an integrated strategy of community safety that included other sectors? How did that influence public confidence?

Answer (Thornton): this approach was supported more strongly by the previous administration. Right now the structures exist but tend to be bureaucratic; it's not clear they are leading to better outcomes.

(Chu) – it's incumbent on all police agencies to work with other agencies, e.g. health authorities, but privacy legislation creates roadblocks.

Question: In Canada we have federal, provincial, territorial, municipal and police representatives here today – how in this context can we bring levels together to begin making the changes? What is the starting point?

Answer:

(Muhkerjee) – operational change is messy; we have to seize the opportunity.

- Importance of political will – encouraging to hear federal and provincial Ministers speaking similar language. Need to ensure we don't get stuck in jurisdictional ambiguities

(Thornton) – there's no master plan; different forces find themselves in different places.
- but we know collaboration and sharing resources saves money; outsourcing saves money; and stripping out management saves money.

Lunchtime Keynote Speaker: RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson

- Not sure how to measure productivity within RCMP. Police culture may seem immune to productivity questions. We don't tend to examine the granular portions of our business. He has asked federal policing officials to come up with a way to measure productivity.
- Incredible innovation in police service delivery.
- Need to measure how well we are preventing crime
- Concept of "progressive restrictiveness" – proliferation of criminal justice procedural protections and requirements may prevent us from moving forward– e.g., disclosure requirements.
- Need to develop leaders with a greater commitment to professionalism. Police tend to resist change.
- Need to develop consistent and reliable measures and measuring systems for productivity, efficiency and effectiveness.
- Need to build specific structures and programs to advance innovation in policing.

Jim Bueermann, President, Police Foundation, Washington, D.C.

- New reality – 80 per cent of US police Departments have experienced budget restrictions since 2008. We're displacing funding from libraries, parks, etc. in order to fund police.
- Environment is an opportunity or a threat for Chiefs of Police; traditional mental models and paradigms are being challenged.
- There are generational differences – e.g., wrt collective work ethic, sense of entitlement.
- Communities are becoming less tolerant and sometimes critical of police officer compensation, in conflict with union perspectives.
- Elected leaders are paying attention.
- Observed that when it comes to policing in the new economy, few are motivated by more effective policing.
- Strategies for adjusting have included reducing the workforce through furloughs, attrition, laying off civilians; reducing service delivery and using technology to mitigate the impact; having new recruits pay for their police academy training, which has socio-economic implications for who can afford to join the force; eliminating or regionalizing special units; outsourcing and contracting
- New emphasis on police as connectors, building links among scarce community resources, aimed at co-production of community safety.
- New approach involves: research, evidence-based strategies; partnership with any and all; technology and leveraging; and use of volunteers everywhere.

Question: Can innovative policing approaches be proposed to Ministers?

Answer (Paulson): we fail, at times, to challenge limits

- Need to do a better job in managing risk

- Have to be informed, honest, regarding limits that are being imposed by and on the criminal justice system.
- Judges need to be mindful of practical implications of their decisions.

Question: You talked about new systems to measure productivity and innovation. Who should be doing it?

Answer (Paulson): need to build a web of inclusion, create teams and offices to move forward with innovative thinking, create avenues to work around boundaries.

Question: As police departments are downsized, will crime rates go through the roof? Have there been any studies, what is the general feeling about what will happen as police departments are reduced in size?

Answer (Bueermann): police unions believe reducing officers leads to a spike in crime rates, but how do we know? We need to evaluate this, and answer a fundamental question about how many police officers we need.

Question: Can you comment on the change in the ratio of volunteers to police?

Answer (Bueermann): we returned to focusing on outcomes

- Added a police anthropologist to learn about police culture.
- We needed to think about the minimum amount of tasks that a police officer has to do – we looked at the park ranger program, aviation system
- We hired retired police officers in some instances.

Panel: Finding the Right Balance: Civilianization, Privatization and Tiered Policing

Moderator: Benoit Dupont, Université de Montréal – spoke about resilience, the capacity of systems to withstand, recover and adapt to external shocks.

Curt Griffiths, Simon Fraser University

- We speak about evidence-based policing, but there is little connection among academics, police and decision-makers.
- Research center used to exist at former Solicitor General Canada; has now disappeared. There is no central clearinghouse to disseminate research.
- We're now confronting critical issues, but without the academic research we need to inform our positions and decisions.
- Multi-million dollar decisions are being made about policing services, with no supporting information – based on opinion, politics, personalities rather than data or research.
- Called for creation of a national research institute.
- With respect to civilianization, we know it is supposed to be cost-effective and free up officers, but we don't really know the consequences or effectiveness. Civilianization could end up costing more money – e.g. if you hire highly-trained civilians as opposed to police constables.
- For many, "sustainability" is a code word for "cheaper".
- Some private sector practices may apply to policing, but others may not – can't stuff everything into an economic model; we need to talk about more than costs.
- In UK, evaluations of the use of community constables look good on paper with respect to increasing police visibility – but they are not viewed as replacing police, and there is limited information on outcomes. Need to consider questions such as how you would limit community constables' exposure to high risk people, e.g., people with mental illness. Need to establish safeguards.
- We have a particular problem in Canada – there is no oversight of private security officers in Canada, and no best practices have been established. Again, mentioned concerns about interaction between private security officers and high-risk members of the public.
- Importance of consulting community.

Mike Cunningham, Chief Constable, Staffordshire Police, UK

- UK is "standing on the burning platform of public expenditure"
- Sense of urgency re: need for reform
- Challenge: cut costs while meeting public/stakeholder expectations to maintain or improve service and performance
- Staffordshire Police faced a budget reduction of £38M, with potential further reductions beyond 2014-2015.

- 86% of budget was spent on staff. To reduce payload, implemented changes including recruitment freeze, attrition, forced retirement after 30 years. Noted it's difficult to re-shape if you can't add new recruits.
- Returned to first principles, prioritized growth in e.g. dealing with vulnerable adults and children through a multi-agency safeguarding hub
- Need to look at reform across the board, including other public sector partners in health, education, etc. These areas are also affected by budget cuts.
- We found it efficient to bring in technical experts from the private sector to assist us in changing our business practices.
- Advice for working with the private sector: be clear about what is required; build capacity rather than reliance; find innovative ways of paying – raised possibility of new models, joint ventures.
- "Don't waste a good crisis."

Mark LaLonde, CKR Global Risk Solutions

- Need to answer: what are core services to the public that police should provide? Of those, how many absolutely require the power of arrest and a firearm?
- Possibility of training, requirements for private security? In the UK, extensive training required to become a "bodyguard". In Canada, private policing is a provincial responsibility; there has been some interest in discussing national standards.
- Sees a number of possibilities, e.g., specialist licenses and training and advanced specialist designations for private security; generalist public police and specialist public police.
- Called for private security organizations to be integrated into the larger process.

Discussion Period:

Question: Do we know what the public expects from public policing? Has there been research in this area?

Answer: (Griffiths) – need more focus group testing, more examination of high risk groups.

(LaLonde) – in private sector we deal with clients, rather than with the public. Clients approach the private sector for specialized services because they know police don't have the necessary resources or expertise.

Question: Given the volume of research that is ongoing, what is the Panel's vision? Can or should the research that is carried out be isolated within the policy domain?

Answer: (Cunningham) – the issue of public safety is broader than policing.
(Griffiths) – there is ongoing research on policing technologies, etc., but very little on policing practices. Need funding for research in this area.

(LaLonde) – suggested looking to private sector and large corporations for funding assistance to support research on policing.

Question: What is involved in the complexity of policing? There is an increase in the information we need to process. When incidents occur, we need to look for video recordings and review them. A lot of time is taken up by issues that reside outside the police service's control – we need to consider the broader picture.

Answer: (Griffiths) – we haven't looked at the downloading of provinces on city police services – the impact, for example, of a provincial decision to cut social workers and beds available for mental health patients on police services.

(Cunningham) – increasingly resource are directed to opening up historic offences that weren't investigated properly.

- We aren't currently equipped to talk clearly about the demands that people with mental health problems place on police services.

Question: One of challenges is pre-charge approval. Seeks Panel's views on idea that police are too risk-averse.

Answer: (Cunningham) – risk aversion is part of the culture. There's a need to think through problems in an entrepreneurial, risk-taking way.

- Generally, the public is very forgiving of police.

Benoit Dupont: police are not always risk averse, but they have internalized layers of accountability. It would be very difficult to foster a culture of risk-taking within the police. We cannot encourage police to take more risks while we are creating more control and accountability mechanisms. The challenge is to create positive incentives within police organizations, to encourage innovation.

Question: community safety is a right, not a privilege. While crime rates are going down, across-the-board cuts have a greater impact on communities that rely more heavily on state assistance. How do we safeguard against "solutions" that could further marginalize certain sectors of society?

Answer: Mark LaLonde – reported crime is down, but the fear of crime is increasing.

Mike Cunningham – there is a difference between being safe and feeling safe.

- If the role of policing is to keep people safe, we need to focus most on the vulnerable, those who are least safe.
- But marginal groups already get more police time than other groups – doesn't think they are in danger of being further marginalized by budget cuts.

Panel: Collective Bargaining and Arbitration in Policing

Moderator: Ed Aust, Lawyer, Aust Legal – noted that police need to be flexible, to meet the circumstances. The opportunity to solve these problems will not last long.

- Challenging relationship between boards and services
- Called on those in the room to create a reformed vision of policing in Canada, based on capacity to develop innovations.

Tom Stamatakis, President, Canadian Police Association

- Rising costs cannot simply be attributed to a flawed collective bargaining process
- Lots of discussion of police salaries being unsustainable, but no definition of "sustainable" has been reached.
- Not sure it's reasonable to expect the level of professional policing in Canada without some additional costs
- Market conditions have changed significantly over past years, and that's why we have seen increasing costs.
- Increased expectations, accountability, inquiries and commissions call for more training and higher standards.
- Briefly noted the challenge of police officers in remote and rural communities.

Fred Kaustinen, Executive Director, Ontario Association of Police Boards

- Police officers don't have the right to strike; they provide an essential service
- Concerned that the municipality's ability to pay or economic circumstances are rarely considered in collective bargaining or arbitration awards.
- Concerned that the rate of pay for a first class constable is now over $90,000 – a result that perpetuates a cycle of leapfrogging.
- In Toronto, police budgets are rising higher than the population and/or the inflation rate.
- We may need to reconsider the current system under which police officers are paid according to their rank, not according to the activities they perform. Possibility of new pay bands based on job evaluation process. May need to consider outsourcing to other municipal departments or the private sector, and using technology to eliminate or streamline some tasks.
- Need to ask: what benefits of police-delivered services must be preserved?

Question: On Twitter, you (Fred) recommended "bold action." What did you have in mind?

Answer (Kaustinen): the trend of increasing police budgets is not sustainable. We need to look at what is happening in the US and Europe. If we don't take bold steps, someone else will.

(Stamatakis) – complexity of policing is not lessening.

Both speakers agreed that the integrated community safety model is an appropriate vehicle for managing this complexity.

Question (from FCM): Will communities and taxpayers tolerate additional pay increases? How do police relate to other municipal services? How do we advance ways of doing things differently?

Answer (Stamatakis): this meeting is a good first step. I would like to see the federal government take a leadership/coordination role in developing a framework.

(Kaustinen): there are three success criteria for innovation:

1. Enabling political will and/or legislation.
2. Seed money to incent innovation.
3. Local leadership.

Dinner Speaker on the Future of Policing

Joseph Schafer, Professor, Southern Illinois University

- Talked about technological innovations that will necessitate changes in policing.
- Cautioned police services about the risk of becoming the victims of their own success – the better they are at creating efficiencies and reducing costs, the more their budgets are likely to be reduced.
- Acknowledged that changes will need to be made and efficiencies will need to be realized, but encouraged police services and decision makers to consider operating rather than amputating.

Day Two

Pillar #2: NEW MODELS OF COMMUNITY SAFETY

Panel: Research, Policing and Crime Reduction

Moderator: Curtis Clarke, Executive Director, Alberta Justice and Solicitor General Staff College

Edward Maguire, Professor, Department of Justice, Law and Society, American University, Washington, D.C.

- In the US, there is little evidence to suggest the government is investing money in effective crime prevention programs. Calls for federal government to stop funding programs following evaluation if they aren't proven effective.
- Ongoing challenges with evidence-based policing.

Stuart Kirby, Lecturer, Lancaster University, UK

- Policing very complex. External influences – society is changing faster; there are new values of individualism, consumerism. "Old" crimes like production of child pornography are now committed in new ways.
- The law and order agenda is increasingly wedded to policing, and there's more political interference than ever before.
- Media = more competitive and aggressive.
- Body of people trying to guess the next move that police will make.
- Criminals exploring new methods on the Internet
- Organizational culture is a huge issue in policing.
- Fundamental principles: procedural justice; value for money.
- There's a consensus that crime rates have fallen globally, and questions about why.
- Different models of policing, some with internal emphasis (best use of police resources); some with external emphasis (engagement with community and other resources).
- Enforcement doesn't necessarily lead to interdiction and/or conviction. Prevention more important than detection – through community policing, problem-oriented policing. These models may be difficult to implement because culturally, they may not be acceptable to police, who would rather rely on enforcement.
- Talked about transferability of approaches from one community to another.

Graham Farrell, Senior Research Fellow, Simon Fraser University

- Crime rates have plummeted in most industrialized countries since the early 1990s.
- Explored various hypotheses to explain drop in crime rates.
- Security hypothesis – huge investment in improved security over past 25 years, e.g., car theft reduced significantly by better car security. Crime can be viewed as similar to environmental pollution, in that many manufacturers give criminals easy opportunities for which society bears the cost – e.g., cell phone manufacturers don't employ security measures to prevent theft.

- According to this hypothesis, private sector can play a role in preventing crime.

Question/comment: There is a wealth of information about what works in reducing crime and is cost effective, e.g., youth programming, better parenting, education, health, housing improvements. Comments?

Answer: (Clarke) – agree; we need to take a broader look; there are public housing strategies that help prevent the formation of gangs; we know that improved parenting, housing, education also assist. We need to join together various bodies of evidence.

Comment: (Debra Frazer, President of CACP Research Committee) noted that Police Chiefs want to see additional research in five specific areas. These five areas will be revealed in March. CACP will be looking for funding support from the federal and provincial governments and the private sector.

Question (Linda Duxbury, Carleton University) – spoke about the folly of rewarding A and hoping for B. Do we want to reduce costs or do we want to reduce crime? These are two different questions and goals. If we tie our budgets to the reduction in crime, you will be punished for reducing crime because budgets will be cut.

Comment (Government of Nunavut): contrary to the reduction in crime rates observed elsewhere in Canada, the crime rate in Nunavut is increasing. If we're looking at developing a strategy, we need to include and reflect the unique situation of the Territories.

Question: what role does government have to play in looking towards a new model?

Answer: Governments have to acknowledge what police are there for.
- Governments can play a significant role in supporting policing to focus on strategy.

E. Maguire – to what level are police receiving an appropriate level of government support to enable them to do what they need to do? Government plays an important role in facilitating inter-agency cooperation.

New Models of Community Safety

Moderator: Dale McFee, DM, Corrections and Policing, Saskatchewan

- In Canada we are in "blue sky" environment; we have time to plan and innovate.
- We're here to talk about new approaches, ways to look at problem differently.
- If money is your first consideration, you won't make the best decision. A better approach is to put efficiency and effectiveness first.

Panel: Karyn McCluskey, Director, Violence Reduction Unit, Strathclyde Police Force, UK

- In Scotland, we decided to treat the problem of violence as a public health problem that is influenced by poverty, ineffective parenting and alcohol.
- Adopted the approach of making Scotland the best place in the world to bring up children.
- Multi-agency approach, introduced one phone number for all types of support.
- We train all types of professionals, e.g. dentists and veterinarians, to react to apparent signs of domestic violence.
- 60 per cent of families in Scotland are single parent families, so services set up for nuclear families don't work.
- Emphasized importance of resilience, being leaders rather than technicians, looking at assets rather than deficits, focusing on outcomes rather than processes.

Viv Rickard, Deputy Commissioner, New Zealand Police

- 2008 economic crisis in New Zealand – cut every government organization except for the police.
- The New Zealand Police Commissioner spearheaded police reform – a new focus on victims, and a reduction in the number of cases dealt with through the criminal justice system.
- Putting prevention at the forefront to reduce offending and victimization.
- Government agreed to reforms, with some skepticism.
- "Prevention First" model prioritizes youth, families, the ethnic population, and includes specific strategies to deal with alcohol, drugs and organized crime.
- Looked at alternative resolution models – e.g., could arrest someone but issue a pre-charge warning rather than laying a charge.
- Ways to free up more time for officers on the street.
- Maori people make up 15 per cent of the New Zealand population, but are disproportionately represented in the criminal justice system.

Jean-Michel Blais, Chief, Halifax Regional Police

- Halifax Regional Police introduced an integrated policing model in 2003 to reduce costs.
- Included measures such as e.g. integration of central dispatch – calls then referred to HRP or RCMP
- Joint, co-located HRP/RCMP management teams. Shared strategic communications unit and records management system.

- Need to study costs. A joint committee has been struck to look at how to optimize integration.

Question: how did you get governments involved in these new approaches?

Answer: (McCluskey): needed forward-looking statesmen.

(Rickard): Ministers in New Zealand have been very supportive.

(McFee): Politicians can either enhance or force collaboration.

Question (Rebekah Williams, Nunavut): issues with alcohol in Nunavut; noted that 98 per cent of Nunavut crime is alcohol-related. How did you approach this problem in Scotland?

Answer: (McCluskey): huge alcohol problem in Scotland – people drink because they feel hopeless.

- 80 per cent of offenders and victims have been drinking.
- Introduced ideas such as increasing the price of alcohol, making certain months "dry".

D. McFee: key elements for successful collaboration include leadership; structure, which makes it possible for agencies to align; collaboration, balance and innovation.

Lunchtime speaker – Sir Denis O'Connor – Smarter Police Reform: Changing the Odds for Success

- Huge cuts to police budgets in UK, along with a commitment to avoid reducing front-line services.
- Need strategic thinking because policing, as with everything else in public safety, is contestable.
- Tracking progress is important, especially when you are doing controversial things.
- Reform in times of austerity requires solutions that are smarter than those taken in a period of growth. It's more challenging to get better while getting smaller.
- Need compelling evidence, durable leadership and public follow-up to improve the odds of success with less funding.
- Shared view seems to be that there is a need for reform, but we are divided on what it should be. Discussion is too focused on costs. Costs should be viewed as a means to an end. He encouraged participants to maintain the momentum from the Summit.

Pillar # 3: EFFICIENCIES WITHIN THE JUSTICE SYSTEM

Panel: Streamlining the Justice System to Reduce the Costs of Policing

Moderator: Don Piragoff, Senior Assistant Deputy Minister, Justice Canada

- We face the dual challenge of increasing demands and workloads, coupled with reduced budgets.
- Over the last 20 years, it has taken much longer to dispose of cases, and this has affected the police as well.
- Bill C-2, the Fair and Efficient Criminal Trials Act, came into force in 2011, following extensive consultations, and drawing on a report on mega-trial reform prepared by the Steering Committee on Justice Efficiencies and Access to Justice. The legislation aims to avoid duplications and allows joint hearing of applications.
- Legislative change is only one vehicle; cultural change is more important.
- The CACP has introduced a new forum, the Criminal Justice Symposium, which has made recommendations on various mechanisms to improve trial management. Right now, this forum is examining how the system handles chronic and mentally ill offenders.

Speakers: Evan Bray, President, Saskatchewan Federation of Police Officers

- New procedural requirements add to police, court costs.
- E.g., obtaining a search warrant may require binders full of supporting documentation; police oversight requires extensive paperwork to feed the system.

Geoffrey Cowper, Senior Counsel, Fasken Martineau, Vancouver

- Delays were a problem in the criminal justice system in BC and were, in fact, viewed by the defence bar as an asset – a culture of delay.
- Looked at short-term problems and long-term solutions; perceived barriers to solving crimes.
- Need to re-set the entire system, and lawyers need to become more concerned about outcomes.
- Disconnect between public expectations and performance; loss of faith in goals; loss of market share and policing support.

The Honourable Patrick LeSage, Counsel, Gowlings, Toronto

- Strongly believes that police should decide what charges are laid and who is charged.
- Plenty of instructive studies on efficiencies, good ideas, knowledge and experience, but we need to take concrete steps.
- Need to cut down on the number of court appearances.
- Disclosure a longstanding bugbear, but we have to live with it as part of the system. In larger cases, it needs to be electronic. Helpful to have common approaches in place across the country.
- We can move to a simpler system. Need to examine, e.g., proportionality. Are there offences in the Criminal Code that should be made regulatory? Should you receive a criminal record for causing a disturbance?

D. Piragoff summarized: Three perspectives: defence counsel sometimes use delay as a tactic; police need more treatment for mentally ill and addicted persons living on the streets; systemic criminal justice system problems requiring holistic solutions.

Question: you have spoken in favour of police retaining the power to lay charges (i.e., not using pre-charge approval). But in jurisdictions that do use pre-charge approval, it has been shown that fewer cases collapse. Comment?

Answer (Lesage): there should be police-Crown consultation prior to the charge, but police need to have the final say.

(Cowper): without pre-charge screening, many cases will be stayed.

Comment (Thornton): about a decade ago in the UK, following a review, there was a decision to move charge authority from police to prosecutors. Three years ago, some cases were moved back to the police to decide on charges; prosecutors retain responsibility to decide on charges in serious cases.

Comment: Ontario tried a pre-charge screening pilot, and it failed miserably – highly inefficient.

MOVING FORWARD TOGETHER

Closing Session: Building a Shared Forward Agenda for Policing in Canada

Panel Speakers:

Jim Chu, President, CACP and Chief, VPD

- Talked about research, best practices.
- Realize we need to change. Communities have different needs.
- Need continuing education, innovation, raised CACP Research Foundation.
- Partnerships may require support through resources or reallocation
- Focus on costs may be narrow, given need to keep communities safe.
- A lot of our work does not relate to crime, e.g., liaison with mentally ill is downloaded to police.
- Briefly referred to Idle No More movement, need to protect protestors.
- Idea of rewarding agencies that reduce crime by cutting their resources is a perverse incentive.

Alok Mukherjee, President, CAPB

- Notes Public Safety Canada is a valued ally.
- Public safety requires a whole-system approach.
- Need to build repository of knowledge.
- Need to develop next generation of police leaders.
- Once we establish next steps, need to reach out to three levels of government to develop shared agenda. Need to ask Public Safety Canada to implement an inclusive process to develop a national strategy.
- Engagement of key stakeholders, with identification of key outcomes. Needs to have an evaluation component.
- It's particularly important that this strategy identify research into a sound economic model, to help understand what we mean by "sustainability." Need to develop a central repository of information and research.

Graham Flack, Assoc. DM, Public Safety Canada

- Need to harness the work at the Summit to create a real plan of action.
- Cited strong political support from FPT Ministers to hold the Summit and to develop the action plan.
- Ministers see a fiscal imperative. We have an opportunity to get ahead of the curve.
- Everyone has been innovating to gain greater efficiencies, but not always in a coordinated way.
- Sees core underlying issues as evaluation, research and engagement – need to identify research priorities and evaluate what works.
- Public Safety Canada will continue its ongoing work in developing a catalogue of best practices. These practices now need to be evaluated.

- In terms of the third pillar, efficiencies within the justice system, there is a need to develop concrete initiatives for FPT Ministers to look at. Legislation will be required.
- Noted an official report will be produced.

- Outlined next steps:

  - Collective drafting of a shared forward agenda, including the identification of next steps (Spring 2013)

  - Follow up with other levels of government and stakeholders (engagement/collaboration phase) (Spring/Summer 2013). Ontario, BC and Saskatchewan have each taken on the role of champion with respect to one of the pillars.

  - Develop concrete set of actions/shared forward agenda for policing in Canada, for consideration by Ministers in Fall 2013.

MEMORANDUM

DATE: December 21, 2012

FROM: Lorraine Y. Land, Andrea Bradley and Liora Zimmerman

RE: Analysis of Bill C-45 (The Second 'Omnibus Budget Bill")

Bill C-45: Omnibus Budget Bill #2 (November 2012)

Status

- This bill was tabled in October, passed by the House of Commons on December 14, 2012, and proclaimed into law that same day.
- It is the second of two government 'budget' bills, implementing the 2012 federal budget. (The other is Bill C-38, passed by the House of Commons and Senate and proclaimed into law in June).

Overview

This 'budget' bill is the second half of the federal budget legislation. It is over 450 pages long and changes 44 federal laws, many of which had no direct connection with the 2012 budget.

On a practical level, amendments to the Fisheries Act and Navigable Waters Act are likely of most concern to First Nations (as they reduce the potential scope of protection of Aboriginal commercial fisheries, and radically reduce the level of protection of navigation and environmental reviews for most rivers and lakes in Canada). The Indian Act amendments in this particular bill are likely to have a positive impact for most First Nations governments, by greatly reducing the bureaucracy and shortening the process for First Nations seeking to 'designate' reserve lands for lease. The key concern about the Indian Act amendments, however, is the lack of consultation about these changes.

The passage of this bill in early December, in addition to all the other current proposed legislative amendments, has spurred the "Idle No More" campaign in First Nations communities across Canada.

Key Provisions

- The second budget implementation act, amends or affects 44 federal laws.[1] Of key concern for First Nations are the changes to the Indian Act, the Fisheries Act, and the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

- The Fisheries Act is amended by changing the definition of Aboriginal fishery.[2] This definition narrows the definition of Aboriginal fishery to a food, social and ceremonial fishery or one recognized in a modern land claims agreement. This amendment is in addition to a wide scope of changes to the Fisheries Act implemented by the first budget bill. (See analysis below).

- The 'surrenders and designations' portion of the Indian Act is changed by this second budget bill. The process for designating reserve lands for lease will be easier (by changing the threshold of the number of votes required to a simple majority of those who vote in the referendum rather than a majority of all eligible band electors) and removing the need for Cabinet approval. (See analysis below).

- The Navigable Waters Protection Act is changed. These changes are in addition to substantial changes made in 2009, which already seriously reduced the scope of water protections under this Act. The amended Act allows the Minister to exempt most rivers and waters from navigation protection under the Act, and takes away the federal environmental assessment triggers (based on navigability) for 99% of Canada's waterways.

Analysis

- Like the first budget omnibus bill passed in June, this legislation makes major changes to federal laws without going through the regular Parliamentary hearings and amendments process.

- A key concern for both of these budget bills is the broad scope of impacts they have on First Nations' rights without any Aboriginal consultation.

- The Fisheries Act Changes:
    - The bill changes the Fisheries Act again (sweeping changes were also made in the first budget bill, as discussed below).
    - The budget bill defines "Aboriginal" fisheries as food, ceremonial and social fisheries, and not as commercial fisheries.
    - This new definition of "Aboriginal" as it relates to fisheries does not capture First Nations fisheries that are based on commercial fishing. This means that those Aboriginal commercial fisheries will not be protected by the Fisheries Act's prohibition on harming fish habitat.
    - The changes also set up an Environmental Damages Fund, where the newly-increased fines under the Fisheries Act will go. First Nations have unique rights and responsibilities and are specific resource users with fisheries that may be over looked by fund administrators in favor of larger commercial or recreational fisheries.
    - These changes are in addition to the sweeping changes made to the Fisheries Act in the first budget omnibus bill six months ago. The first budget bill (Bill C-38) seriously reduced the scope of which fish are protected under the Fisheries Act by:
        1. Restricting the prohibitions on harmful destruction of fish habitat to species already being commercially harvested or harvested by a First Nation. This means that fish which are not currently being harvested are not protected;
        2. Changing the language regarding the probation on harming fish habitat has altered to make it weaker (see more detailed analysis of Bill C-38 in separate memo);
        3. Allowing the Minister discretion to exempt many works and activities from the protections under the Act; and
        4. Downloading more fisheries responsibilities onto the provinces.

- The Navigable Waters Act Changes
    - The budget omnibus bill amends the Navigable Waters Protection Act to remove federal oversight from most of the lakes and rivers in Canada.

- The Minister of Transport will now review the projects that affect the navigability of only 3 oceans, 97 lakes and 62 rivers in the entire country.[3] This is a reduction of the number of protected waterways from 32,000 lakes[4] and 2.25 million rivers across Canada.
- In determining whether and how to protect navigable waters, the Minister will not need to take into account First Nations rights, title, perspectives or interests.
- The practical effect of these changes is that proponents will no longer have to tell government if they are building anything that interferes with navigation on most of Canada's lakes and rivers, and works affecting the navigability of these 99% of Canadian lakes and rivers will no longer trigger federal environmental assessment.

- The Indian Act
  - The omnibus bill changes the Indian Act requirements for designating Indian lands for lease. Leased lands remain the property of the band but are leased for use by others. The provisions related to surrender of Indian lands remains the same (as a result of some changes to the draft legislation from the initial proposals).
  - The amended process changes the process for First Nations to designate lands for lease by:
    - Removing the requirement that Indian lands must first be surrendered to the Crown before they can be leased;
    - Allowing a process for designations to be approved by a simple majority of band members who actually vote in a referendum on a designation rather than a majority of all eligible band electors; and
    - Removing the requirement for Cabinet approval of the designation.
  - In the situation of a proposed surrender, the amendments makes it easier for a surrender to be approved by the First Nation's community. If a referendum is called and the majority of band members who vote are in agreement with the surrender but the majority of the band has not voted (because not everyone votes), the Minister can immediately call second vote. If, after the second vote, there is again an assent by the majority of those who actually vote (not necessarily the majority of all eligible voters), the surrender can proceed. A surrender of Indian lands (rather than designation) still requires Cabinet approval.

- The effect of these changes is that it will now be easier for Bands to designate their reserve and Indian lands for lease to third parties. On a practical level, this will be a benefit to most First Nations as the current designation process has been extremely cumbersome and time-consuming, and has restricted the ability of First Nations to lease lands to on-reserve businesses or for the purpose of economic development. The amended lease provisions will also allow for increased First Nations jurisdiction over decisions about the use of reserve and Indian lands.

RE: Analysis of Bill C-38 (The First 'Omnibus Budget Bill")

Bill C-38: Omnibus Budget Bill #1 (Spring 2012)

Status

- The bill was tabled in March, passed by the House of Commons and Senate in June 18 and proclaimed into law on June 29, 2012.
- This is the first of two government 'budget' bills, implementing the 2012 federal budget. (The other is Bill C-45, which was just passed by the House of Commons and Senate, and proclaimed into law on December 14).

Overview

This 'budget' bill was the first half of the federal budget legislation. It was over 450 pages long and changed more than 70 federal laws.

The suite of amendments was nicknamed the "Environmental Destruction" bill in the media, as it made significant changes to a number of federal laws involved with environmental, water and fish protection.

Key Provisions

- Some of the federal laws changed by Bill C-38 and which are of particular concern to First Nations include:
    - The Fisheries Act
        1. The Act changes the definition of what "harm' to fish habitat is prohibited. (It is changed from "harmful alteration, disruption or destruction of fish habitat" to "serious harm".
        2. The Minister is given a broader scope of discretion to allow serious harms to fish habitat.
        3. Few fish habitat areas protected. Protection of fish habitat is now limited to only those areas where there is already a commercial or Aboriginal fishery for those particular species (and the species they depend on).
        4. As part of the budget implementation, the federal government reduced the funds available for fish science, monitoring and enforcement.

    - The Environmental Assessment Act
        1. The bill abolished the existing Canadian Environmental Assessment Act (CEAA) and enacted an entirely new piece of legislation within this budget bill.

2. The new act more narrowly defines environmental impacts.
3. The new act gives Cabinet the discretion to 'remove' a particular component (such as water, fish or birds) from the definition of 'environment' (thus removing the need to review any impacts in that area).
4. The amended act restricts who can participate in EA hearings to 'interested parties'.
5. The new CEAA imposes new strict and much shorter time limits on environmental assessment.

- The First Nations Fiscal and Statistical Management Act
  1. This Act was changed to the "First Nations Fiscal Management Act" and abolished the First Nations Statistics Institute.

- The Species at Risk Act
  1. The legislation removes time limits on Species at Risk permits.
  2. The amendment give the government (including the National Energy Board) more discretion to allow the destruction of endangered species.

Analysis

Many of the legislative changes made in this first omnibus budget bill had no direct connection with the 2012 budget. In other words, major legislative changes were made without going through the regular Parliamentary hearings and amendments process.

A key concern with this legislation, as with the second omnibus bill and the suite of other current proposed legislation on Aboriginal matters, is the lack of Aboriginal consultation.

Some of the key impacts are as follows:

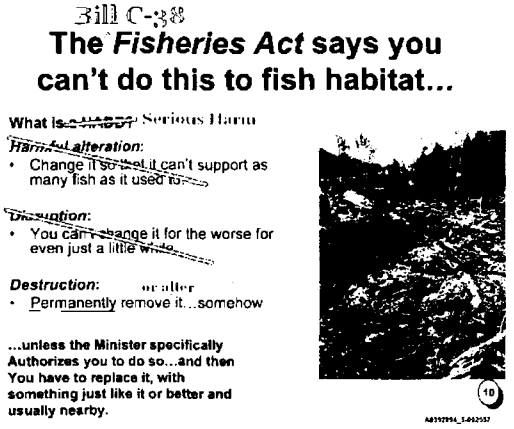

The Fisheries Act

The changes weaken the protection of fish habitat by:

1. Changing the language regarding the probation on harming fish habitat has altered to make it weaker (see graphic to right.)

2. Giving more discretion to the Minister to allow serious harms to fish and fish habitat, based on the Minister's wishes, rather than on science or technical analysis.

3. Protecting fish habitat only where there is already a commercial or Aboriginal fishery for those particular species (and the species they depend on). This means that areas where there is no commercial fishing happening today, or no current Aboriginal harvesting, will not be protected. Also, only the species currently being harvested (or those they depend on) are protected. For First Nations, this could mean that fishing rights are 'frozen in time'.

The revised Fisheries Act has no recognition of Aboriginal commercial fisheries. While the amended Act will recognize Aboriginal food, social and ceremonial fisheries, and will recognize regular commercial fisheries, it does not recognize Aboriginal commercial fisheries.

As part of the budget implementation, the federal government also drastically reduced the fund available for fish science, monitoring and enforcement.

Canadian Environmental Assessment Act

Under the new CEAA, there will be far fewer federal environmental assessments, and the scope of the assessments will be reduced.

The new act also has a much narrower definition of environmental impacts. It also gives Cabinet the discretion to simply 'remove' a particular component (such as water, fish or birds) from the definition of 'environment' under the Act (thus removing the need to review any impacts in that area).

The new Act contains very weak Aboriginal consultation obligations, even though as a new piece of legislation, better consultation obligations should have been included to reflect the changing common law in this area.

The amended act also restricts who can participate in EA hearings (only 'interested parties') in a way which will likely exclude many First Nations.

The new CEAA also imposes new strict and much shorter time limits on environmental assessment.

The First Nations Fiscal and Statistical Management Act

This Act was changed to the "First Nations Fiscal Management Act" and the First Nations Statistics Institute was abolished.

The FNSI was a First-Nations led Crown corporation that played a key role in tracking demographics of First Nations, in order to understand the social and economic conditions of First Nations.

The information from FNSI was previously used as a basis for understanding where changes needed to be made for better education, housing and other social supports for First Nations. The source of the statistical data used to substantiate where the emerging needs are in First Nations communities is now gone.

The Species at Risk Act

The legislation takes away time limits on Species at Risk permits. This means that there will no longer be opportunities to modify permits to deal with changes in species numbers (for instance, to loosen restrictions if a species recovers, or tighten restrictions if a species declines).

The amendments give the National Energy Board the discretion to allow the destruction of endangered species.

RE: Analysis of Bill C-27 (The First Nations Financial Accountability Act)

Bill C-27: The First Nations Accountability Act

Status

- This is a government-sponsored bill.
- The Bill has passed all three readings in the House of Commons.
- It has also passed first reading in the Senate, and has been referred to the Senate Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs for further review. After that it will go to second and third reading in the Senate, and if passed, will be proclaimed into law.

Overview

The bill's stated purpose is "to enhance the accountability and transparency of First Nations."

In accordance with provisions in their funding agreements, First Nation band councils are already required to provide Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada with audited consolidated financial statements and a schedule of salary, honoraria and travel expenses for all elected band officials.

Key Provisions

- Requires each First Nation to prepare a consolidated financial statement, and:
  - Have it audited by a chartered accountant;
  - Include a list of all salaries, honoraria and non-monetary benefits, and all expenses for each Chief and Councillor in their capacity as elected official;
  - Include a list of all payments to Chiefs and Councillors in their personal capacity;
  - Include a list of all salaries and all expenses of all employees of Band-owned entities; and
  - Publish the information on the band's internet site within 120 days of the end of each financial year, and leave that information on the website for at least 10 years.
- Requires disclosure all these documents to any band member who requests it.
- Requires the Minister to publish this information on the Indian Affairs website "without delay' after receiving it from the First Nation.
- Allows band members and the government to obtain a court order if the band does not comply with the reporting obligations.
- If the First Nation breaches the reporting obligations, the Minister can require a remedial action plan, or can withhold funding under any contribution agreement with any federal government department, and can even terminate any funding agreement.

Assessment

- The government made First Nation "transparency and accountability" a key focus in the last election, raising it as a campaign issue and announcing in the Speech from the Throne that it would enact legislation in this area.

- The political push for this legislation arises from the common non-Aboriginal misconception that First Nations governments are more corrupt and unaccountable than other governments, less financially accountable, and that Band elected officials are paid inflated salaries. These publicly held views are contrary to statistical evidence:
    - There is no statistical evidence that First Nations government are more corrupt than non-Aboriginal governments, or that there is any corruption epidemic in Aboriginal governments.
    - According to the Government of Canada, the Prime Minister's gross salary is $315,462.[5] Canada's Premiers earn on average between $150,000 and $210,000.[6] The average Canadian's salary is $46,345.[7] Comparatively, First Nation elected officials earn an average salary of $36,845.[8]
    - First Nations governments already have more onerous reporting and audit requirements than other governments. Indeed, the Auditor General of Canada has repeatedly identified the overly rigorous reporting obligations on First Nations governments as a problem which must be addressed. The AG has repeatedly expressed concerns that First Nations are expected to in excess of 150 financial reports and audits with federal departments each year, at great administrative cost. [9] A Treasury Board panel recently also investigated the matter and recommended that reporting obligations on First Nations be reduced, not expanded.[10]

- The legislation requires more onerous reporting obligations than required for any other public government officials in Canada (requiring reporting on not only salaries, or expenses, but of all income of band officials and band entities).

- Band-owned business enterprises will now be at a competitive disadvantage compared to non-Aboriginal businesses, as all incomes and expenses will be publicly available for band businesses (but not non-Aboriginal businesses).

- A key concern in the harsh penalties imposed if a First Nation fails to meet the reporting obligations. In addition to band members or the Minister being allowed to get a court order demanding compliance, the Minister can also require an action plan or withhold moneys under contribution agreements with AANDC or any other federal Ministry, or can simply terminate any funding agreement with the Band (and has no obligation to reinstate the funding if the issue is remedied.

Bill S-8: Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act

Status

- Passed on to committee by the Senate on April 25, 2012
- Passed with observations by the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Peoples on June 7, 2012
- Now in its Second Reading in the House of Commons; there had been three sittings on this bill as of November 26, 2012

Overview

Bill S-8 is "umbrella" legislation, which means it doesn't actually set specific rules for the provision of drinking water. Instead, it gives Canada the power with which rules will be made through the creation of binding regulations (s. 4), and defines their scope. The regulations will govern anything to do with providing drinking water on reserve, including protection of source water (s. 4(1)(b)), and they will override any band council resolutions or by-laws that conflict with them (s. 7).

The regulations are not yet drafted. Seeing as they will set the rules for delivering drinking water, obviously the content of the regulations matters a great deal. The federal government has said in the preamble to Bill S-8 that they "have committed to working with First Nations to develop proposals for regulations to be made under this Act". This promise has been repeated on the record in the House of Commons.

Key Provisions

- Bill S-8 has a clause that potentially derogates from (that is, annuls or destroys) Treaty and Aboriginal rights "to the extent necessary to ensure the safety of drinking water on First Nation lands" (s. 3). It is unclear how, or even if, this clause would ever actually be used. But even if it will never be used, the clause sets a dangerous precedent. First Nations organizations have strongly opposed the derogation clause, without success.
- Bill S-8 contains a clause limiting the federal government's liability for anything to do with providing drinking water on reserve (ss. 11, 13).
- The regulations may make First Nations (or any other person or body) the owners of water treatment facilities on reserve (s. 5(1)(q)), and/or the regulations can confer on any person or body the power, exercisable in specified circumstances and subject to specified conditions, to appoint a manager independent of the First Nation to operate a drinking water system or waste water system on First Nation lands (s. 5(1)(c)(iii)).

- The regulations can also determine the obligations of any person or body that exercises powers or performs duties under the regulations (i.e. who manages a water treatment facility), and specify the penalties that apply if that person or body fails to meet these obligations (s. 5(1)(n)).
- Bill S-8 allows for the incorporation of provincial laws and regulations on water (s. 5(3)).
- Bill S-8 allows the federal government to create regulations on fees for access to clean drinking water (s. 5(1)(d)). These fees could be imposed regardless of what Chief and Council want, because regulations under Bill S-8 overrule any band council resolutions and by-laws. This could be quite problematic for many First Nations members.
- Bill S-8 provides authority for Canada to make regulations protecting source water (s. 4(1)(b)). This has wide potential scope, but seeing as most source water is off-reserve it is not clear that this has any significant impact on the scope of First Nations authority as band councils.
- The Bill also allows for regulations requiring permits to be obtained as a condition of engaging in "any activity on First Nation lands that could affect the quality of drinking water" (s. 5(1)(p)). This will have implications for any construction on reserve.

Assessment

The problem with this Act is more about governance than the worthiness of the aim. Nobody disputes that clean drinking water is important. But does the federal government need to overrule First Nations governments to accomplish this aim, or would it be better to work in partnership with them?

There are various ways that Bill S-8 may implicate First Nations' water rights. If the water is unsurrendered and subject to First Nations' jurisdiction, Canada's legislation may be in violation of Aboriginal Title. If there is a Treaty right to governance over drinking water on reserve, the legislation will override that right "to the extent necessary to ensure the safety of drinking water on First Nation lands," and require First Nations to follow the federal law instead. If clean drinking water is a Treaty right, the legislation may not have much of an effect, seeing as it is aimed at getting clean water to First Nations homes.

The regulations may make First Nations responsible for water treatment on reserve and any problems that arise from it, including a failure to meet the requirements of the regulations. However, it is difficult to predict what will actually be contained in the regulations, although Canada has committed to "working with" First Nations during regulation drafting.

Nothing in the bill indicates if or how additional funding will be made available to First Nations. This is a concern as water infrastructure is expensive to construct and maintain, and this may present a barrier for First Nations which already face severe infrastructure and funding gaps.

RE: Analysis of Bill S-2 (Family Homes on Reserve and Matrimonial Property Rights on Reserve)

Bill S-2: An Act to Amend the Indian Act (Publication of By-Laws) and to Provide for its Replacement

Status

- Introduced in the Senate on September 28, 2011 by Claude Carignan and passed by the Senate on December 1, 2011.
- Introduced in the House of Commons on December 8, 2011 and currently being debated at the second reading stage.
- NB: Three previous bills have been introduced regarding matrimonial property rights on reserve, none of which were passed: Bill S-4 (2010), Bill C-8 (2009), and Bill C-47 (2008).

Overview

This bill intends to address the "legislative gap" that currently exists regarding matrimonial property on reserve. This is the fourth version of the bill that has been introduced in recent years. Although the government conducted consultations with NWAC and AFN (who in turn, consulted First Nations), the concerns of these organizations were largely not accounted for. AFN indicates that three broad principles needed to be addressed: (1) First Nation jurisdiction, (2) access to justice, dispute resolution and remedies, and (3) systemic issues, such as housing shortages. Unfortunately, the bill does not address these broader issues.[11]

If the bill is passed, First Nations would have a one-year period to enact their own laws on matrimonial property, after which the provisional laws in the bill would apply. In order to pass their own laws, a First Nation would need to obtain a majority of votes at a meeting with 25% of eligible electors. If a First Nation does not pass its own laws within a year, the extensive rules laid out in the bill would apply until the First Nation enacts its own laws.

Key Provisions

- Section 2: defines "court" as a provincial court.
- Sections 5-6: confirms that the Act does not affect title to reserve lands and that it only applies if at least one of the spouses or common-law partners is an Indian or band member.

[11] "Bill S-2: Family Homes on Reserves & Matrimonial Interests or Rights Act", AFN Technical Update, January 27, 2012, online: http://www.afn.ca/uploads/files/mrp/bill_s-2.pdf.

- Section 7: provides that First Nations have the power to enact their own laws respecting matrimonial property. The only requirement is that they must have procedures for amending and repealing them.

- Sections 8-11: provide the method of approving First Nation laws. They must be approved by a majority at a community meeting attended by at least 25% of eligible voters. The Minister must be notified of the laws and any future amendments, but does not need to approve of the laws. The laws come into force on the date they are approved at the community meeting (i.e. there is no delay caused by notification to the Minister).

- Section 12: the provisional rules apply to a First Nation if it has not enacted laws under s. 7 (with different rules for those under the First Nation Land Management Act and self-government agreements).

- Sections 13-52: these are the "provisional rules". Sections 13-15 provide for the occupancy rights of common-law partners and spouses of the matrimonial home during the relationship and after death. Sections 16-18 provide for emergency protection orders where violence has occurred or a person is at risk of harm. Sections 20-21 provide for exclusive occupation orders of the matrimonial home. Sections 28-40 give the rules for the division of matrimonial property after a relationship breaks down or a spouse dies. Sections 41-42 give the council of the First Nation where the property is situated the right to receive a copy of most applications filed under these provisions and to make representations to the court about the cultural, social, and legal context related to the application.

- Section 56: the provisional federal rules come into force one year after s. 7 comes into force (meaning First Nations will have one year to enact their own laws before the provisional rules apply).

Assessment

This bill has improved somewhat over previous incarnations of the legislation. First, the bill gives more time for First Nations to develop their own laws (i.e. one year before the provisional rules apply). This is a positive change, but one year will likely not be enough time for many First Nations to develop comprehensive matrimonial property laws and the capacity necessary to implement them. Second, the bill makes it easier for First Nations to pass their own laws (a majority of 25% of eligible voters needed to approve, meaning only 12.5% of all electors are needed to approve the laws). Third, it removes a level of government oversight that was present in former incarnations of the bill in the form of "verification officers". These are all positive changes from previous bills.

There are some concerns with the provisional rules themselves. Primarily, the rules give jurisdiction to the provincial courts for enforcement. This constitutes a failure to recognize self-government rights. It also means that the rules will be difficult to enforce, as provincial courts are often not readily accessible from reserves. For example, if a spouse requires an emergency protection order due to domestic violence, under proposed section 16, he or she may not have the resources to access a provincial court on an urgent basis.

Overall, it will be easier for First Nations to pass their own laws under this bill than in previous versions, but the larger issue remains that the bill fails to recognize First Nations' jurisdiction. It does so in several ways, for instance:

1. The bill does not generally recognize inherent rights to self-government over matrimonial property on reserve.
2. The bill does not recognize traditional methods of decision-making (e.g. consensus) in the mandated approval process.
3. The bill does not recognize First Nations' existing dispute resolution systems, but gives jurisdiction to the provincial courts to enforce the provisional rules.

These issues are among the concerns raised in the consultation process that preceded this bill and which have not been addressed.

RE: Analysis of Bill S-6 (First Nations Election Act)

Bill S-6: First Nations Election Act

Status

- Introduced in the Senate on December 6, 2011.
- Passed first reading in the House on May 5, 2012.

Overview

This bill provides an alternative First Nations elections regime to the one under the Indian Act. There are three ways that this regime could apply to a First Nation:

1. The First Nation's council can pass a resolution adopting the regime.
2. The Minister can impose the regime if he or she "is satisfied that a protracted leadership dispute has significantly compromised governance of that First Nation".[12]
3. The regime is imposed if the Minister has deemed that there was a "corrupt practice in connection with the election" and the election has been set aside under s. 79 of the Indian Act.

A First Nation can be removed from the regime if it submits a proposed community election plan that meets certain criteria, including approval by a majority of electors, and a resolution requesting removal.

The regime is, in some ways, more comprehensive than that provided under the Indian Act. There is a more comprehensive system of offences and penalties, for example. Four of the other significant differences from the Indian Act are that (1) terms of chiefs and councillors are increased from two to four years, (2) chiefs must be band members, (3) election appeals are made to a court rather than the Minister, and (4) there is to be a "petition" process for removal of a chief and councillors, to be laid out in regulation. Many of the detailed provisions on procedures related to nominations and elections remain to be established through regulations (as in the Indian Act system, which places detailed procedural provisions in the Indian Band Election Regulations).

[12] Note that this provision means that the Minister could order that a First Nation with a custom election system be governed by the regime proposed by this bill.

Key Provisions

- Section 2: Defines First Nations as Indian Act bands. Defines electors as persons on the band list who are 18 years of age or older on the relevant day (whether it be election day, a petition to remove a chief/councillor, a nomination, or a vote on a community election code). Note that there is no requirement for electors to be "ordinarily resident" on reserve.[13]

- Section 3: Provides the three ways that the regime could apply to a First Nation (opting in, imposition by Minister due to protracted leadership dispute, or imposition due to corrupt election practice and election being set aside under s. 79 of the Indian Act).

- Section 5: Establishes when the first election under the regime is to be held. For First Nations that opt to elect into the regime, the first election will be no later than the day on which the term of the existing chief and council would have expired. If it is imposed, the first election occurs no later than six months after the ministerial order.

- Section 7: Imposes the same requirements for number of councillors as in the Indian Act (between two to twelve and one councillor for every 100 members), but allows a council to reduce the number of councillor positions by resolution (to a minimum of two), effective as of the next election that is not a by-election.

- Sections 9-13: Govern nomination of candidates. There are some differences from the Indian Act. For instance, only electors (i.e. band members) can be nominated for chief or councillor. The Indian Act system did not require that a chief be a band member.[14] A person cannot be nominated for both chief and councillor in the same election, under s. 9(2). There is also no reference to "electoral sections" in this bill. Unlike the Indian Act, the bill outlines offences related to nomination under ss. 10-13, such as a prohibition against influencing the nomination of candidates through duress.

- Sections 14-22: These sections govern ballots and voting procedures. Section 15 provides that only electors of the First Nation may vote (see above for definition of elector). Section 18 requires that an election be by secret ballot. The remainder of the provisions govern prohibited behaviour, such as purchasing ballots (s. 14(c)), voting more than once (s. 17(a)), and disorderly behaviour in polling stations (s. 20).

- Sections 23 & 24: Provide that chief and councillors win by simple majority. In the event of a tie, the electoral officer "must conduct a draw", whereas under the Indian Act, the electoral officer would cast the deciding vote.

- Section 25: Allows for a by-election to be held if a chief or councillor ceases to hold office within three months of the expiry of their term.

[13] The requirement that electors and councillor nominees be resident on reserve still appears in the Indian Act, but has been "read out" due to judicial decisions that determined these residency requirements were unconstitutional: Corbiere v. Canada (Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs), [1999] 2 S.C.R. 203 & Esquega v. Canada (Attorney General), 2008 FCA 182.

- Sections 28 & 29: Provide that chief and councillors hold office for four years, as opposed to two years under the Indian Act. Similar to the Indian Act, a chief or councillor will cease to hold office if they commit an indictable offence and are convicted to a prison sentence of at least 30 days, die or resign, or are convicted of an offence under this Act. They can also be removed from office by petition (process to be laid out in regulations) or by the court (see ss. 30-35).

- Sections 30-35: These provisions govern contested elections. Unlike the Indian Band Election Regulations, which allows for an appeal process to the Minister, this bill provides that elections are to be contested in court and outlines the procedure to bring an application.

- Section 37-40: These sections govern offences and penalties. Sections 37 and 38 list the sections under which offences are found. For example, there are offences related to voting when not entitled, inducing others to vote (s. 16(a) and (b)), refusing to leave a polling station when ordered to do so (s. 21(2)), obstructing elections (ss. 26-27), and inducing others to sign a petition for the removal of a chief or councillor (s. 36). Section 39 provides the penalties for those found guilty of an offence. The maximum penalty provided is a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than five years. For certain offences, a person is not eligible for election for five years following the date of conviction, pursuant to s. 40.

- Section 41: Gives broad regulatory power to the Governor in Council to make regulations respecting elections (the Governor in Council also has broad regulatory powers under the Indian Act).

- Section 42: Allows a First Nation to be removed from the schedule (i.e. from the application of this Act). To be removed, the First Nation must provide a proposed community election code that meets certain criteria (including approval by a majority of electors) and a resolution requesting that the First Nation be removed from the schedule.

Assessment

Negative: Inadequate Consultation on Imposed Legislation

A national engagement process was led by the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs and the Atlantic Policy Congress of First Nations Chiefs. These organizations made presentations and solicited feedback from First Nations across the country, however the extent of this engagement process, and the extent to which the bill reflects the feedback received through this process, is not clear. Support for the bill has been mixed and the current Grand Chief of the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs, Derek Nepinak, has expressed opposition to the bill.[15]

The potential lack of adequate consultation is particularly troubling as this new elections regime can be imposed on First Nations who currently fall under the Indian Act or who have a custom elections system. Further, many of the detailed provisions in this new regime remain to be fleshed out through regulations. Some of these provisions could have significant ramifications for self-government, such as the system for petitions to remove elected chiefs and councillors.

Given the government's track record on consultation to date, it seems unlikely that these regulations will be developed through consultation.

It should, however, be noted that this legislation will generally be "opt-in" legislation. The Minister has less discretion to impose this elections regime than he does to impose the Indian Act regime. Under s. 74 of the Indian Act, the Minister can impose the Indian Act system "whenever he deems it advisable for the good government of a band". Under this bill, the regime can only be imposed if a protracted leadership dispute has significantly compromised governance or there has been a corrupt practice in connection with an election.

Positive and Negative: Offences and Penalties

The offences and penalties detailed in this bill are much more extensive than those provided under the Indian Act elections system. Many of the offences are appropriate to ensuring fair elections (such as prohibitions against influencing others to vote a certain way, or using duress to force a person to sign a petition for the removal of a chief and/or councillor). On the other hand, the penalties for these offences are very stringent, exceeding those required of other federal, provincial and municipal systems. The imposition of these offences and penalties could be considered an infringement on First Nations' self-government rights.

Positive: Appeal Process & Increased Independence from Ministerial Oversight

The Indian Act allows for an appeal process to the Minister, and provides certain circumstances in which election results can be overturned in the Indian Band Election Regulations and s. 79 of the Act (corrupt practice, violation of the Act, or ineligible candidate). This bill provides for an appeal process to the courts, where an elector alleges that there was a contravention of the Act or regulations that was likely to have affected the result. Ministerial oversight over election appeals is therefore removed under this new regime, which is a positive development.

Note, however, that there is also reference in the bill to a "petition" process for removal of a chief or councillor, which is to be detailed by regulation.

Positive: Longer Terms

This bill would increase the terms of chiefs and councillors to four years, instead of two. This could strengthen governance, as it would allow for more consistent, long-term policy development and implementation for First Nation communities.

RE: Analysis of Bill C-428 (Indian Act Amendment and Replacement Act)

Bill C-428: An Act to Amend the Indian Act (Publication of By-Laws) and to Provide for its Replacement

Status

- Private member's bill, introduced on June 4, 2012 by Rob Clarke (Desnethé —Missinippi—Churchill River)

- Referred to Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development at second reading on December 5, 2012

Overview

There are two key parts to this bill. First, the bill attempts to force a process of replacing the Indian Act. Section 2 requires the Minister to report to the House of Commons every year on progress in developing legislation to replace the Indian Act, "in collaboration with First Nations organizations and other interested parties". The preamble states that "the Government of Canada is committed to continuing its work of exploring creative options for the development of this new legislation in collaboration with the First Nations organizations that have demonstrated an interest in this work."

Second, the bill introduces changes to the Indian Act. One of the more controversial changes would modify the by-law making powers of First Nations. The bill removes the requirement of forwarding copies of by-laws to the Minister, but instead imposes publication requirements on First Nations under a new s. 86.1. The bill also removes the by-law making power over intoxicants on reserves. The bill addresses some aspects of the Indian Act that may be less controversial (putting aside the complete lack of consultation), including removing the Minister's jurisdiction over wills and estates, provisions related to residential schools, and the prohibition on the sale of agricultural products from reserves in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Key Provisions

- Section 2: requires the Minister to report to the House of Commons committee responsible for Aboriginal affairs on progress, in collaboration with First Nations organizations and other interested parties, in developing legislation to replace the Indian Act.

- Section 5: repeals the provisions on sale of agricultural products from reserves in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta (Indian Act, ss. 32-33).

- Section 6: replaces the section on "special reserves" (lands set apart for a band but for which legal title is not vested in the Crown) with a provision that recognizes existing special reserves, but does not contemplate their creation in the future (Indian Act, s. 36, to be replaced by proposed s. 36.1).

- Section 7: repeals the provisions that give the Minister jurisdiction over the wills and estates of deceased Indians (Indian Act, ss. 42-47).

- Section 8: repeals the requirement that copies of by-laws be sent to the Minister, that by-laws come into force 40 days after being forwarded to the Minister, and the Minister's power to disallow a by-law within that period (Indian Act, s. 82).

- Section 9: repeals by-law making power over intoxicants (Indian Act, s. 85.1).

- Section 10: replaces the provision covering "proof" of valid by-laws with a requirement that councils publish copies of all by-laws on the band's website, the First Nations Gazette, and in a newspaper with general circulation on the reserve. By-laws would come into force on the date of publication in any of those three sources. By-laws would have to be provided to band members on request (Indian Act, s. 86 – would be replaced by proposed 86.1).

- Section 11: removes requirement that Department employees, missionaries, and school teachers obtain a license to trade on reserve (Indian Act, s. 92).

- Section 12: broadens the seizure powers of peace officers, superintendents, or other persons authorized by the Minister, to include property related to a by-law violation (Indian Act, s. 103.1).

- Section 13: adds a clarification that fines imposed under by-laws belong to Her Majesty for the benefit of the band (Indian Act, proposed s. 104(3)).

- Section 15-19: removes the Minister's power to make agreements with religious or charitable organizations for the education of Indian children, and their support and maintenance while at those schools (Indian Act, ss. 114(1)(e) and 115(c) and (d)), removes the power to compel an Indian child older than 16 to attend school (Indian Act, s. 116(2)(b)), and removes other provisions regarding religious schools, the denominations of religious schools, and truant officers (Indian Act, ss. 118-122).

Assessment

Negative: No Consultation

The key issue with this bill is the complete lack of consultation that preceded it. There is also troubling language in the bill that indicates this lack of consultation would continue. The preamble includes a commitment to collaborate with "First Nations organizations that have demonstrated an interest in this work", rather than with all First Nations, as the duty to consult would require for an overhaul of the Indian Act. The body of the bill uses more inclusive language, requiring "collaboration with First Nations organizations and other interested parties" at s. 2, but the preamble's language and the previous lack of consultation are both troubling indicators.

Neutral (with caveat): Residential Schools and Colonial Anachronisms

As for the substantive changes that the bill would impose, some could be considered neutral in their effect. The bill removes the provisions related to residential schools, which are not being enforced at present. As these provisions are not being enforced, their removal would not likely have much impact. However, the bill would remove these provisions without consultation, and specifically, without having consulted residential school survivors. Although the residential school provisions in the Indian Act should be addressed, it is unacceptable that this be done without consulting survivors, and First Nations generally.

Aside from the residential school provisions, the bill removes various colonial anachronisms, such as the requirement that missionaries on reserves acquire a license to trade and the ban on sale of agricultural products from reserves in the prairie provinces.

Positive and Negative: Estates and By-laws

There are two substantive changes that would certainly have an effect. The first is the removal of the Minister's jurisdiction over Indian wills and estates. This may be a positive change, as it potentially expands the jurisdictional powers of First Nations. However, First Nations would need to enact their own testamentary laws in order to avoid the application of existing laws, which may be an issue depending on each First Nation's capacity. There may be some confusion as to whether provincial or federal laws apply.

The second major substantive change deals with by-law making powers. The bill removes the requirement that by-laws be sent to and approved by the Minister. As with the change to the provisions on wills and estates, this change could be considered positive, in that it increases First Nations' jurisdiction. Again, though, the benefit is mixed. The bill imposes requirements for the publication of by-laws that are far more onerous than those imposed upon other governments. By-laws would need to be published on the Nation's website, in the First Nations Gazette, and in a newspaper with general circulation on the reserve. The bill replaces accountability to the Minister with accountability to the public, but it retains the assumption that accountability needs to be imposed on First Nations through the Indian Act.

Overall

As a private member's bill that has generated controversy in the House, it is possible that this bill will not become law. The Harper government has, however, announced that it supports the bill "in principle".[16] Although there are some potentially positive aspects to the bill, the complete lack of consultation prior to the introduction of this bill is very problematic. A process for amending the Indian Act will not succeed if there is not full involvement of First Nations communities in developing the alternative structures being proposed.

RE: Summary of Bill S-207

Bill S-207: An Act to amend the Interpretation Act

Status

- Sponsored by (Inuit) Senator Charlie Watt
- Passed its second reading and was transferred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Matters on June 7, 2012

Overview & Key Provisions

This act is extremely short. Here is the entire act:

> Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:
> 1. The Interpretation Act is amended by adding the following after section 8.2:
> ABORIGINAL AND TREATY RIGHTS
> 8.3 No enactment shall be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada that are recognized and affirmed by section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

Assessment

The Interpretation Act is only relied upon where another piece of legislation is not clear and the court or others need help interpreting what it means. If an enactment clearly intends to abrogate or derogate from Aboriginal or treaty rights, this provision would not prevent that. Section 3 of the existing Interpretation Act indicates that it applies to every enactment "unless a contrary intention appears." This means that this new clause preventing annulment or destruction of Aboriginal or treaty rights will not actually prevent a law from altering Aboriginal or treaty rights if it has a clear intention to do that.

RE: Bill S-212 (First Nations Self Government Recognition Act)

Bill S-212: An Act Providing for the Recognition of Self-Governing First Nations of Canada

Status

- Senate bill, introduced by Senator Gerry St. Germaine (a Métis senator who just retired).
- Senator St. Germaine introduced this bill on three previous occasions (2002, 2004 and 2006). It never passed. It will likely not pass now, as it no longer has a sponsor in the Senate.
- Introduced and had first reading in the senate on November 1, 2012

Overview

This Act has the potential to transfer a significant number of provincial powers and responsibilities to First Nations, and provides for a financial transfer agreement with the crown to enable First Nations to run such programs. However, First Nations must first submit a proposal and have a referendum to come under the Act as a "recognized First Nation" (this term alone is problematic – what will First Nations be if they do not participate? Unrecognized First Nations?). Once that step is completed, many other powers are on the table, but are not required to be undertaken.

The Act preamble discusses its purpose to honour the intent of the Royal Proclamation and the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, in particular the right of self-determination, and Canada's desire to "reconcile with First Nations by recognizing the governance of self-governing First Nations over their lands, peoples and resources." However, and quite ironically, the bill has been drafted without consultation with First Nations. This Act also ignores the authority First Nations already have under their own laws, and the work already done by First Nations and First Nation organizations to articulate their own goals and visions for self-determination.

Key Provisions

- A First Nation can chose to come under this Act or not. If the First Nation wants to be a "recognized First Nation" under the Act it must submit a proposal to its eligible voters and hold a referendum (s. 5(1)). This must include a proposed constitution for the First Nation.
- In order to pass the referendum, at least 50% of eligible voters must vote and at least 50% of those voting must be in support of becoming a "recognized First Nation." This means that a vote of support from 25% of voters would be enough.
- If there are irregularities or concerns regarding the validity of the voting process, members (or the Minister) only have five days in which to report the problem (s. 10(2)).

- Once a First Nation has been "recognized" under the Act, they have the potential to take over authority and to make laws in many areas, including the following list. If a federal law conflicts with a First Nation law on one of these topics, the First Nation law prevails (s. 15(2), 15(4) and 15(5)):
    - definition of citizenship in the First Nation
    - education
    - wildlife and habitat management
    - adoption of children
    - guardianship, custody, care and placement of children of its citizens
    - solemnization of marriage
    - matrimonial property (i.e. division of property upon break-up of a marriage)
    - inheritance, wills, intestacy (what happens if someone dies without a will), and administration of estates (property belonging to someone who has died)
    - use, management and control of lands and natural resources
    - control and prevention of pollution
    - licensing and regulation of professions and trades
    - residency rules (housing)
    - trespass on reserve
    - public works and infrastructure
    - raising of revenues (e.g. taxation of members or non-members on First Nation land)
    - other "local or private" matters relating to the First Nation
- "recognized First Nations" can also take on authority for the management and making of laws regarding the following topics, however, in these areas if there is a conflict with a federal law the federal law will prevail (s. 15(6) & 15(7)):
    - health care
    - emergency preparedness
    - transportation, including construction and maintenance of roads
    - fishing and protection of fisheries and fish habitat
    - control, prohibition, manufacture, sale, etc. of intoxicants (e.g. alcohol)
    - gaming
    - establishment of courts and tribunals
    - agriculture
    - labour relations
- A "recognized First Nation" can also make laws creating offences that punish people who break any of the First Nation's other laws, and this punishment can include fines or imprisonment, community service or "other means for achieving compliance" (s. 16). This power applies only to summary conviction offences (i.e. minor offences).
    - terms of imprisonment and fines cannot be any more severe than the corresponding punishment under s. 787(1) of the Criminal Code (a fine not over $5,000 or imprisonment for no longer than six months) and no greater than the punishment for a similar offence under federal or provincial law (s. 16(6)), for example, an environmental offence cannot have a more severe punishment than under federal law per s. 16(2)
    - summary conviction procedures in s. 787 of the Criminal Code must be followed (s. 22)
    - laws can also address enforcement measures such as inspections, searches, seizure, etc.

- The process to create the laws mentioned above requires that the First Nation first notify the Minister (INAC) of its intention to exercise its authority in a given area. When this happens, INAC must enter into negotiations with the First Nation to reach an agreement regarding the exercise of those powers (s. 17 & 36)
    - the Minister must use his or her best efforts to negotiate an agreement, including terms and conditions related to the First Nation's exercise of their law making power, and any financial transfers associated with the implementation and enforcement of those laws
    - A "recognized First Nation" may receive money from the federal or provincial crown or other entities (s. 34)
    - The purposes of federal fund transfers are to promote equal opportunities, reduce disparities and ensure that "recognized First Nations" can provide services to their citizens at a level reasonably comparable to services provided to other Canadians; however, the First Nation's capacity to raise its own funds must be considered in determining federal transfer amounts (s. 37).
    - The Governor in Council may make regulations regarding the terms and conditions of federal transfers of funds to "recognized First Nations" – this section does not require First Nation input into the regulations (s. 62(d)).
- Note that law-making authority relates to First Nation citizens and lands. The Act's definition of First Nation lands does not include traditional territory, except where the First Nation has successfully established an Aboriginal title claim (recognized by the crown or a court).
- The laws of a "recognized First Nation" must be in writing and available to the public (s. 20)
- Judicial notice will be taken of the laws of a "recognized First Nation" (i.e. in court a judge will consider and apply these laws) (s. 20(7))
- The Act indicates that it does not affect title to First Nation lands (s. 27(1)) and that no First Nation lands can be alienated to another government except in exchange for other land (s. 30). However, where First Nation land is leased or subject to a license or other interest, the responsibility for overseeing the lease or license is transferred to the "recognized First Nation" and removed from INAC (s. 28(3)).
- The Act says that it will not alter the Indian status of First Nation citizens (s. 42).
- Section 87 and 89 of the Indian Act continue to apply to "recognized First Nations," their lands, and citizens who are Indians (i.e. property on reserve is exempt from tax, and not subject to seizure).
- Aside from the sections noted above, the Indian Act will cease to apply unless the First Nation does not enact its own law to replace specified sections (s. 47).
- The fiduciary relationship between First Nations and the crown continues (s. 51). However, the Act states that "as a recognized First Nation exercises its law-making powers and authority following recognition, fiduciary obligations owed by Her Majesty to the recognized First Nation will be as determined by the common law respecting fiduciary relationships."

Assessment

The Act has the potential to transfer powers and responsibilities equivalent to a province to a First Nation, at least in respect of its own citizens. However, the Act also states that when a First Nation wishes to create laws to use this authority, it must negotiate with the Minister, and funding must also be negotiated. Lack of funding could limit the extent to which this is actually carried out.

The Act states that it seeks to recognize First Nations' right to self-determination; however, no consultation occurred in developing the Act (to date; it is still in early stages). In addition, when the crown wants to make a new bill that would impact a "recognized First Nation's" rights or to amend this Act, it is only required to provide "recognized First Nations" with an opportunity to consider the proposed changes and to give "due consideration" to the First Nation's input. There is no requirement for free, prior and informed consent – a key aspect of self-determination as provided in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples – and no requirement for agreement. The Act is also unclear regarding what would happen to First Nations who do not seek "recognition."

Despite the powers provided for above, the Act indicates that "nothing in this Act affects the enforcement of federal or provincial laws on the First Nation lands of a recognized First Nation." So it appears that any First Nation laws would apply concurrently with Canadian or provincial laws, although the Act does indicate in which cases First Nation laws would prevail if the laws conflict (see above).

In addition, with regard to the administration of justice and enforcement of laws, the Act assumes that First Nations will structure their system of justice the same way as the Canadian system, making provisions for Commissioners for taking oaths (s. 21(1)(b)), justices of the peace (s. 24), and courts and tribunals where judges must apply provincial rules of evidence (s. 25), et cetera.

This private bill introduced by Senator St. Germaine will likely proceed further now that the Senator has retired.

Idle No More – What's It About?

What Are Aboriginal People Protesting?

Aboriginal communities are protesting a group of new or changed federal laws. These new laws will seriously harm Aboriginal rights, and destroy the environment. There was no proper consultation with Aboriginal communities about this legislation. This is part of a larger concern about an ongoing lack of respect by Canada for Aboriginal communities and their rights and issues.

What is "Idle No More"?

Four Aboriginal women started a 'grassroots' campaign called "Idle No More" to focus on the above concerns. There are no official leaders for Idle No More. Locally-organized protests spread around Canada and the world since early December. Many involve "round-dances" in public places such as malls and major roads. Some block road or rail lines. Most are spontaneously organized using social media including Facebook, Twitter, and blogs.

What Does This Have to Do With Chief Theresa Spence?

Chief Spence of Attawapiskat First Nation started a hunger strike on December 10. She will stop the hunger strike when the Prime Minister and the Governor General meet with First Nations leaders to talk about restoring a respectful treaty relationship between Canada and First Nations.

What Are Aboriginal People Protesting?

Aboriginal communities are protesting a group of new or changed federal laws. These new laws will seriously harm Aboriginal rights, and destroy the environment. There was no proper consultation with Aboriginal communities about this legislation. This is part of a larger concern about an ongoing lack of respect by Canada for Aboriginal communities and their rights and issues.

What is "Idle No More"?

Four Aboriginal women started a 'grassroots' campaign called "Idle No More" to focus on the above concerns. There are no official leaders for Idle No More. Locally-organized protests spread around Canada and the world since early December. Many involve "round-dances" in public places such as malls and major roads. Some block road or rail lines. Most are spontaneously organized using social media including Facebook, Twitter, and blogs.

What Does This Have to Do With Chief Theresa Spence?

Chief Spence of Attawapiskat First Nation started a hunger strike on December 10. She will stop the hunger strike when the Prime Minister and the Governor General meet with First Nations leaders to talk about restoring a respectful treaty relationship between Canada and First Nations.

Idle No More – What's It About?

Why Should Non-Aboriginal People Care?

The proposed legal changes affect us all. The last government budget bills, Bills C-38 and C-45, changed over 100 Canadian laws without normal Parliamentary debate. The changes were rolled into huge 'omnibus' bills, totaling almost 1000 pages, involving many non-budgetary changes, and limiting the Parliamentary debate. All Canadians should be concerned about this failure of democracy, about the gutting of Canada's federal environmental laws, and about unjust laws affecting Aboriginal people. "We are all treaty people" – we all benefit from the treaties that opened this country for settlement and we are all responsible for upholding the honour of the treaty relationship.

A Summary of Current Federal Legislative Amendments Affecting First Nations

The Proposed Legislation	Why It Concerns First Nations
Bill C-38 Budget Omnibus Bill #1	• This 450 page bill changed more than 70 federal Acts without proper Parliamentary debate. • This bill dramatically changes Canada's federal environmental legislation, removing many protections for water, fish, and the environment. • The changes were made without consulting First Nations.
Bill C-45 Budget Omnibus Bill #2	• This second bill also exceeds 450 pages, and changed 44 federal laws, again without proper Parliamentary debate. • This bill removes many fish habitat protections and fails to recognize Aboriginal commercial fisheries. • Changes to the Navigable Waters Protection Act reduce the number of lakes and rivers where navigation and federal environmental assessment is required from 32,000 to just 97 lakes, and from 2.25 million to just 62 rivers. This means a shocking 99% of Canada's waterways lost their protection for navigation and federal enviro assessment purposes. • These changes were made without consulting First Nations.
Bill C-27 First Nations Financial Transparency Act	• This bill imposes standards on First Nations governments that far exceed those for municipal, provincial and federal officials in other jurisdictions. • It requires First Nation-owned businesses (unlike non-Aboriginal businesses) to publicly report income and expenses, thus undermining competitiveness. • It adds additional bureaucracy to the existing requirement that each First Nation provide Ottawa over 150 financial reports each year, contrary to the recommendations of Canada's Auditor General and the Treasury Board. • These changes are based on a common, racist assumption that First Nations' officials are all corrupt – an assumption that is factually and statistically incorrect.
The First Nations Private Property Ownership Act (Proposed)	• The government intends to introduce this legislation, but it hasn't yet. • The Act would permit private property ownership within reserve boundaries. Individual bands would be able to adopt the legislation on an optional basis. • A private property system is contrary to the goal of many First Nations to protect Aboriginal lands as a collective resource. • The Act would allow the small existing Aboriginally-owned land base to be sold to non-Aboriginal buyers, forever losing these lands as Aboriginal lands. This is particularly a risk for impoverished communities who may be forced by economic desperation to sell their own lands for short term gain. • First Nations need more options to use their lands for economic development purposes, but this simple 'one size fits all' fix is dangerous. The government should instead work with First Nations to address real self-sufficiency by ensuring Aboriginal control over resources extracted in their traditional lands, and addressing educational, health and other social development.

The Proposed Legislation	Why It Concerns First Nations
Bill S-2 Family Homes on Reserve and Matrimonial Interests or Right Act	• There are currently no laws that determine how property on reserve is divided up when married couples divorce. This bill addresses that "gap", but does so without recognizing First Nations' jurisdiction over reserve property. • There are many issues associated with matrimonial property on reserve, including violence against women, housing availability, self-government rights, capacity to develop and enforce laws, and access to justice. These issues have been disregarded in the interests of a "simple fix". • The provisional laws in this legislation will infringe on First Nations' inherent self-government rights. The legislation will also make it difficult for people to ensure the laws are enforced, as they would have to go to a provincial court, which can be difficult due to distance and expense.
Bill S-6 First Nations Elections Act	• This Bill provides an alternative elections regime under the Indian Act. • Although this will affect all First Nations, there was no consultation about it. • It is positive that this bill allows First Nations to opt into an alternative regime for elections. The Minister can, however, simply impose an election process against the will of a First Nation community, and at the discretion of the Minister (if the Minister decides there has been a problem with an election). This can lead to political interference with First Nations elections.
Bill S-8 Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act	• This Act will allow Canada to over-ride First Nation by-laws, BCRs and policies that protect safe drinking water. • The Minister will now have the power to require First Nations to charge fees to members for receiving clean water. • The Act allows the government to annul or destroy Aboriginal rights and treaty rights "to the extent necessary to ensure safe drinking water." This is a limited power but is concerning in principle, especially when the government was not able to provide any justification why it needed this power.
Bill C-428 Indian Act Amendment and Replacement Act	• This is a private members bill that is a substantial piece of legislation which would impose sweeping changes to the Indian Act. Yet there has been no proper consultation with First Nations about it. • First Nations support the need to abolish the Indian Act. Any discussion about legislation to replace the Indian Act, however, needs to fully involve First Nations. Yet there has been no substantial consultation on this bill.
Bill S-207 An Act to amend the Interpretation Act	• This Bill says that no legislation will be interpreted as annulling or destroying Aboriginal or treaty rights. However, if another Act showed a clear intention of destroy such rights, this Act would not prevent that from happening.
Bill S-212 First Nations Self-Government Recognition Bill	• This legislation has been introduced for the fourth time. • This Act would make it possible for First Nations to take on much of the authority currently given to provinces (such as fisheries, wildlife and habitat management, education, child protection and adoption, and health care). • If the government intends to support or proceed with this Act, however, there must be consultation with First Nations as the impact on First Nation communities will be profound.

Bonjour Karine and Manju,

This is an informal email debrief for the DM and AsDM on last week's discussion on FNPP at the FPT ADM's PPSSC table.

On May 7, 2013, Shawn co-chaired the FPT Assistant Deputy Ministers' Policing and Public Safety Steering Committee (PPSSC). His co-chair was Bob Purcell (Nova Scotia).

A summary of discussions at the meeting is being prepared by the Law Enforcement and Policing Branch (LPB). In the meantime, Shawn wanted to provide you with some highlights from our 90-minute discussion on the First Nations Policing Program (FNPP).

Hmm.

The DM's office Annick Paquin is trying to set a meeting for our Commissioner, Luc Portelance and the DM for the 2nd or 3rd (I am on standby) to discuss the Idle No More movement moving forward (meme chose)....Might be tough for us to pre-meet on this...or is this all the same thing.

My office in particular can come to the table with the information we have on what we know/anticipate, Rennie's from a coordination perspective, I could also drag along Insp Lesage from Aboriginal Policing.

BUILDING A SAFE AND RESILIENT CANADA

Towards A Strategic Policy Agenda

April 12, 2013

Canada

Purpose and Overview

- To provide an overview of the key medium-term trends and drivers that characterize Public Safety's complex policy landscape and the new realities in which we operate

- To outline some of the challenges and pressures currently facing the Public Safety Portfolio

- To present some initial thinking around a renewed approach to develop a coherent policy agenda across the Portfolio

- To trigger the next level of discussion on what our strategic policy agenda should be – Where are we now? Where do we need to go? How do we close the gap?

New realities in which we operate create a complex policy landscape

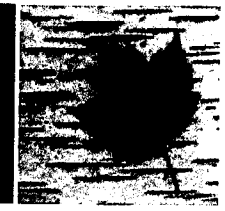

Fiscal Restraint and Economic Uncertainty Persist:

- Global economic uncertainty is the "new norm", creating a new threat class (i.e., the economic downturn and the deficit are emerging security issues)
- Strong cost drivers persist (e.g., policing costs, emergency management including post-recovery costs)
- Growing foreign investment/interest in Canada's strategic economic sectors (e.g., natural resources) and increased international competition for skilled labour may result in new risks and considerations
- Slower projected economic growth will deliver a hit to federal revenues; conditions of ongoing fiscal restraint (e.g., limited Departmental budgets, possibility of deeper cuts or no new spending, HR/mobility issues for staff, etc.)

A Complex Policy Landscape

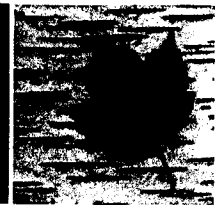

The Global "Security-Scape" is Shifting:

- "Strategic geopolitical shocks" (e.g., Arab Spring; record-level EU unemployment rates) can potentially give rise to global instability, leading to safety and security issues (e.g., increase in radicalization)
- Cyber-crime, cyber-security and cyber-espionage threats continue to intensify; transnational and organized crime networks are sophisticated and difficult to penetrate
- Bilateral engagement on security issues (e.g., on border security) will continue to be a priority
- The threat of environmental disasters and extreme weather events (e.g., flooding, storms, etc.) remain ongoing with the potential to threaten critical infrastructure and community resilience

A Complex Policy Landscape, cont'd

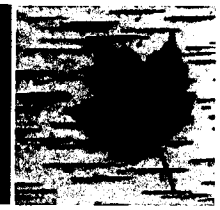

The Roles of Governments are Shifting:

- Government role is changing, from "doer" to "enabler"
- Pressures on government budgets are mounting and there is a need to look for innovative ways to reduce costs and risks
- New partnerships based on sharing of information and resources are needed with provinces, territories, private and not-for-profit sectors, academia and communities
- The focus on community engagement by governments suggests that a new approach to the policy process is required – one that is open, inclusive, transparent, accountable, collaborative and "bottom-up"

A Complex Policy Landscape, cont'd

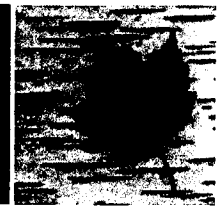

Demographics Are Transitioning:

- The number of seniors in Canada, aged 65 and over, stood at almost 15% of the Canadian population in 2011 and is projected to account for almost a quarter of the total population by 2031
- Seniors are more likely than younger victims to report a violent crime, however the rate of violent victimization amongst youth was 15 times higher than the rate for seniors in 2009
- Canadian youth are faced with challenging labour market prospects and social exclusion is a risk for those that have weaker labour force attachments
- Aboriginal population in Canada is young and growing with Aboriginal youth over-represented in the NEET Group (not in education, employment or training); "Idle No More" phenomenon may intensify
- Widespread immigration and the high proportion of newcomers to the country is changing Canada's diversity profile; the dynamics of ethno-cultural concentration in cities is complex with potential impacts on social cohesion amongst and between communities

Special / Regional issues mobility

Various Challenges and Pressures exist...

On Countering Crime: Disconnect of evidence & public debate.

- Overall crime rates are decreasing but rates for some offences (e.g., child sex offences, impaired driving and drug offences) warrant concern; emerging crime issues include youth radicalization, youth gangs and cyber-bullying

- Young adults are responsible for 26% of violent crimes, and suffer higher rates of victimization; this is especially true in Aboriginal communities

- Police-reported violent crime is about 3 times higher than the national average in the Yukon and 7 to 8 times higher in the NWT and Nunavut; on-reserve violent crime rate is 8 times greater than in the rest of country

- Policing costs and delays in courts put a serious and increasing strain on the system; policing ($8.6B/yr), corrections ($4.8B/yr); and total costs of crime (estimated at $99.6B/yr)

Challenges and Pressures, cont'd

On National Security:

- Cyber attacks are the greatest threat facing Canada's critical infrastructure; need to consider how to strengthen the resilience of vital assets and systems as critical infrastructure partners seek more support from Government

- Canadian Cyber Incident Response Centre recorded 924 incidents in 2012 (affecting finance, ICT, energy/utilities sectors) – this represents only a fraction of actual cyber attacks on Canadian systems

- Methods of cyber attacks are cheaper, more easily accessible and less attributable than conventional approaches

- "Home-grown" violent extremism, including those traveling for the purpose of terrorism, continues to pose a threat. Some engaged in terrorist activities are travelling to emerging conflict zone where there is political transition and instability, primarily in Africa and parts of the Middle East

Challenges and Pressures, cont'd

On Border Strategies:

- 65% of Canadians agreed that protecting their personal information will be one of the most important issues facing the country in the next ten years; 44% of Canadians were concerned about Canada sharing more information with the US

- With globalization, Canada's dependence on the US will continue to diminish posing increased security challenges as travel and trade patterns shift to areas of higher or unknown risk

- In 2012, roughly 100 million people entered Canada (excluding returning Canadians) – an increase of 18% since 2009; the cross-border flow of goods has increased by 22% from 2009 to 2012

- Other challenges include:
  - Sovereignty in a Canadian context as borders open up
  - Potential effects of budget cuts in the US on cross-border travel and trade
  - Need for technology to keep pace with international counterparts (i.e., biometrics information sharing, automated border clearance, etc.)

Challenges and Pressures, cont'd

On Emergency Management:

- Globally, the trend of urbanization, and the growth of large cities, means that a natural or man-made disaster confined to a small area can have devastating consequences on large numbers of people, with cascading effects across critical infrastructure sectors

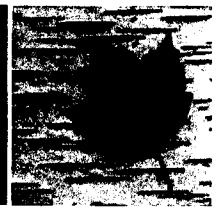

- Canada is experiencing a fundamental shift in its natural disaster risk profile: before 1990, only 3 disasters in Canadian history had exceeded $500M in damages; in the last decade, there have been 9 disasters which have exceeded $500M in damages, combining to cost Canada ~$1.1B/yr

- Rising costs related to disasters (e.g., post-recovery costs and increasing scale of disasters) may increase federal liabilities

- Challenge to ensure that the Government Operations Centre infrastructure has the capacity to support a coordinated response to a large-scale event

Challenges and Pressures, cont'd

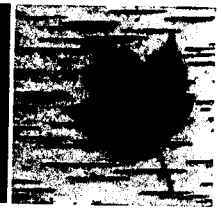

On Working Together:

- Continue building linkages between Branches and with the Portfolio Agencies to identify emerging horizontal issues
- Recognize the need to better integrate policy development
- Align and share research to better inform policy
- Strengthen mechanisms to support coordination and decision-making across the Portfolio

We Need to Reconsider our Approach to Policy

BUILDING A SAFE AND RESILIENT CANADA

Moving towards the development of a strategic policy agenda (e.g., a Strategic Policy Framework) will ensure that...

...policy is informed

...policy is strategic

Focusing On Our Strategic Policy Agenda

BUILDING A SAFE AND RESILIENT CANADA

We know what are the key policy issues and realities driving our current policy agenda. Given the complex policy landscape and our current challenges and pressures:

1. What should be the key strategic policy issues that we focus on in the next 3 years?

2. Will this differ from our current focus? If so, what will be the impact of modifying our course?

3. What are the cross-cutting themes that we should focus on (e.g., youth)?

4. How do we close the gap from where we are to where we need to move towards?

5. How will we achieve this as a Portfolio?

	- Gina welcomed everyone.
	- Corita Harty, newly appointed Ontario Regional Director is introduced by Bob Lesser.
	- John Ossowski, will be joining Public Safety (PS) as Associate Deputy Minister (AsDM).
	  o Mr. Ossowski plans on being very involved, especially with the Memorandums to Cabinet (MC).
	[redacted]
	[redacted]
	- Thank you to everyone on effort and time on finances, as a result, the Department and Branch are in much better shape than last year this time as a result.
	- Federal/Provincial/Territorial (FPT) meeting of Deputy Ministers (DM) is being held tomorrow.
	- Some topics on their agenda include:
	  o 700mhz;
	  o Public Alerting; and o Some FPT Working Groups.
	- Next week there is an Assistant Deputy Ministers Emergency Management Committee (ADM EMC) meeting scheduled.
	- Talent management discussions will be coming up at executive level.
	- Gina will be travelling to Washington, D.C., in a few weeks.

Debrief of Executive Meetings -Gina Wilson	- Paul MacKinnon briefed that there will now be a monthly meeting between Minister Toews and the Prime Minister's Office. - There has been talk surrounding the ongoing Idle No More movement/protests. - Rosemary Stephenson spoke in regards to the audit of safety and security on reserves. o There was an emergency management component as well as a policing component. - Gary Robertson spoke to the recurring issues at 340 Laurier Ave. building. - Mr. Richard Wex gave a debrief of an Economics of Policing conference that was held.

HR Mentorship Program - Shabana Aziz	- Human Resources (HR) would like to encourage greater partnership and participation in the mentorship program.
	  o HR has been hearing that employees at lower levels feel they could use a senior mentor.
	  o HR wishes that you encourage your managers to offer their time and knowledge and guidance to lower level employees by signed up for the program.
	  o All that is required is one hour per month of time for mentoring.
	  o HR understands that PS being a smaller organization could be keeping participation rates at lower levels.
	  o February 14, 2013, is the deadline for mentorship applications to be sent to HR.
	  o There will be an event held on February 27, 2013, to help those who have not been paired in the mentorship program.
	- Issues (and resulting conversation) raised by committee members:

AGENDA ITEMS	KEY INFORMATION/DISCUSSION POINTS (Facts, Observations, Questions, Advice)
	○ Kurtis Clifford: The extended lengths of the forms that must be filled out by mentors are a hindrance and potentially deter people from participating. ▪ Response from HR: Long forms allow for better matching of mentors and mentees. ○ David Myers: While the mentorship program could break down silos, in the regions it's hard to get the face to face interaction that allows for effective mentoring to occur. Some possible solutions could include making Skype conversations an option or to arrange travel plans which would allow for mentors and mentees to meet. ○ Nadine Stiller: Face-time on the IPADs would be able to overcome this however it is blocked on the current IPADs. ○ Mr. Gary Donovan on behalf of Gina: Alternatives to get around these issues will have to be looked at (travel arrangement/technical issues). - Shabana: Thank you for your time. (departs)
Debrief of Secretariat Meetings - Marcie Scott	- Ms. Marcie Scott introduced herself. - Update on committees: ○ ADM EMC was held December 5, 2012. ▪ The minutes from this meeting are now available on the portal. ○ Directors General Emergency Management Committee (DG EMC) was held on January 16, 2013. ▪ Presentations during this meeting were on 700MHz; Public Alerting; Chemical, Biological, Radiological, Nuclear and Explosive (CBRNE), North American Plan for Animal and Pandemic Influenza, and an update on Beyond the Border. ○ Next ADM EMC meeting will be held on February 6, 2013. ▪ Topics for this meeting include the CRTC inquiry, 2015 Pan American Games update, follow-up from Deputy Ministers Emergency Management Committee (DM EMC) meeting, and update from Government Operations Centre (GOC). ▪ The ADM EMC presentation on the Pan American Games will be given by Pierre Trudel and will be a verbal presentation. ○ Preparations for the DM EMC meeting on February 19, 2013 meeting are underway. ○ Minutes from the December 12, 2012 FPT Senior Officials Responsible for Emergency Management meeting are now available on the portal. ○ There is a Deputy Ministers teleconference scheduled for tomorrow, January 30, 2013. ○ The Domestic Group on Emergency Management will have a meeting in either April or May.
Roundtable – Info Sharing - All	National Emergency Preparedness Directorate (NEPD): - NEPD has been working with Tri-Services Organization and Defence Research and Development Canada on employee interchange. The interchange should be in place by April 1, 2013. ○ One casual employee will be working with us starting very shortly. ○ This individual will focus on preparedness and risk. - An inter-departmental exercise coordination meeting took place this morning. ○ The committee was briefed on the exercises being put forward by Health Canada in regard to the 2015 Pan American Games. - A draft of the National Exercise Calendar is being brought forward to the DG EMC meeting. - NEPD is currently finishing up the Fukashima report. - Risk dialogue held by Strategic Policy Branch (SPB). ○ There was a high level of participation in the dialogue which indicated that various cuts and opposes to risk creates a self-awareness of who is dealing with risk. - Tracy Perry and members of the Continuity of Government (CCG) team will be travelling to the alternate site along with parties from two other CCG institutions to discuss issues of connectivity, amongst other subjects.

AGENDA ITEMS	KEY INFORMATION/DISCUSSION POINTS (Facts, Observations, Questions, Advice)

	- NEPD has some ongoing staffing issues with employees on maternity leave, extended sick leave and assignments with Corporate Management Branch (CMB).
	- BCP Audit is now Audit of Emergency Management Planning, Leadership and Oversight.
	- NEPD is working closely and spending a lot of time on contracting to get key contracts in place.
	  o Suggestion of creating a "drop dead date" column was made so that they can see any problems or major concerns before any deadlines.
	  o As of currently, everything looks good with the contracts.
	- NEPD will be providing a briefing note on Canada School of Public Service to Gina shortly.
	Government Operations Centre (GOC):
	- The GOC's work with the Federal Emergency Response Plan is ongoing, building a working group structure.
	- The GOC has established a Directors General Event Response Committee.
	- The GOC would like to remind everyone that flood and forest fire season is coming up quickly. As such, consultations will be ongoing.
	Emergency Management Policy and Planning Directorate (EMPPD):
	- All Hazards Risk Assessment (AHRA):
	  o Is entering the third cycle of the AHRA process.
	  o There will be an Interdepartmental Risk Assessment Working Group on February 15, 2013, to discuss and select the threats and hazards that will be assessed in this cycle based upon rationales linked to Government priorities.
	- Ongoing Beyond the Border activities:
	  o The Canada-United States CBRNE Working Group will meet in Washington DC from February 20-22, to begin development of the CBRNE concept of operations.
	- Pan/Para Pan American Games meeting with status update from the province will be held at Royal Canadian Mounted Police Headquarters on January 30, 2013. This meeting will provide updated information to assist in scoping the federal participation in Games safety and security.
	Regional Operations Directorate (ROD):
	- The DM approved the fourth quarter Travel, Hospitality and Conference document on January 1, 2013.
	  o Matthew Thomas created a simplified version that will be sent out to everyone.
	  o This document will be password protected so if you require any changes, please contact Brenda Séguin.
	- In regards to the Regional Rotation Program for the fourth quarter, there were close to 30 employees who submitted to participate; up to 16 assignments will be arranged to or from the NCR/regions; four branches are involved thus far (National Security, SPB, EM&RO and CMB).
	- The four action groups that were identified at the last All Staff meeting are all up and running, and are on a timeline to provide products and/or recommendations for action plans in April.
	  o ROD will continue to touch base with group leads in the Branch; there may be a need for management support for the work of the groups, such as for engagement of teams to seek feedback on group proposals.
	  o The three year plan has been made more thematic and priorities supplied have been grouped along program, policy and operations lines, emphasizing where coordination occurs across Directorates.
	  o ROD will share with EBMC members in late February, for final review ahead of distribution to the Branch.
	  o The content of the Plan will help inform of our annual Branch Business Plan exercise, which is just starting.
	- Bob Lesser will be meeting with Gina, Pascal Bégin, and Suzanne Larose on travel commitments, contracts, and training to identify potential lapses and options to mitigate.
	- Two weeks ago at the Departmental Management Committee meeting, a presentation was provided regarding an initiative to align the Departmental business and management processes with the functional management

s.69(1)(g) re (c)	model. o A transitional DG Advisory Committee will be created to provide options, advise and a plan to DMC to align the various Departmental activities. o Working groups may be created to look at the various processes. - ROD is working with SPB to develop responses to the PS - ROD spoke with SPB on Monday about developing next year's business plans. o SPB will provide two weeks to Branches to develop a preliminary business plan that will then be discussed with the regions to inform the completion of the Branch plans, prior to being used by the regions to align their business plans with program requirements and regional capacity. - Ideas campaign and regional related input and ideas are currently being addressed / looked at by ROD. - ROD is "taking the temperature" of the mood in the regions in regards to the Public Service Employee Survey. o Looking at what are still issues in the regions, and what can we do about it. Talking about how best to go forward, without conducting more surveys. Regions: - Ontario: o Ms. Harty and the Ontario Regional Office are having numerous visits coming up in the near future. - Quebec: o The Quebec Regional Office is currently awaiting news on Memoranda to Cabinet. o There has been ongoing work with Treaty committees. o The National Crime Prevention Centre side of the office has been working on the upcoming symposium. o The competition for the PM-06 position is almost complete. o An update on contract implication project will be coming along in the near future. o The Quebec Regional Office just has a visit from PS Information Technology (IT) Colleagues whom installed the first social media station which employees have positively responded to. o Mr. Clifford recently met with his Aboriginal Policing counterpart, who also deals with public safety issues within the Aboriginal community. o The Quebec Regional office is looking forward to an upcoming visit by the Deputy Minister. o The Quebec Regional Office is moving towards an integrated action plan for their office. Communications: - Communications has been working with FEMA and Gina's office in regards to the Hurricane Sandy: lessons learned file. - There will be a FEMA Think Tank teleconference on February 6, 2013. o If you want an advanced idea of what these discussions, there is a dial in capacity.
Closing Remarks	- Mr. Ossowski stopped by the meeting and was introduced to the committee members. A quick introduction and overview of responsibilities was given by each member. - Mr. Ossowski thanked everyone and said that he looked forward to getting to know everyone. o Mr. Ossowski has a background in security, and is very interested in emergency management and the work being done by EM.

Subject: FN Deck for DMs

Good morning,

The GOC is preparing a deck for Deputy Heads on how any potential escalation of First Nations protests would be managed at the national level should such an event emerge. This deck is based on the Federal Emergency Response Plan and previous experience managing such events.

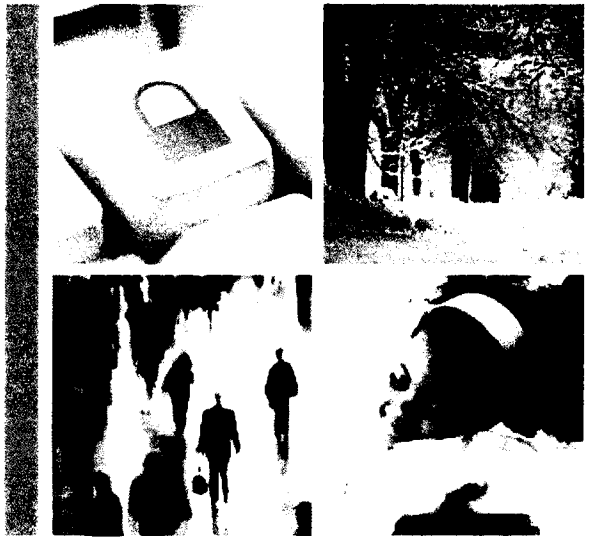

The attached deck will be discussed on Thursday afternoon by the ADMs from EM&RO, Strategic Policy, LEPB, CSPB with NSB invited as optional.

Should you have any comments please don't hesitate.

ISSUE

How does the Government of Canada prepare a whole-of-government response to a significant escalation in First Nations' (FN) protests?

DRAFT

BACKGROUND: FN Protests

Issues:

- Ongoing dissatisfaction with the crown (e.g., Bill C-45, various Government decisions, 2013 Federal Budget).

- Points of contention: Consultation, Accommodation and Compensation.

- Grassroots protest movement emerged amongst FNs and non-aboriginal supporters (e.g., Idle No More). This movement has explicitly and consistently stated its non-violent intentions.

DRAFT

So Far:

- There have been 493 protest actions held nation-wide since 09 Dec 2012.
- Highly successful Federal response by all partners coordinated through the GOC and reporting to ADM National Security Operations Committee.

MAJOR ROLES AND RESPONSIBILITIES (Municipalities and Provinces)

- The local, yet widespread, nature of the ongoing FN protests has necessitated response by agencies and departments of all levels of government (municipal, provincial / territorial, and federal).

- Municipal authorities have been largely responsible for the initial response to local protests (e.g., permits, law enforcement by police of local jurisdiction).

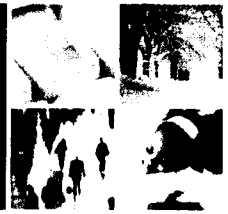

DRAFT

- Where the jurisdiction is provincial, responses largely by provincial departments of transportation or police forces (ON & PQ)

- In many jurisdictions the municipal and provincial police have been the RCMP.

MAJOR ROLES AND RESPONSIBILITIES (Federal)

- At the Federal level, the primary departments engaged during the FN protests were:
  - AANDC – primary responsibility for FN on reserve, Inuit and Métis – principle conduit for information on protests, policy and program lead
  - RCMP – often the police of jurisdiction. Responsible for the RCMP policing efforts. May provide leadership and guidance across the broader police community.
  - GOC – ensures situational awareness, assesses risk, identifies issues, and as required conducts planning and coordinates whole of government response
  - TC – principle conduit for information on impacts on transportation infrastructure and interface with transportation sector critical infrastructure owners / operators
- Supported by:
  - DFO – supplying information on fisheries issues, as well as general situational awareness from officers present in or near Aboriginal communities
  - CBSA – information and response at border crossings, as well as collection and dissemination of intelligence concerning protests potentially impacting Port of Entry Operations
  - PCO – policy support
  - CSIS – intelligence support regarding potential extremist involvement
  - ITAC – monitoring and providing integrated and comprehensive threat assessments of potential serious violence from domestic extremism

DRAFT

The Role of the Government Operations Centre (GOC)

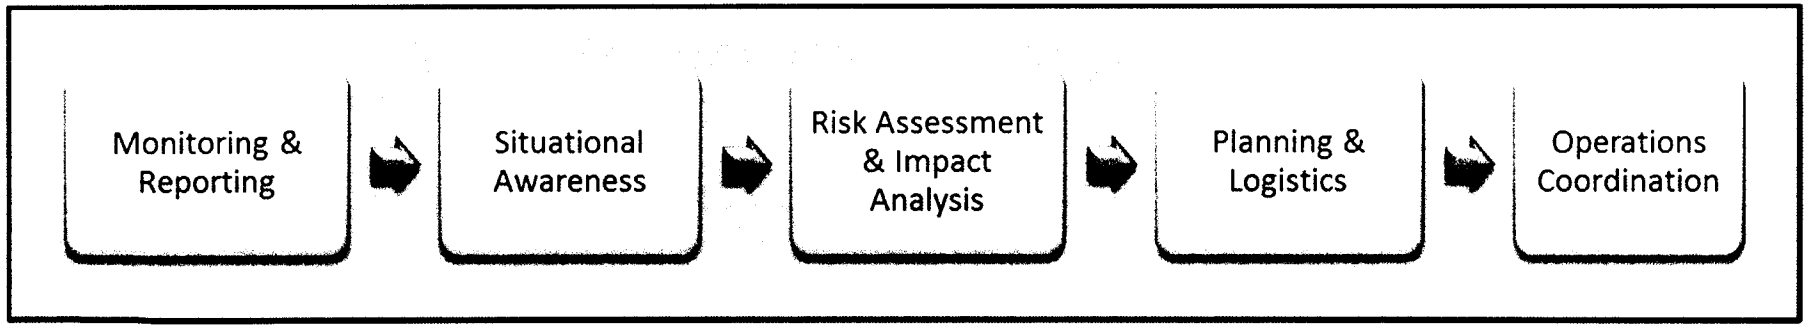

SAFE RESILIENT CANADA

- On behalf of the Government of Canada, to support response coordination of events affecting the national interest

- It is an interdepartmental response-focused asset of the Government of Canada working in support of deputy heads, departments and agencies at the national (strategic) whole-of-government level

DRAFT

- It brings all partners into a common environment to harmonize collective actions and abilities into efficient analysis and action

EVENT MANAGMENT

- The GOC has used an improved structure for coordinating an integrated, whole-of-government response to the three significant protest periods over the past year. There have been no significant gaps identified in the whole-of-government response.

- The initial response to individual events, such as protests, are the responsibility of local authorities. For example, police of local jurisdiction supported by provincial government organizations

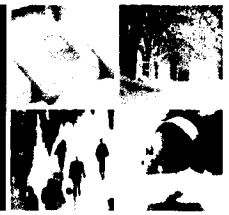

DRAFT

- However, when an event involves federal jurisdiction, national interest, or at the request of provincial authorities, federal resources could become involved.

- Should national interest be affected or federal resources be requested then pursuant to the Emergency Management Act (EMA), the Minister of Public Safety is responsible for coordinating the Government of Canada's response to an event.

ADM & DM COMMITTEES

- The ADM Committee is supported by the GOC. For any response to FN protests, the ADM Committee is tailored to the departments and agencies with primary or supporting responsibilities and mandates.
- The DM Committee is supported by the GOC through the ADM Committee. Similar to the ADM Committee the DM Committee would be tailored to the departments and agencies with primary or supporting responsibilities and mandates.
- Should protests escalate the structure of the DM Committee will need to be confirmed.
- The GOC provides interdepartmental information or decision support material to the committees
- While decisions are made at levels of authority, should a DM level decision be required, it is this committee that decision request will come to. The DM Committee is the committee which informs Cabinet Committee or seeks Cabinet Committee decisions.

DRAFT

PUBLIC COMMUNICATIONS COORDINATION

- Public Safety Canada Communications Directorate ensures a whole of government coordinated and integrated communications response (FERP)

- Director General, Public Safety Communications, identified role in FERP Governance Structure – advice to Deputy Minster's, Minister's Office, PCO.

DRAFT

- While Public Safety Canada is responsible for ESF # 12 – Public Communications, other departments and agencies continue to retain their mandated authorities and responsibilities.

AREAS FOR CLARIFICATION

- Confirm the construct of the DM Committee for FN issues.

- While the assumption is that the Minister responsible for AANDC will lead for communications, at what point would (if at all) this lead shift to the Minister of Public Safety during an escalation? Would this be based on a DM Committee recommendation to PCO/PMO?

Subject: Global Day of Action - 28 Jan

As an update on today's activities, please see below. Unless there are significant developments there will not be any further messages events today.

Although a number of protests were planned for the "Idle No More Global Day of Action", inclement weather seems to be having an impact on turn out. Currently, 37 events are scheduled for today; all of which are expected to remain peaceful. Some notable protests, where large turns out were anticipated are:

Ottawa: At 11:30 EST, approx. 250 protesters began a march from Victoria Island to Parliament Hill. Once at Parliament Hill, protesters are expected to be joined by another approx. 1000 people coming to Ottawa from Toronto as part of a "Grass Roots Caravan." The rally is expected to last until 16:00 EST.

Ontario: From 13:00 - 17:00 EST, members of the Akwesasne FN (near Cornwall, ON) plan to march along the Seaway International Bridge; which connects Cornwall ON to Akwesasne and Massena NY. As of 10:10 EST, CBSA indicates that bridge operations remain, and are expected to remain, normal. CBSA has assessed that given poor weather conditions and the lack of support for a bridge closure, it is unlikely that bridge traffic will be significantly affected by protest activities.

Saskatchewan: At 13:00 EST, members of the Muskowekwan FN plan to blockade a segment of the CN railway line that runs through the Muskowekwan FN (near Lestock, SK). At present, there is no indication as to how many people will attend nor how long the blockade is expected to last. The affected line is a CN main rail line and part of the Asia Pacific Gateway running between Prince Rupert, BC and Chicago, IL. This line carries VIA rail passenger trains as well. CN has advised that they have Province wide injunctions for British Columbia, Manitoba and Saskatchewan as it relates to aboriginal blockades.

Subject: 25 Jan - Update in preparation for 28 Jan 2012

Information continues to develop on "Idle No More" events planned for 28 January 2013. In Saskatchewan, RCMP is reporting that at approx. 13:00 EST, members of the Muskowekwan FN plan to blockade a segment of the CN railway line that runs through the Muskowekwan FN near Lestock, SK. There is no indication as to how many people will attend or how long the blockade is expected to last. Transport Canada (TC) confirms that the affected line is a CN main rail line and part of the Asia Pacific Gateway running between Prince Rupert, BC and Chicago, IL. This line carries VIA rail passenger trains as well. TC will update the GOC with information regarding planned rail traffic on the line for 28 January 2013 as soon as this information becomes available.

In Ontario, FN protesters in Cornwall ON are also planning a march on the Seaway International Bridge at approximately 13:00 EST. The bridge connects Cornwall ON to Akwesasne and Massena NY. There is no indication as to how long the march is expected to last and whether cross-border traffic will be disrupted. However, a similar type of event occurred on 5 January 2013, where approx. 300 protesters blocked cross-border traffic for about 5 hours. The event remained peaceful.

The days the biggest demonstration continues to be the Unity Rally in Ottawa ON, set to commence at 10:30 EST. Organizers predict approx. 3000 people to participate in the march from Victoria Island to Parliament Hill; where they will be joined by another approx. 1000 people coming to Ottawa from Toronto as part of a "Grass Roots Caravan." Other sources suggest 1,500. Currently, there is no indication as to how long the rally will last.

At present, a total of 19 events planned for Monday, 28 January 2013 are forecasted to take place across Canada. All events are expected to remain peaceful.

Subject: Update in preparation for 28 Jan 2012

In preparation for Monday, I'd like to share the following:

The next significant date in the series of FN protests is scheduled for 28 January 2013, which corresponds with the return of Parliament. Organizers are referring to the protests as "Idle No More International Call-to-Action". While a number of smaller protests / demonstrations are planned across the country (activities are currently planned in BC, AB, SK, MB, ON, NS), the focus of the day's events will be a "Unity Rally" planned to take place on Parliament Hill (Ottawa ON). Organizers are expecting up to 3,000 participants, although some sources suggest only 1,500 are likely. The Rally will comprise a march from Victoria Island to the Hill beginning at 10:30EST.

Based on recent FN protest activities and calls by "Idle No More" organizers for civility, protests across the country, including the march on Parliament Hill, are anticipated to be peaceful. None are expected to affect significantly critical infrastructure. Unlike previous "Days of Action", there are a limited number of planned traffic slowdowns, though incidental and temporary traffic disruptions may occur since some events are scheduled to take place in the downtown core of several major cities.

As a result, it is not currently the intention of the GOC to establish an Event Team for the 28th or to issue SITREPs. Activities will be reported in the GOC Daily Brief and updates shared with operations centres as the day progresses assuming all goes as predicted. If there is a significant event you will receive a message directly and the GOC will then activate its normal processes. A matrix of future events will be maintained and shared with your operations centres as it is currently.

The GOC with its partners will also be monitoring for breaking items that may or may not be factual and have the potential to become viral with spin-off consequences even if not true. As these items are identified they will be confirmed through partners, information related to the item passed through normal channels and if the item is significant it will be passed directly to you. PS Public Communications is engaged and will support in this effort as required.

Due to the sensitive nature of the message, please restrict your distribution.

In Sarnia today the Superior Court Judge informed both Phil Nelson from the Aamijwnaang Band and Sarnia Police Chief that they must find a way to enforce the court order to end the blockade. The then adjourned the proceedings until noon Thursday. The GOC assessment is that this adjournment was done to allow the parties to clear the blockade tonight (social media reporting blockade will voluntarily end at midnight to prevent any police engagement) in order to avoid being found in contempt of Court tomorrow when proceedings resume.

Ontario Provincial Police (OPP) are aware that they could be requested to assist Sarnia Police Services.

Collective concerns continue to mount over potential protest activities on 05 Jan. The GOC will issue a restricted distribution addendum to tonight's SITREP this evening. This will highlight areas of concern as identified by police and will be sent only to engaged federal departments and their senior officials, PCO, PMO and the OPP and will not be authorized for sharing outside those organizations receiving it. Thursday morning will see a geomatics product supporting the addendum issued as well.

As for tonight, any dramatic events that may occur in Sarnia will be e-mailed to you and will also be reflected in the morning GOC Daily Brief.

Leadership

- As you can see, the diversity amongst the membership of this protest movement ensures that there is no singular leadership body for the movement. While the INM banner has been applied to the whole current Aboriginal protest movement, it is a mistake to conflate these groups, and to try to assign singular leadership over all the protests. The followers of INM may seek advice or ideological guidance from the founders and spokespeople of INM, but INM is a classic grassroots group that acts without direction from a centre. The group itself says its purpose is "to support and encourage grassroots to create their own forums to learn more about indigenous rights and our responsibilities to our Nationhood via teach-ins, rallies and social media."

s.16(1)(a)(ii

Motivations

- As a group, INM is motivated primarily by anger and dissatisfaction with the Crown, but there is also an underlying, secondary dissatisfaction with some Aboriginal leadership, as opposed to "traditional" leadership. Thus, INM organizers have made it clear that "the vision of this grassroots movement [INM] does not coincide with the visions of the Leadership and that they [INM] have been given a clear mandate by the grassroots to work outside the systems of government and that is what we will continue to do".

- For their part, the Chiefs about their lack of control over the INM, a group separate from the Chiefs, or any groups involved with INM protests.

- The remaining groups have their own leadership cadres that direct the actions of their followers in ways which will best serve their agendas while appearing to be part of the larger movement. Leaders at some events have clearly rejected links to the INM.

- [redacted]

[redacted]

- The UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UNDRIP), especially its section on the Free, Prior and Informed Consent (FPIC) of indigenous people over the use of their land, is pointed to by FN academics, leadership and grassroots, as the basis of a right of veto by Canada's First Nations over not just resource development or use of the lands under their control, but also any legislation or regulation which may affect First Nations. While the Government of Canada has endorsed the UNDRIP as an aspirational document, it has neither been adopted into Canadian law nor international law. However, the notion of "prior permission and consent clearly underlies the arguments of INM, as well as most other Aboriginal groups.

Slide 3 –

- The INM movement is a movement of dissatisfaction, and has become a lightening rod for all things that are perceived by FNs as going wrong. While Bill C-45 was the spark that ignited the movement, the issues at the heart of the current FN protest movement are many, varied and ongoing. The INM agenda is so broad that any Aboriginal group can fit in its own issues (e.g. place of Aboriginal peoples in Canadian society).

- The government's omnibus Bill (C-45), as well as other government decisions (e.g., on land claims, energy / resources development, Budget 2013, etc.), are perceived by many in the Aboriginal community as being taken without due consultation and accommodation with FNs which may be affected by the outcomes of these decisions.

Influences

- [redacted]

s.21(1)(a)

- The next three influences are interconnected and especially important. They are youth, social media and success.

- The INM movement has successfully activated and engaged young aboriginals across Canada. Moreover, these young people have seen some success in publicizing their message.

- As with other interest groups and civil society movements, social media has been key to the founding, growth and success of INM, and the current Aboriginal protest movement generally. INM boast some 45,000 "Friends" on it Facebook page and numerous Twitter followers. The use of social media has also highlighted the developing gap between those who are social media literate and those who are not, with the result that the first group is leading the charge, and the potential of the second group being left behind, with unknown consequences.

- Success breeds success. While the lifespan of the INM movement has yet to be determined, the organizers of the INM movement have experienced success on several fronts, including increased media coverage, a successful social media campaign, as well as raising public awareness of Aboriginal issues, and all without violence or excessive criminality. The lessons learned, experience and knowledge gained while garnering these successes will outlive INM, while informing future protest organizers and the success of their endeavours.

Managing the Protests

- Thus far the management of the protests by both protest leaders, as well as local / provincial / federal authorities has been well handled, with the result that in the over 400 protest actions held nation-wide to date the vast majority have been peaceful and uneventful.

- The founders of the INM have repeatedly stated that they only support peaceful, awareness raising events such as flash-mob-like round dances at shopping malls and pamphleteering. It does not endorse the blockades, and neither does the AFN. That being said, where there have been blockades, they have been undertaken peacefully, often with prior notice and usually for limited times period stated. In other cases, there were only slowdowns at major thoroughfares and agreements negotiated between protesters and local authorities.

- [redacted]

s.16(1)(a)(ii)
s.21(1)(a)

- [redacted]

Slide 4 –

- So what's coming next? The grassroots aspect of the majority of the protest organizers allows for an ever changing environment of INM-labelled protests. The GOC developed and continues to maintain, in cooperation with other partner agencies and departments, an evergreen matrix of publicized protest activities across Canada. At the tactical level, this provides the best picture of expected events. At the strategic level, those departments involved in the various aspects of the federal government's response to the current Aboriginal protests agree that it is difficult to see where things are going with the movement due to the lack of centralized leadership.

- There was general discussion on the types of events which could potentially trigger greater protest, including potential violence. All agreed that the current situation was expected to remain peaceful, but that there were incidents that could further enflame the mood and actions of those protesting.

- [redacted]

s.16(1)(a)(ii
s.21(1)(a)

- In conclusion, there are seven main take-aways:
  - There has been no violence related to these protests, but the anger underlying this situation is not going away.
  - While the ongoing Aboriginal protests are generally reported as being part of the Idle No More protest movement, INM is only part of the mix of views, agendas, and actions that are currently playing out.
  - As a result, there is no central leadership to the whole movement. INM is organized and carried out at a local level with only "ideological" guidance being given by the founders. The other groups may or may not respond to their own leadership, but will continue to follow their own self-interest.
  - The motivations underlying most Aboriginal grievances can be traced to a perceived lack of Consultation, Accommodation. and increasingly Compensation. Other motivating factors would include dissatisfaction with living conditions and outcomes, treaties and rights-based agenda premised on a nation-to-nation approach and a fair share from revenue sharing.
  - Other issues beyond the original spark (i.e., Bill C-45), will continue to aggravate the situation, and will likely to remain issues of dispute beyond the lifespan of INM and the current Aboriginal protest movement.
  - The activation and energizing of Aboriginal youth, the use of social media, the realized success of INM and even the weather will all continue to have an influence in the current Aboriginal protests, and some may influence future protests activity after INM.
  - The current management of protest activities by both the government and Aboriginal protest organizers has been restrained. To date, the vast majority of protest activities have been peaceful.

MONTHLY HIGHLIGHTS

- The GOC monitored, coordinated, and provided consolidated reporting and impact analysis to stakeholders, with respect to nationwide First Nations protests ongoing in December.
- Cyber threats and trends were monitored in response to the cyber attack on several financial organizations in the U.S.
- Monitoring and contingency planning related to developments in Syria, Israel/Gaza, and the Middle-East continued at the direction of ADM NS Ops.
- A wrap-up briefing of the 2012 Arctic marine traffic season was provided by the GOC to the ADM NS Ops committee.
- Geomatics services and products were provided to several provinces and to the Quebec PS Regional Office in order to facilitate the management of events, such as the mitigation of flooding risks associated with ice jams for the upcoming 2012/2013 winter season.

INCIDENTS / ACTIVITIES SUMMARY

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT

Earthquakes

- Eight domestic earthquakes were reported in December: 04 Dec Queen Charlotte City, BC (4.1 magnitude); 05 Dec Keno, YT (5.1 magnitude); 06 Dec Queen Charlotte City, BC (4.9 magnitude); 09 Dec Queen Charlotte City, BC (4.0 magnitude); 11 Dec Fort MacPherson, NT (5.1 magnitude); 12 Dec La Malbaie, QC (4.4 magnitude); 16 Dec Masset, BC (4.0 magnitude); and 23 Dec region of Port Hardy, BC (magnitude 4.0). No damage or injuries were reported.
- Three international earthquakes were reported in December: 07 Dec Honshu, Japan (7.3 magnitude); 10 Dec Banda Sea (7.1 magnitude); and 21 Dec Vanuata Islands (6.8 magnitude).

Tropical Cyclones

- The GOC monitored three tropical cyclones: cyclone Claudia (Indian Ocean) reached Category 3 without making landfall; cyclone Evan made landfall as a Category 4 in Samoa and Fiji's main island; and cyclone Freda (Pacific Ocean) did not make landfall. There was no impact to Canadian territory.
- On 07 Dec, the GOC disseminated a 2012 Hurricane Season Wrap-up. It concluded that the 2012 Hurricane Season reported a higher number of hurricanes than normal, but with fewer hurricanes crossing into the Canadian Hurricane Response Zone.

Space Weather

- In December the GOC continued to distribute the preliminary Space Weather Bulletin developed by the Canadian Space Weather Forecast Centre (housed in Natural Resources Canada), to select federal partners. Space weather monitoring by the GOC will continue, as it is expected to take on more significance as the 2012-2014 solar cycle begins, resulting in increased activity.

SECURITY

Protests / Demonstrations

- On 28 Dec a GOC Team was established to coordinate and to provide consolidated reporting and impact analysis with respect to emerging nationwide First Nations protests organized by a group called "Idle No More", which is critical of Bill C-45. A notification and several subsequent situation reports were issued by the GOC.

SECURITY (cont.)

Domestic Events

- The GOC continued to monitor cyber threats to Canadian CI; however, to date, there has been no domestic impact.

International Events Abroad

- Monitoring and contingency planning related to developments in Syria, Israel/Gaza, and the Middle-East continued.

Marine Events

- The GOC provided a wrap-up briefing of the 2012 Arctic marine traffic season to the ADM NS Ops committee.

Air Incidents

- On 25 Dec the GOC issued a notification following a fatal Military Plane Crash that occurred in Shymkent, Kazakhstan. The Antonov An-72 plane was carrying high-ranking members of Kazakhstan's border service.

GEOMATICS

Geomatics Products

- In support of GOC reporting and monitoring, 54 geomatics products (maps) were produced in December, 26 of which were in relation to ongoing First Nations protests.

Space Debris

- Three pieces of reportable space debris (SPADOCs) were assessed by the Geomatics Section to determine potential threats to Canadian territory. None posed any threat to Canada.

Provision of Geomatics Services

- The Geomatics section has been actively engaging with the provinces of Alberta, Quebec and Newfoundland and Labrador for the mitigation of flooding caused by ice jams during the upcoming 2012/2013 winter season. The delivery of approximately 100 satellite images captured by Radarsat 1 and Radarsat 2 over areas at risk of developing serious ice jams on rivers identified by the respective provinces has begun.
- The development of two large wall maps (8ft x 12ft) for the PS Regional Office in Quebec has been completed. These maps will facilitate the management of events by providing a spatial reference to infrastructure and population.

PLANS & PROTOCOLS DEVELOPMENT

NS

- Aviation Protocol – update
  - An Air Incident Working Group meeting was held on 13 Dec.
- Contingency planning related to developments in the Middle-East.
- Telecommunications Outage - protocol required, to be developed (on hold)

EM

- Earthquake Protocol
  - Under final review within the GOC prior to subsequent OGD consultation.

EM/NS

- Federal Emergency Response Plan
  - Work plan under development
- Public Service Readiness Plan
  - Consultation

MEETINGS HELD THIS MONTH

- On 13 Dec, members of the GOC's Analysis and Operations divisions met with representatives of the Nordic embassies (Sweden, Norway, Finland and Denmark) to provide a general briefing regarding the GOC.
- Planning meetings were held by the GOC, and involving the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade (DFAIT), with regards to ongoing developments in Lebanon

UPCOMING MEETINGS

- Meetings to continue planning for the 2015 PANAM Games will be held in January 2013. These meetings will address Operations Plan development as well as Exercise Plan development.

ANALYSIS OF THE MONTH AHEAD

- Monitoring, coordination, and the provision of consolidated reporting and impact analysis by the GOC will continue in relation to ongoing nationwide First Nations protests that are critical of Bill C-45 and its implications for the Indian Act and Navigable Waters Protection Act.
- The GOC will conduct monitoring and preparedness activities related to the 2013 winter storm season and any significant impact to Canadian critical infrastructure.

FAITS SAILLANTS MENSUELS

- Le COG a surveillé, coordonné, et présenté des rapports consolidés en plus d'analyses d'impacts à des parties intéressées concernant des manifestations nationales des premières nations de décembre.
- Des menaces et tendances dans le domaine informatique ont été surveillées à la suite de cyberattaques contre plusieurs organisations financières des États-Unis.
- Surveillance et planification d'urgence relativement aux événements en Syrie, à Israël et à Gaza et au Moyen-Orient, sous la direction du CSMAOSN.
- Le COG a organisé à l'intention du CSMAOSN une réunion d'information pour résumer la saison maritime 2012 dans l'Arctique.
- Des services et des produits de géomatique ont été fournis à plusieurs provinces ainsi qu'au bureau régional de SP au Québec afin de faciliter la gestion des événements, notamment l'atténuation des risques d'inondation associés aux embâcles pour l'hiver 2012-2013.

RÉSUMÉ DES INCIDENTS ET DES ACTIVITÉS

GESTION DES URGENCES

Séismes

- Huit séismes ont été signalés à l'échelle nationale en décembre : 04 déc Queen Charlotte City, CB (magnitude de 4,1); 05 déc Keno, YT (magnitude de 5,1); 06 déc Queen Charlotte City, CB (magnitude de 4,9); 09 déc Queen Charlotte City, CB (magnitude de 4,0); 11 déc Fort MacPherson, TNO (magnitude de 5,1); 12 déc La-Malbaie, QC (magnitude de 4,4); 16 déc Masset, CB (magnitude de 4,0); 23 déc région de Port Hardy, CB (magnitude de 4,0). Aucun dommage n'a été signalé, et personne n'aurait été blessé.
- Trois séismes ont été signalés à l'échelle internationale en décembre : 07 déc Honshu, Japon (magnitude de 7,3); 10 déc mer de Banda (magnitude de 7,1); 21 déc Vanuatu (magnitude de 6,8).

Cyclones tropicaux

- Le COG a surveillé trois cyclones tropicaux en décembre : le cyclone Claudia, dans l'océan Indien, a atteint la catégorie 3; il n'a pas touché terre, ainsi que le cyclone Evan, qui a touché terre sous la forme d'un cyclone de catégorie 4 à Samoa et sur l'île principale des Fidjis ; et le cyclone Freda, dans l'océan Pacifique, qui n'a pas touché terre. Il n'a eu aucune incidence sur le territoire canadien.
- Le 07 déc, le COG a diffusé son résumé de la saison des ouragans 2012, ce qui a indiqué que le nombre d'ouragans en 2012 avait été plus élevé qu'à l'habitude, mais que moins d'ouragans ont pénétré dans la zone d'intervention du Centre canadien de prévision des ouragans.

Météo spatiale

- En décembre, le COG a poursuivi la distribution du bulletin de météo spatiale préliminaire, élaboré par le Centre canadien de météo spatiale (administré par Ressources naturelles Canada), à certains partenaires fédéraux. Le COG continuera sa surveillance de la météorologie de l'espace, car elle pourrait devenir de plus en plus importante en raison du début du cycle solaire 2012-2014, qui verra une augmentation de l'activité connexe.

SÉCURITÉ

Protestation ou manifestation

- Le 28 déc, une équipe du COG a été établie pour coordonner et produire des rapports consolidés en plus d'analyses d'impacts concernant les manifestations nationales croissantes des Premières Nations organisées par un groupe intitulé « Idle No More » qui s'oppose au Projet de loi C-45. Une notification et des rapports de situation subséquents ont été produits par le COG.

SÉCURITÉ (suite)

Incidents nationaux

- Le COG a continué de surveiller les cybermenaces aux infrastructures essentielles du Canada; toutefois, à l'heure actuelle, il n'y a eu aucune répercussion sur le Canada.

Événements internationaux à l'étranger

- Le COG a continué de surveiller l'évolution de la situation en Syrie, dans la région d'Israël/Gaza et au Moyen-Orient et d'établir des plans de contingence.

Événements maritimes

- Le COG a offert un résumé de la saison 2012 de circulation maritime dans l'Arctique au CSMAOSN.

Incidents aériens

- Le 25 déc, le COG a distribué une notification à la suite d'un écrasement fatal d'un appareil militaire au in Shymkent, Kazakhstan. L'avion Antonov An-72 transportait des hauts cadres des services frontaliers du Kazakhstan.

GÉOMATIQUE

Produits de géomatique

- En appui aux rapports et à la surveillance du COG, la section de la géomatique a préparé 54 produits (cartes) de géomatique en décembre dont 26 étaient reliés aux manifestations de Premières nations.

Débris spatiaux

- La section de la géomatique du COG a évalué trois pièces de débris spatiaux déclarables (SPADOC) pour déterminer la menace potentielle pour le territoire canadien. Aucune de ces pièces ne représentait une menace pour le Canada.

Prestation de services de géomatique

- La section de la géomatique a mobilisé activement les provinces de l'Alberta, du Québec et de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador relativement aux mesures d'atténuation des inondations causées par des embâcles pendant l'hiver 2012-2013. Elle a commencé à fournir une centaine d'images satellites, capturées à l'aide de Radarsat 1 et de Radarsat 2, des régions où il existe de grands risques que des embâcles se forment, sur les rivières précisées par les provinces.
- L'élaboration de deux grandes cartes murales (8 pieds par 12 pieds) pour le bureau régional de SP au Québec a été complétée. Celles-ci faciliteront la gestion des incidents en fournissant une référence spatiale aux propriétaires et aux exploitants d'infrastructures ainsi qu'à la population.

ÉLABORATION DE PLANS ET DE PROTOCOLES

SN

- Protocole en matière d'aviation – mise à jour
  - Le groupe de travail sur les incidents aériens s'est rencontré le 13 déc.
- Planification de contingence pour donner suite à la situation au Moyen-Orient.
- Pannes des télécommunications – un protocole est requis, à mettre au point (en suspens)

GU

- Protocole en cas de séisme
  - Fait l'objet d'une évaluation finale au sein du COG, puis sera envoyé aux fins de consultation de la part des autres ministères.

GU/SN

- Plan fédéral d'intervention d'urgence
  - Plan de travail en cours d'élaboration
- Plan d'intervention immédiate pour la fonction publique
  - Consultation.

RÉUNIONS TENUES PENDANT LE MOIS

- Le 13 déc, des membres des divisions de l'analyse et des opérations du COG ont rencontré des représentants des ambassades des pays nordiques (Suède, Norvège, Finlande et Danemark) pour leur fournir un aperçu général de ce qu'est le COG.
- Le COG a organisé des réunions de planification, auxquelles a participé le ministère des Affaires étrangères et du Commerce international (MAECI), à propos de la situation au Liban.

PROCHAINES RÉUNIONS

- D'autres réunions sur la planification des Jeux panaméricains de 2015 auront lieu en janvier 2013. Elles permettront de travailler à l'élaboration du plan d'opérations et du plan d'exercice.

ANALYSE DU MOIS À VENIR

- La surveillance, la coordination et la présentation de rapports consolidés et d'analyses d'impacts se poursuivra de la part du COG concernant les manifestations nationales croissantes des Premières Nations s'opposant au projet de loi C-45 et ses implications sur la Loi sur les Indiens et Loi sur la protection des eaux navigables.
- Le COG réalisera des activités de surveillance et de préparation liées à la saison des tempêtes d'hiver de 2013 et à leurs conséquences importantes sur les infrastructures essentielles du Canada.

MONTHLY HIGHLIGHTS

- The GOC monitored, coordinated, and issued consolidated reporting and impact analysis to stakeholders, with respect to ongoing nationwide First Nations protests in January.
- Cyber threats and trends were monitored in response to the ongoing cyber attacks on several financial organizations in the U.S. since September 2012.
- Monitoring and contingency planning related to developments in Lebanon / Syria, the Middle-East, and Northwest Africa continued.

INCIDENTS / ACTIVITIES SUMMARY

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT

Earthquakes

- Two domestic earthquakes were reported in January: 06 Jan, Port Hardy region, BC (4.4 magnitude); and 30 Jan, Fort Simpson, NT (4.2 magnitude). No damage or injuries were reported.
- Three international earthquakes were reported in January: 05 Jan, Southern Alaska (7.7 magnitude) - a Tsunami warning was issued for the coastal areas of BC and Alaska, no impact was reported; 30 Jan, Wrangell, Alaska (5.7 magnitude); 30 Jan, Vallenar, Chile (6.8 magnitude). No injuries were reported.

Tropical Cyclones

- The GOC monitored seven tropical cyclones in January: 2 in the Indian Ocean, 2 in the West Pacific and 3 in the South Pacific.

Significant Weather

- On 11-12 Jan, a blizzard, freezing drizzle and rain hit several parts of Newfoundland. As a result, government offices, schools and all the runways at St. John's International Airport were closed until late 12 Jan. Widespread isolated power outages also occurred across the province until 13 Jan.

Space Weather

- The GOC continued to distribute the preliminary Space Weather Bulletin developed by the Canadian Space Weather Forecast Centre (housed in Natural Resources Canada), to select federal partners. Space weather monitoring by the GOC will continue, as it is expected to take on more significance during the 2012-2014 solar cycle, resulting in increased activity.

SECURITY

Protests / Demonstrations

- The GOC continued to monitor and report on First Nations protests, which began in early December 2012, and continued throughout the month of January. On 14 Jan, a GOC Team was established to coordinate and provide consolidated reporting and impact analysis with respect to the protest activities associated with the 16 Jan "National Day of Action." Protests included temporary, and generally peaceful, road and rail blockades, as well as a brief blockade of two border crossings in Ontario. Similar peaceful protests also took place on 28 Jan related to the Idle No More "Global Day of Action."

Domestic Events

- The GOC continued to monitor various, actual and potential threats to Canadians and Canadian interests. To date, there has been no domestic impact.

International Events Abroad

- Monitoring and contingency planning related to developments in Lebanon / Syria, the Middle East and Northwest Africa continued.

Maritime Derelict Cruise-ship

- The GOC monitored the derelict Russian cruise-ship, Lyubov Orlova, travelling off the coast of Newfoundland and coordinated a conference call, organized by Transport Canada.

GEOMATICS

Geomatics Products

- In support of GOC reporting and monitoring, 68 geomatics products (maps) were produced, 30 of which were in relation to ongoing First Nations protests.

Space Debris

- Three pieces of reportable space debris (SPADOCs) were assessed to determine potential threats to Canadian territory. None posed any threat to Canada.

Provision of Geomatics Services

- The GOC has been engaging with the provinces of Alberta, Quebec and Newfoundland and Labrador for the mitigation of flooding caused by ice jams during the upcoming 2012/2013 winter season. The delivery of approximately 100 satellite images captured by Radarsat 1 and Radarsat 2 over areas at risk of developing serious ice jams on rivers identified by the respective provinces has begun.

FAITS SAILLANTS MENSUELS

- Le COG a surveillé les manifestations de janvier des Premières nations dans l'ensemble du pays et a coordonné la production de rapports consolidés et d'analyses des effets à l'intention des intervenants à ce sujet.
- Les cybermenaces et les tendances ont été surveillées à la suite des cyberattaques survenues à l'égard de plusieurs organisations financières des États-Unis depuis septembre 2012.
- Le COG a continué de surveiller l'évolution de la situation au Liban, en Syrie, au Moyen-Orient et au Nord-Ouest de l'Afrique et d'établir des plans d'urgence.

RÉSUMÉ DES INCIDENTS ET DES ACTIVITÉS

GESTION DES URGENCES

Séismes

- Deux séismes ont été signalés à l'échelle nationale en janvier : 06 jan, région de Port Hardy, C.-B. (magnitude de 4,4); et 30 jan, Fort Simpson, NT (magnitude de 4.2). Aucun dommage ni blessure n'ont été signalés.
- Trois séismes ont été signalés à l'échelle internationale en janvier : 05 jan, Sud de l'Alaska (magnitude de 7,7) - un avertissement de tsunami avait été émis pour les régions côtières de la C.-B. et de l'Alaska, aucun dommage n'a été signalé; 30 jan, Wrangell, Alaska (magnitude de 5.7); et 30 jan, Vallenar, Chile (magnitude de 6.8). Personne n'aurait été blessé.

Cyclones tropicaux

- Le COG a surveillé sept cyclones tropicaux en janvier : 2 dans l'océan Indien, 2 dans l'ouest du Pacifique et 3 dans le sud du Pacifique.

Conditions météorologiques d'intérêt

- Les 11 et 12 jan, un blizzard, de la bruine verglaçante et de la pluie se sont abattus sur plusieurs régions de Terre-Neuve. Ces conditions ont entraîné la fermeture de bureaux gouvernementaux, d'écoles et de toutes les pistes de l'aéroport international de St. John's jusqu'en fin de journée le 12 jan. Des pannes d'électricité se sont produites un peu partout dans la province jusqu'au 13 jan.

Météo spatiale

- Le COG a poursuivi la distribution du bulletin de météo spatiale préliminaire, élaboré par le Centre canadien de météo spatiale (administré par Ressources naturelles Canada), à certains partenaires fédéraux. Le COG continuera sa surveillance de la météo spatiale, car elle pourrait devenir de plus en plus importante pendant le cycle solaire 2012-2014, qui verra une augmentation de l'activité connexe.

SÉCURITÉ

Protestations ou manifestations

- Le COG continue de surveiller les manifestations des Premières nations qui ont commencé au début de décembre 2012 et se sont poursuivies en janvier, et de produire des rapports à ce sujet. Le 14 jan, une équipe du COG a été formée pour coordonner et produire des rapports consolidés et des analyses des effets concernant les activités de protestation liées à la Journée nationale de mobilisation, le 16 jan. Les activités ont compris des blocages temporaires, et généralement pacifiques, de routes et de voies ferrées, ainsi qu'un bref blocage de deux postes frontaliers en Ontario. Des manifestations semblables ont eu lieu le 28 jan liés au "Journée mondiale d'action."

Incidents nationaux

- Le COG a continué de surveiller les différentes menaces, réelles et possibles, pour les Canadiens et les intérêts du Canada. À l'heure actuelle, il n'y a eu aucune répercussion sur le Canada.

Événements internationaux à l'étranger

- Le COG a continué de surveiller l'évolution de la situation au Liban, en Syrie, au Moyen-Orient et au Nord-Ouest de l'Afrique et d'établir des plans d'urgence.

Navire de croisière maritime abandonné

- Le COG a surveillé la ruine du navire de croisière russe, Lyubov Orlova, pendant ses déplacements au large des côtes de Terre-Neuve, et a coordonné un appel conférence, organisée par Transports Canada.

GÉOMATIQUE

Produits de géomatique

- En appui aux rapports et à la surveillance du COG, 68 produits de géomatique (cartes) ont été élaborés, dont 30 concernaient les manifestations des Premières nations.

Débris spatiaux

- On a évalué trois pièces de débris spatiaux déclarables (SPADOC) afin de déterminer la menace potentielle qu'ils présentent pour le territoire canadien. Aucune de ces pièces ne constituait une menace pour le Canada.

Prestation de services de géomatique

- Le COG a mobilisé les provinces de l'Alberta, du Québec et de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador relativement aux mesures d'atténuation des inondations causées par des embâcles pendant l'hiver 2012-2013. Il a commencé à fournir une centaine d'images satellites, captées à l'aide de Radarsat 1 et de Radarsat 2, des régions où il existe de grands risques que des embâcles se forment, sur les rivières précisées par les provinces.

- Protocole d'intervention immédiate pour la fonction publique
  - Le COG a terminé le plan le 14 jan, le SCT l'a approuvé le 21 jan.
  - Le COG a terminé la version préliminaire le 25 jan.

COG - Rapport des incidents par mois - 2013

RÉUNIONS TENUES PENDANT LE MOIS

- Le 11 jan, le COG a rencontré la GRC et Patrimoine canadien pour décider des prochaines étapes concernant la planification des Jeux panaméricains de 2015.
- Le 23 jan, le COG a organisé la première réunion du Comité des DG sur les interventions en cas d'incident.
- Les 24 et 25 jan, des réunions de la Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) concernant les plans d'assistance mutuelle en cas d'incident chimique, biologique, radiologique, nucléaire ou à l'explosif (CBRNE) ont eu lieu à Washington.
- Le 30 jan, des experts du Centre canadien de météo spatiale ont visité le COG dans le cadre d'une séance d'information.
- Le 30 jan, le Groupe de travail chargé de la coordination fédérale des Jeux panaméricains et parapan américains de 2015 s'est réuni pour élaborer le concept fédéral des opérations.
- Le 31 jan, le groupe de travail sur les incidents aériens s'est réuni pour discuter du protocole en matière d'aviation.

PROCHAINES RÉUNIONS

- Du 19 au 21 fév, Washington accueillera d'autres réunions de la FEMA concernant les plans d'assistance mutuelle en cas d'incident CBRNE.
- Le 26 fév, le COG participera à un exercice sur table interorganismes sur le Plan fédéral en cas d'urgence nucléaire, à Ottawa.

ANALYSE DU MOIS À VENIR

- Le COG continuera de surveiller les manifestations des Premières nations dans l'ensemble du pays et de coordonner la production de rapports consolidés et d'analyses des effets à leur sujet.
- Le COG réalisera des activités de surveillance et de préparation liées à la saison des tempêtes d'hiver de 2013 et à leurs conséquences importantes sur les infrastructures essentielles du Canada.
- Le COG commencera ses prévisions et ses évaluations en prévision des saisons des inondations et des feux de forêt.

First Nations Protests – Nationwide

Incident/Event Summary: A number of First Nations protests are planned to take place on 21 Dec 2012 in a number of locations across the country. The protests are expected to be peaceful, however, there may be short-term implications to critical infrastructure. The following protests are anticipated across the country:

ON: Open source reporting indicates that portions of Highway 401 and Wellington Road in London, ON will be closed on 21 Dec. A ceremony at Victoria Island, Ottawa, will march in solidarity on to Parliament Hill.
QC: The Listuguj Mi'gmaq Government FN is expected to completely block traffic on Highway 132, Gaspe, QC starting at 08:00 EST 21 Dec for a 24 hour period. Traffic slowdowns are also anticipated for the Van Horne Bridge linking NB and QC as a result and the Sécurité civile du Québec has been mobilized to deal with any potential issues arising from these protests.
MB: The Winnipeg International Airport will be the site of a planned protest consisting of vehicular and pedestrian protestors.
SK: Protestors are expected to close down one lane of traffic to hand out pamphlets on Highway 10 and the Canadian National (CN) Qu'appelle subdivision. CN are scheduling their trains around the protest time. CN Engineering will inspect the track following the protest to ensure it is safe.
AB: Protests are to start at Kinsman Park, Edmonton..

Current Actions: The GOC, AANDC, and Public Safety Regional Offices will be monitoring this event.

Manifestations de Premières nations – Ensemble du pays

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Plusieurs manifestations de Premières nations devraient sont prévues pour le 21 décembre à différents endroits au pays. Même si les manifestations devraient demeurer pacifiques, il est possible qu'elles aient une incidence, à court terme, les infrastructures essentielles. Les manifestations suivantes sont prévues au pays :

Ontario : Des sources ouvertes indiquent que des portions de la route 401 et de la route Wellington, à London (Ontario) seront fermées le 21 décembre. Une cérémonie aura lieu sur l'île Victoria (Ottawa); les manifestants marcheront jusqu'à la Colline du Parlement, en signe de solidarité.
Québec : Le gouvernement de la Première nation Micmac de Listuguj devrait bloquer la circulation sur la route 132 à la hauteur de Gaspé (Québec), à partir de 8 h le 21 décembre, et ce, pour une période de 24 heures. Des ralentissements de la circulation sont également prévus sur le pont Van Horne, qui relie le Nouveau-Brunswick au Québec; la Sécurité civile du Québec est mobilisée et prête à gérer les incidents qui pourraient survenir dans le cadre de ces incidents.
Manitoba : L'aéroport international de Winnipeg sera le théâtre d'une manifestation prévue. Les manifestants seront à pied et en voiture.
Saskatchewan : Des manifestants devraient fermer une voie à la circulation pour distribuer des dépliants, sur la route 10 ainsi que sur la sous-division Qu'appelle du Canadien National (CN). Le CN organise l'horaire de ses trains autour du temps de la manifestation. Le service d'ingénierie du CN inspectera la voie après la manifestation, pour veiller à ce qu'elle soit sécuritaire.
Alberta : Les manifestations devraient débuter à Kinsman Park (Edmonton).

Mesures en cours : Le COG, AADNC et les bureaux régionaux de SP en Alberta, en Saskatchewan, au Manitoba, en Ontario, au Québec et au Nouveau-Brunswick continuent de surveiller la situation.

Manifestations de Premières nations (PN) – À l'échelle du pays

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Des manifestations de PN auront lieu le 23 décembre 2012 dans certaines régions du pays. Les manifestations devraient se dérouler dans le calme, mais il pourrait y avoir des répercussions à court terme sur les infrastructures essentielles. On prévoit que les manifestations suivantes se dérouleront au pays :

Saskatchewan : barricades partielles – diverses PN, route 1 et 9e Avenue, Broadview.
Manitoba : manifestation – diverses PN, Portage Place Mall, Winnipeg.
Colombie-Britannique : manifestation – diverses PN, Vancouver Art Gallery, Vancouver.

Mesures en cours : Le COG, AADNC et les bureaux régionaux de SP continuent de surveiller ces événements.

Déclaration de l'état d'urgence – Première nation de Bearskin Lake (PN), Ontario – Mise à jour

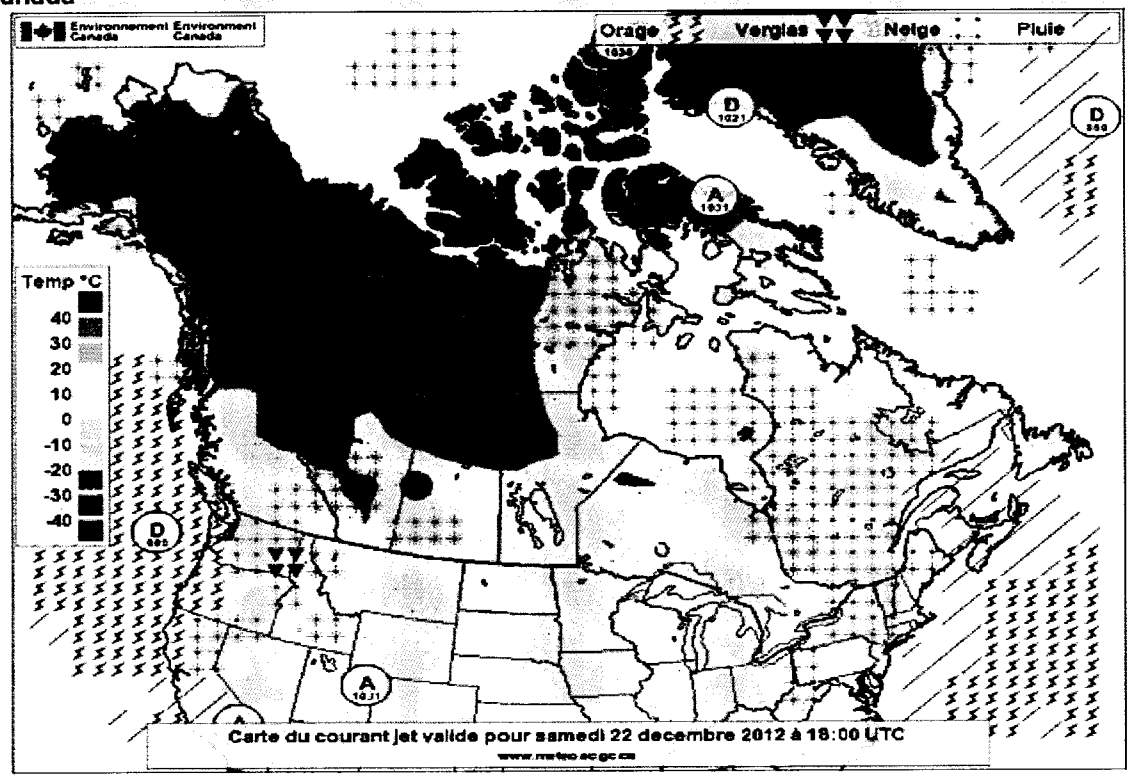

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Le 13 décembre 2012, la PN de Bearskin Lake a déclaré l'état d'urgence en raison des demandes financières constantes sur la PN concernant la livraison de carburant et d'autres approvisionnements en carburant en vue des mois d'hiver. Le 21 décembre, AADNC a indiqué qu'un chèque d'urgence a été émis le 17 décembre à la PN, et les carburants ont été livrés.

Mesures en cours : Aucune mesure supplémentaire requise.

Situation météorologique importante

Aperçu

Une tempête a causé d'importantes accumulations de neige sur plusieurs régions de l'Est de l'Ontario, la rive nord de la vallée de l'Outaouais et de la vallée du Saint-Laurent jusqu'à la Côte-Nord, ainsi que d'importantes précipitations sur plusieurs régions du Sud-Ouest du Nouveau-Brunswick et de l'Ouest de la Nouvelle-Écosse. La tempête atteindra le Centre du Québec ce soir. On s'attend à d'importantes accumulations de neige sur le Nord du Québec et l'Ouest du Labrador. On prévoit que des vents forts à violents accompagneront ce système important. Ces vents, combinés à la neige, entraîneront une visibilité réduire et de la poudrerie dans l'Extrême-Nord du Québec. De fortes averses sont prévues pour l'Est de la Nouvelle-Écosse, de Terre-Neuve et de la Basse-Côte-Nord, au Québec.

Avertissements

Québec : tempête hivernale et avertissement de chute de neige pour toutes les régions, de Abitibi-Témiscamingue jusqu'à la Côte-Nord; avertissement de pluie pour la Basse-Côte-Nord.
Labrador : avertissement de chute de neige sur l'Ouest de la région.
Terre-Neuve : avertissement de pluie sur les régions du Sud-Ouest.
Nouvelle-Écosse : avertissements de vent (vents de Suête au-dessus du Cap Breton) et de pluie pour presque toutes les régions de la province.Nouveau-Brunswick : avertissement de pluie sur les régions le long de la baie de Fundy.

First Nations (FN) Protests – Nationwide

Incident/Event Summary: A number of FN protests are planned to take place from 21 to 23 Dec 2012, in a number of locations across the country. The protests are expected to be peaceful, however, there may be short-term implications to critical infrastructure.

ON: On 21 Dec, approximately 10 FN protestors set up a blockade at a level rail crossing in Sarnia, ON. Local law enforcement and CN police attended the scene and were advised that the protestors intended to remain on site until 16:00 EST on 21 Dec. On 22 Dec, approximately 20 protestors were on site when the CN Police served a court injunction. The injunction was not respected by the protestors. CN Police have established 24 hours operations at the site. The affected line generally accommodates four or five freight trains a day. The protestors have expressed the intent to maintain the blockade until "someone in Ottawa listens".

QC: On 21 Dec 2012, The Listuguj Mi'gmaq FN planned to completely block traffic on Highway 132, Gaspe, QC, starting at 08:00 EST on 21 Dec for a 24 hour period. Traffic slowdowns were also anticipated for the Van Horne Bridge located in Restigouche and linking NB and QC. On 22 Dec, PS QC RO reported that traffic had returned to normal at both locations.

Current Actions: The GOC, AANDC, and PS RO are monitoring the situation.

(Note: Also reported by TC Sitcen.)

Severe Weather Condition – QC - Update

Incident/Event Summary: On 21 Dec 2012, PS QC RO reported on severe winter storm conditions in QC. As of 07:15 EST on 23 Dec, Hydro-Quebec reported that approximately 47,500 customers in the province were without power, more than 600 Hydro-Quebec employees were working on repairs and restoration of power may not be completed until 24 Dec. On 22 Dec, PS QC RO reported that many communities in the Laurentides and l'Outaouais had opened temporary shelters as some roads were still closed and parts of the affected communities were still without power.

Current Actions: GOC and PS QC RO continue to monitor the situation.

Significant Weather

National Outlook

A system will move over southern BC bringing a mix of rain and snow over Vancouver Island and further inland (from 5 to 10-15 cm over southern SK). A system over Hudson Bay will continue to create snow and strong winds off Hudson Bay that may enhance amounts along the coasts and cause blizzard conditions over southern NU towards northern MB and northern QC. A storm over eastern Canada will bring rain (30-50 mm) and snow (15-30 cm) over NL and Labrador. Following the system, there will be strong winds over northern and eastern QC causing blowing snow, with streamers developing over Maritimes waters. There will be snowsqualls expected over the Great Lakes.

Warnings

NL: Freezing rain, winds, rain.
Labrador: Snowfall and rain.
QC: Blizzard and blowing snow over northern QC.
SK: Snowfalls.
BC: Arctic outflow warning for the north coast BC, snowfalls warning for southern BC.
YK: Blowing snow.

Manifestations de Premières nations (PN) – À l'échelle du pays

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Des manifestations de PN auront lieu le 23 décembre 2012 dans certaines régions du pays. Les manifestations devraient se dérouler dans le calme, mais il pourrait y avoir des répercussions à court terme sur les infrastructures essentielles.

Ontario : Le 21 décembre, une dizaine de manifestants ont érigé une barricade à un passage à niveau à Sarnia, Ontario. Les autorités locales et la police du CN, qui étaient sur les lieux, ont été avisées que les manifestants avaient l'intention de demeurer sur place jusqu'à 16 h (HNE) le 21 décembre. Le 22 décembre, une vingtaine de manifestants étaient sur les lieux lorsque la police du CN a adressé une injonction judiciaire aux manifestants, qui ne l'ont pas respectée. La police du CN a érigé un poste pour les opérations (24 heures) sur les lieux. Habituellement, de quatre à cinq trains de marchandises empruntent cette ligne. Les manifestants ont signalé leur intention de maintenir la barricade jusqu'à ce que des représentants d'Ottawa les écoutent.

Québec : Le 21 décembre 2012, la PN des Micmacs de Listuguj prévoyait bloquer complètement la circulation sur la route 132, à Gaspé (Québec), dès 8 h (HNE) le 21 décembre, et ce pour une période de 24 heures. Un ralentissement de la circulation était également prévu pour le Pont Van Horne, situé à Restigouche, et reliant le Nouveau-Brunswick et le Québec. Le 22 décembre, le bureau régional de SP au Québec a indiqué que la circulation était revenue à la normale aux deux endroits.

Mesures en cours : Le COG, AADNC et le bureau régional de SP surveillent la situation.

Conditions météorologiques violentes – Québec

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Le 21 décembre, le bureau régional de SP du Québec a signalé des conditions météorologiques violentes pour la province. À 7 h 15 (HNE) le 23 décembre, Hydro-Québec a signalé qu'environ 47 500 abonnés étaient privés de courant. Plus de 600 employés d'Hydro-Québec s'affairaient à effectuer des réparations, et le courant pourrait ne pas être rétabli avant le 24 décembre. Le 22 décembre, le bureau régional de SP au Québec a indiqué que bon nombre de collectivités dans les Laurentides et l'Outaouais avaient ouvert des refuges temporaires, étant donné que certaines routes étaient toujours fermées et que des endroits dans les collectivités touchées n'avaient pas encore de courant.

Mesures en cours : Le COG et le bureau régional de SP continuent de surveiller la situation.

Aperçu

Un système se déplacera au-dessus du Sud de la Colombie-Britannique, causant un mélange de pluie et de neige sur l'île de Vancouver et plus loin dans les terres (de 5 à 10-15 cm sur le Sud de la Saskatchewan). Un système au-dessus de la baie d'Hudson continuera de causer de la neige et de forts vents au large de la baie d'Hudson, ce qui pourrait accroître la quantité de neige le long des côtes et être à l'origine d'un blizzard sur le Sud du Nunavut, en direction du Nord du Manitoba et du Nord du Québec. Une tempête sur l'Est du Canada entraînera de la pluie (30-50 mm) et de la neige (15-30 cm) sur Terre-Neuve et le Labrador. Après ce système, il y aura de forts vents sur le Nord et l'Est du Québec, causant de la poudrerie et la formation de flûtes sismiques au-dessus des eaux maritimes. Des bourrasques de neige sont prévues au-dessus des Grands Lacs.

First Nations (FN) Protests – Nationwide - Update

Incident/Event Summary: A number of FN protests are occurring nationwide, in a number of locations across the country. The protests are expected to be peaceful; however, there are implications to critical infrastructure.

ON: On 23 Dec 2012, the blockade of the commercial-rail corridor by FN protestors continued in Sarnia, ON. AANDC reported over 100 protestors were on site and intended to maintain the blockade until someone in Ottawa meets with the Chief of Attawapiskat FN. Canadian National (CN) went back to court in Toronto to express their concerns about the police service of jurisdiction (Sarnia Police) not enforcing the injunction granted on 22 Dec. CN intends to issue an embargo on products destined to transit via the Sarnia rail yard as the yard is at capacity. No freight trains allowed to proceed impacting Sarnia Industrial Park. A second protest is planned for Sarnia on 24 Dec, a rolling blockade from the Sarnia town hall to Highway 402.

Current Actions: GOC, TC and AANDC continue to monitor the situation.

(Note: Also reported by TC Sitcen and AANDC.)

Severe Weather Condition – QC - Update

Incident/Event Summary: As of 07:15 EST on 24 Dec, Hydro Québec reported that approximately 22,600 customers in the province were without power and restoration efforts were expected to continue through 24 Dec. In addition, some communities were also experiencing telecommunications outages. On 23 Dec, PS QC RO reported that many communities in the Laurentides and l'Outaouais had closed the temporary shelters which had been previously opened to accommodate residents impacted by the power outages. On 23 Dec, AANDC reported that the Kitigan Zibi Anishinabeg First Nation located near Maniwaki, QC, was impacted by power failures, so the health center and the community center were being powered by a generator with beds and meals available for the community.

Current Actions: GOC, AANDC and PS QC RO continue to monitor the situation.

Tractor-Trailer Accident on Ferry – Tadoussac, QC

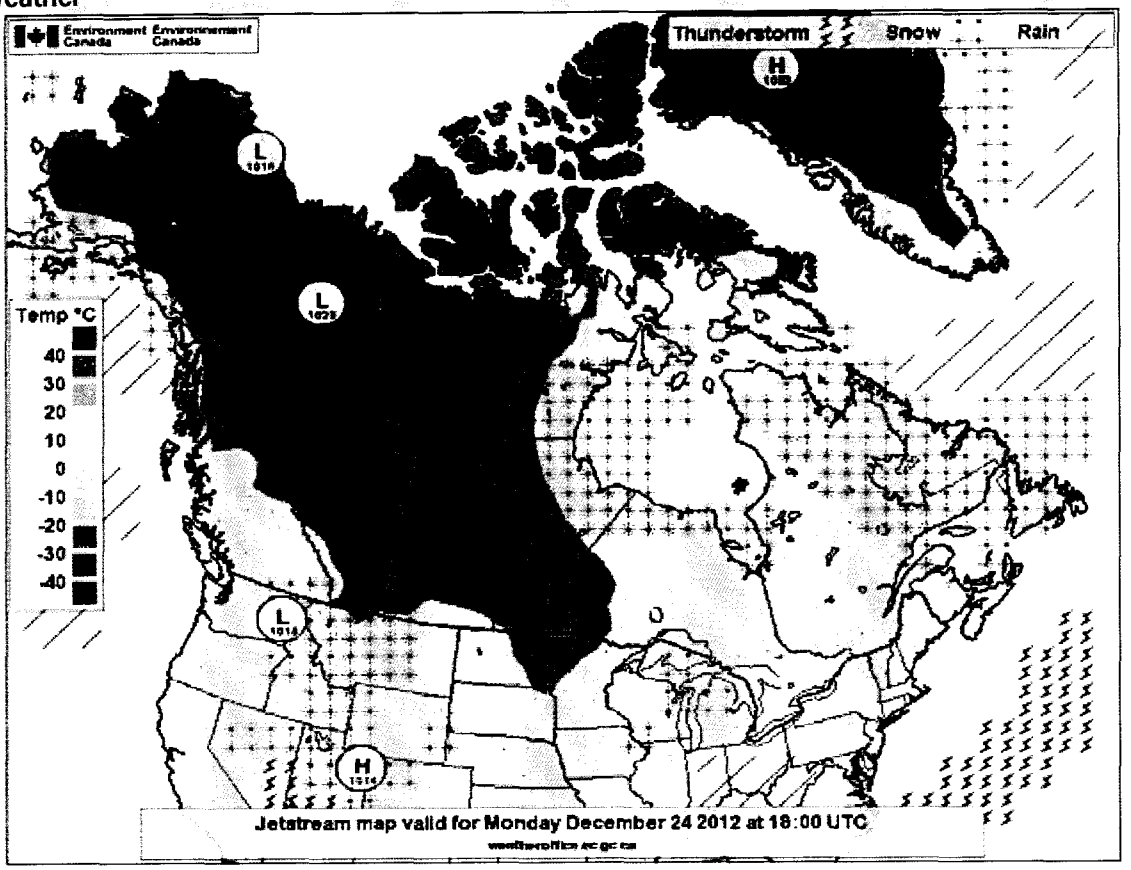

Incident/Event Summary: On 23 Dec 2012 at 09:00 EST, a tractor-trailer collided with another vehicle while loading on the ferry M/V Jos Deschenes in Tadoussac, QC. Two diesel fuel tanks of 400 litres each and one hydraulic oil tank of 400 litres were detached from the tractor-trailer on impact; the spill was contained except for a small amount that spilled in the water. The ship sustained no damage but stopped operations for clean-up. Ferry service between Tadoussac and Baie-Ste-Catherine was maintained by M/N Armand Imbeau. Wait times increased on both side of the river. At 21:28 EST, TC advised that clean-up operations were completed and normal operations were resuming.

Current Actions: No further actions reported.

Manifestations de Premières nations (PN) – À l'échelle du pays – Mise à jour

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Un certain nombre de manifestations de PN ont actuellement lieu à l'échelle du pays, dans un certain nombre de régions du pays. Les manifestations devraient être pacifiques; toutefois, il y a des incidences sur les infrastructures essentielles.

Ontario : Le 23 décembre 2012, la barricade érigée à un passage à niveau à Sarnia, en Ontario, y était toujours. Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada a indiqué que plus de 100 manifestants étaient sur place et avaient l'intention de maintenir la barricade jusqu'à ce que des représentants d'Ottawa rencontrent le chef de la Première nation Attawapiskat. La police du Canadien National (CN) est retournée au tribunal à Toronto pour exprimer ses préoccupations à l'égard du fait que le service de police de l'endroit (Sarnia Police) n'avait pas fait respecter l'injonction obtenue le 22 décembre. Le CN a l'intention d'imposer un embargo sur les produits devant passer par la gare de triage de Sarnia puisque celle-ci est à pleine capacité. Aucun train de marchandises n'est autorisé à emprunter la ligne, ce qui a des répercussions sur le parc industriel de Sarnia. Une deuxième manifestation est prévue pour le 24 décembre à Sarnia, soit une barricade allant de l'hôtel de ville de Sarnia à l'autoroute 402.

Mesures en cours : Le COG, TC et AADNC continuent de surveiller la situation.

Conditions météorologiques violentes – Québec – Mise à jour

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Hydro Québec a rapporté qu'à 7 h 15 le 24 décembre, environ 22 600 clients de la province étaient privés d'électricité et que les efforts visant à rétablir le courant devaient se poursuivre le 24 décembre. Par ailleurs, la société a indiqué qu'il y avait des problèmes liés aux télécommunications dans certaines collectivités. Le 23 décembre, le bureau régional de SP au Québec a indiqué que bon nombre de collectivités en Outaouais et dans les Laurentides avaient fermé les refuges temporaires ouverts dans le but d'héberger les résidents touchés par les pannes de courant. Le 23 décembre, AADNC a indiqué que la Première nation Kitigan Zibi Anishinabeg, située près de Maniwaki, au Québec, était touchée par des pannes de courant; par conséquent, le centre de santé et le centre communautaire, alimentés par une génératrice, offraient des lits et des repas à la collectivité.

Accident impliquant un tracteur semi-remorque sur le traversier – Tadoussac (Québec)

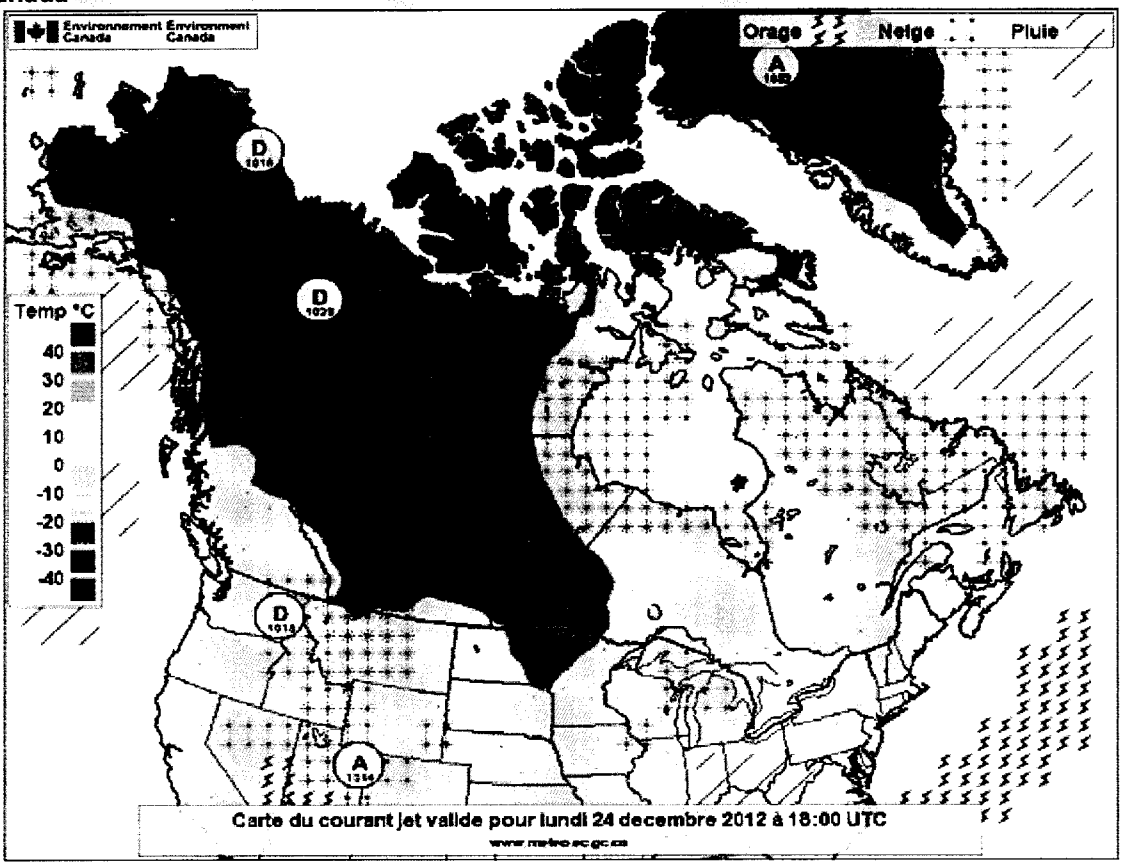

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Le 23 décembre 2012, à 9 h (HNE), un tracteur semi-remorque est entré en collision avec un autre véhicule lors de l'embarquement sur le traversier N.M. Jos-Deschênes, à Tadoussac, au Québec. Deux réservoirs de diesel de 400 litres chacun, et un réservoir de 400 litres contenant de l'huile hydraulique se sont détachés du tracteur semi-remorque au moment de l'impact. La fuite a été maîtrisée; toutefois, une petite quantité de carburant s'est répandue dans l'eau. Le navire n'a subi aucun dommage, mais a dû cesser ses opérations afin de procéder au nettoyage. Les services de traversier entre Tadoussac et Baie-Sainte-Catherine ont été assurés par le N.M. Armand-Imbeau. Les temps d'attente étaient par contre plus longs des deux côtés du Fleuve. À 21 h 28, TC a indiqué que les opérations de nettoyage étaient terminées et que les opérations normales pouvaient être rétablies.

Les précipitations dues aux courants atmosphériques se termineront aujourd'hui sur le Sud de la C.-B. avant l'arrivée de la prochaine bande de précipitations prévue pour la nuit. Le système sur la baie d'Hudson continuera d'apporter de la neige et des vents forts ainsi que des courants positifs au large des côtes de la baie d'Hudson et fera augmenter les quantités de neige sur le long de la côte, entraînant des conditions de blizzard sur le Sud du Nunavut, le Nord du Manitoba et le Nord du Québec. Le système situé sur le Labrador continuera d'entraîner des chutes importantes de neige (de 15 à 25 cm supplémentaires) sur le Nord du Québec, le Labrador et l'Ouest de T.-N.-L. Les courants positifs persisteront sur le golfe du Saint-Laurent et les eaux du Sud des Maritimes. Des bourrasques de neige sont attendues pour les environs de la région des Grands Lacs.

DEPARTMENT / AGENCY REPORTS

Reporting Department / Agency: Public Safety (PS)

First Nations (FN) Protests – Nationwide - Update

Incident/Event Summary: A number of FN protests are occurring nationwide, in a number of locations across the country. The protests are expected to be peaceful; however, there are implications to critical infrastructure.

ON: On 24 Dec 2012, the blockade of the commercial-rail corridor by FN protestors continued in Sarnia. AANDC reported over 100 protestors were on site and intended to maintain the blockade until someone in Ottawa meets with the Chief of Attawapiskat FN. Canadian National has served the protesters with a notice of civil litigation. The rolling blockade from the Sarnia town hall to Highway 402 ended without incident or significant impact to transportation.

Current Actions: GOC, TC and AANDC continue to monitor the situation.

(Note: Also reported by TC Sitcen and AANDC.)

Severe Weather Condition – QC - Update

Incident/Event Summary: As of 07:15 EST on 25 Dec 2012, Hydro Québec has restored power to approximately 90 % of the customers in the province. Restoration efforts are to continue through 25 Dec for the approximately 11,000 remaining. On 23 Dec, AANDC reported that the Kitigan Zibi Anishinabeg First Nation located near Maniwaki was impacted by power failures. The health center and the community center were being powered by a generator with beds and meals available for the community.

Current Actions: GOC, AANDC and PS QC RO continue to monitor the situation.

(Note: Also reported by AANDC.)

Reporting Department / Agency: Canadian Food Inspection Agency (CFIA)

E.coli – Cardinal Meat Specialist Ltd. – Brampton, ON - Update

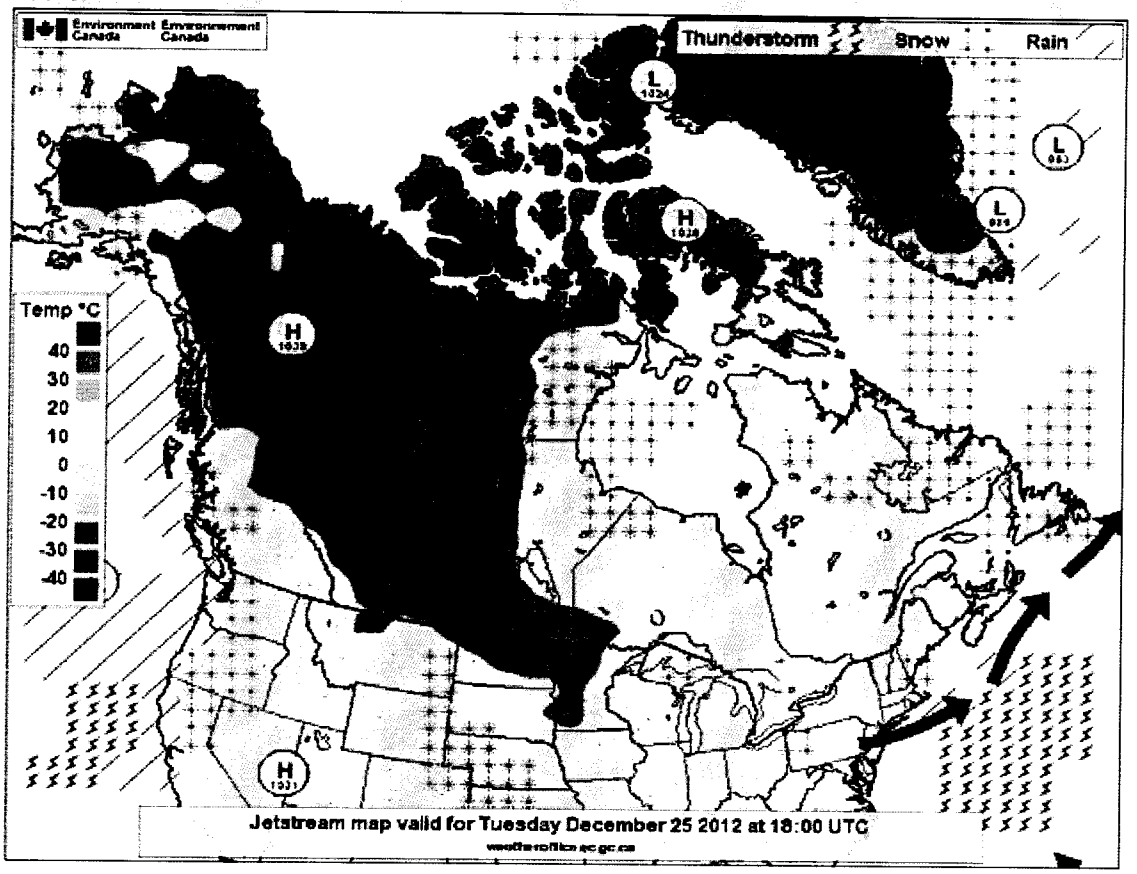

Incident/Event Summary: On 15 Dec 2012, the CFIA activated its National Emergency Operations Centre (NEOC) in response to an E-coli 0157:H7 recall at Cardinal Meat Specialist Ltd., located in Brampton. On 24 Dec, CFIA indicated that the source of contamination at Cardinal could not be determined and no additional illnesses have been reported. The CFIA deactivated the NEOC on 24 Dec.

Current Actions: No further actions reported.

Manifestations de Premières nations (PN) – À l'échelle du pays – Mise à jour

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Un certain nombre de manifestations de PN ont actuellement lieu à l'échelle du pays, dans un certain nombre de régions du pays. Les manifestations devraient être pacifiques; toutefois, il y a des incidences sur les infrastructures essentielles.

Ontario : Le 24 décembre 2012, les manifestants des PN continuent de bloquer le couloir ferroviaire commercial à Sarnia. AADNC a signalé qu'une centaine de manifestants étaient sur place et avaient l'intention de maintenir la barricade jusqu'à ce qu'un représentant d'Ottawa rencontre la chef de la PN d'Attawapiskat. Le Canadien National a signifié aux manifestants un avis de poursuite civile. La barricade de l'hôtel de ville de Sarnia jusqu'à l'autoroute 402 a été levée; on ne signale aucun incident ni aucune répercussion importante sur le transport.

Mesures en cours : Le COG, TC et AADNC continuent de surveiller la situation.

(Nota : Cet incident a également été rapporté par TC et AADNC.)

Conditions météorologiques violentes – Québec – Mise à jour

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : À 7 h 15 (HNE) le 25 décembre 2012, Hydro Québec a rétabli le courant d'environ 90 % des abonnés de la province. Les efforts se poursuivront pour rétablir le courant des 11 000 abonnés qui restent. Le 23 décembre, AADNC a signalé que la PN Kitigan Zibi Anishinabeg, située près de Maniwaki, était touchée par des pannes de courant. Le centre de santé et le centre communautaire étaient alimentés par une génératrice. Des lits et des repas étaient offerts à la communauté.

Mesures en cours : Le COG, AADNC et le bureau régional de SP au Québec continuent de surveiller la situation.

Situation météorologique importante

Aperçu

Un système approchant l'île de Vancouver occasionnera de la neige sur l'île et des vents violents à Haida Gwaii. Un système du Labrador se déplacera vers la mer du Labrador et s'affaiblira par la suite. Des bourrasques de neige le long de la côte Ouest de Terre-Neuve diminueront aujourd'hui à mesure que la dépression faiblira. On prévoit des conditions de blizzard local sur diverses régions de l'Est de l'île de Baffin à mesure que les vents augmenteront et qui seront accompagnées d'un creux barométrique s'intensifiant au-dessus de la baie de Baffin.

Avertissements

Colombie-Britannique : Vents pour Haida Gwaii. Poussée d'air arctique pour la côte Nord. Neige pour les terres intérieures et l'Est de l'île de Vancouver Island en haute altitude.
Nunavut : Blizzard pour Clyde River.
Québec : Vent et poudrerie pour le côté Nord de la Gaspésie.
Terre-Neuve : Blizzard pour certaines régions de la côte Ouest de la province.

First Nations (FN) Protests – Nationwide - Update

Incident/Event Summary: A number of FN protests are occurring nationwide, in a number of locations across the country. The protests are expected to be peaceful; however, there are implications to critical infrastructure.

ON: On 26 Dec 2012, the blockade of the commercial-rail corridor by FN protestors continued in Sarnia without incident. On 27 Dec the Garden River FN, the Anishinawbek FN and the Whitefish FN are planning a rail blockade near Espanola. The blockade, on FN land is expected to start at approximately 08:00 EST on 27 Dec and last for 12 hours. The Huron Central Railway is expected to be impacted. The railway company has been informed and has preparations in place to deal with the blockade issue.

MB: On 28 Dec, protests are expected in the Portage La Prairie region. One is to occur from 10:00 to 14:00 EST on the bridge of the Assiniboine River on Highway 305 with the purpose of slowing traffic. As this is not a heavily travelled area, it is expected that the protest could move north to the Junction of Highways 1 and 16 or to CN or CP Railway main lines. Approximately 350-450 protesters are expected to attend. A second protest is planned from 15:00 to 17:00 EST at the intersection of Saskatchewan Avenue and Tupper Street. Approximately 100 protestors are expected to attend. The first group of protestors may later join the second group.

Current Actions: GOC, TC and AANDC continue to monitor the situation.

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Un certain nombre de manifestations de PN ont actuellement lieu à l'échelle du pays, dans un certain nombre de régions du pays. Les manifestations devraient être pacifiques; toutefois, il y a des incidences sur les infrastructures essentielles.

Ontario : Le 26 décembre 2012, le barrage du corridor commercial ferroviaire par des manifestants des Premières nations a été maintenu poursuivi sans incident à Sarnia. Le 27 décembre, la Première nation de Garden River, la Première nation d'Anishinawbek et la Première nation de Whitefish se préparaient à bloquer la voie ferrée près d'Espanola. Le barrage, sur les terres des Premières nations, devrait commencer vers 8 h (HNE) le 27 décembre et durer 12 heures. Le Huron Central Railway devrait être touché. La compagnie ferroviaire a été informée de la situation, et des mesures de résolution du problème sont mises en œuvre.

Manitoba : Le 28 décembre, des manifestations sont prévues dans la région de Portage La Prairie. L'une d'entre elles aura lieu de 10 h à 14 h (HNE) sur le pont de la rivière Assiniboine, sur la route 305, et visera à ralentir la circulation. Comme il ne s'agit pas d'une région où la circulation est dense, la manifestation pourrait se déplacer vers le nord, à la jonction des routes 1 et 16, ou vers une des voies ferrées principales du CN ou du CP. On attend de 250 à 450 manifestants. Une deuxième manifestation est prévue entre 15 h et 17 h (HNE) à l'intersection de l'avenue Saskatchewan et de la rue Tupper. Une centaine de personnes devraient y participer. Le premier groupe pourrait se joindre au deuxième.

Mesures en cours : Le COG, TC et AADNC continuent de surveiller la situation.

(Nota : Cet incident a également été rapporté par TC et AADNC.)

Conditions météorologiques violentes – Québec – Mise à jour

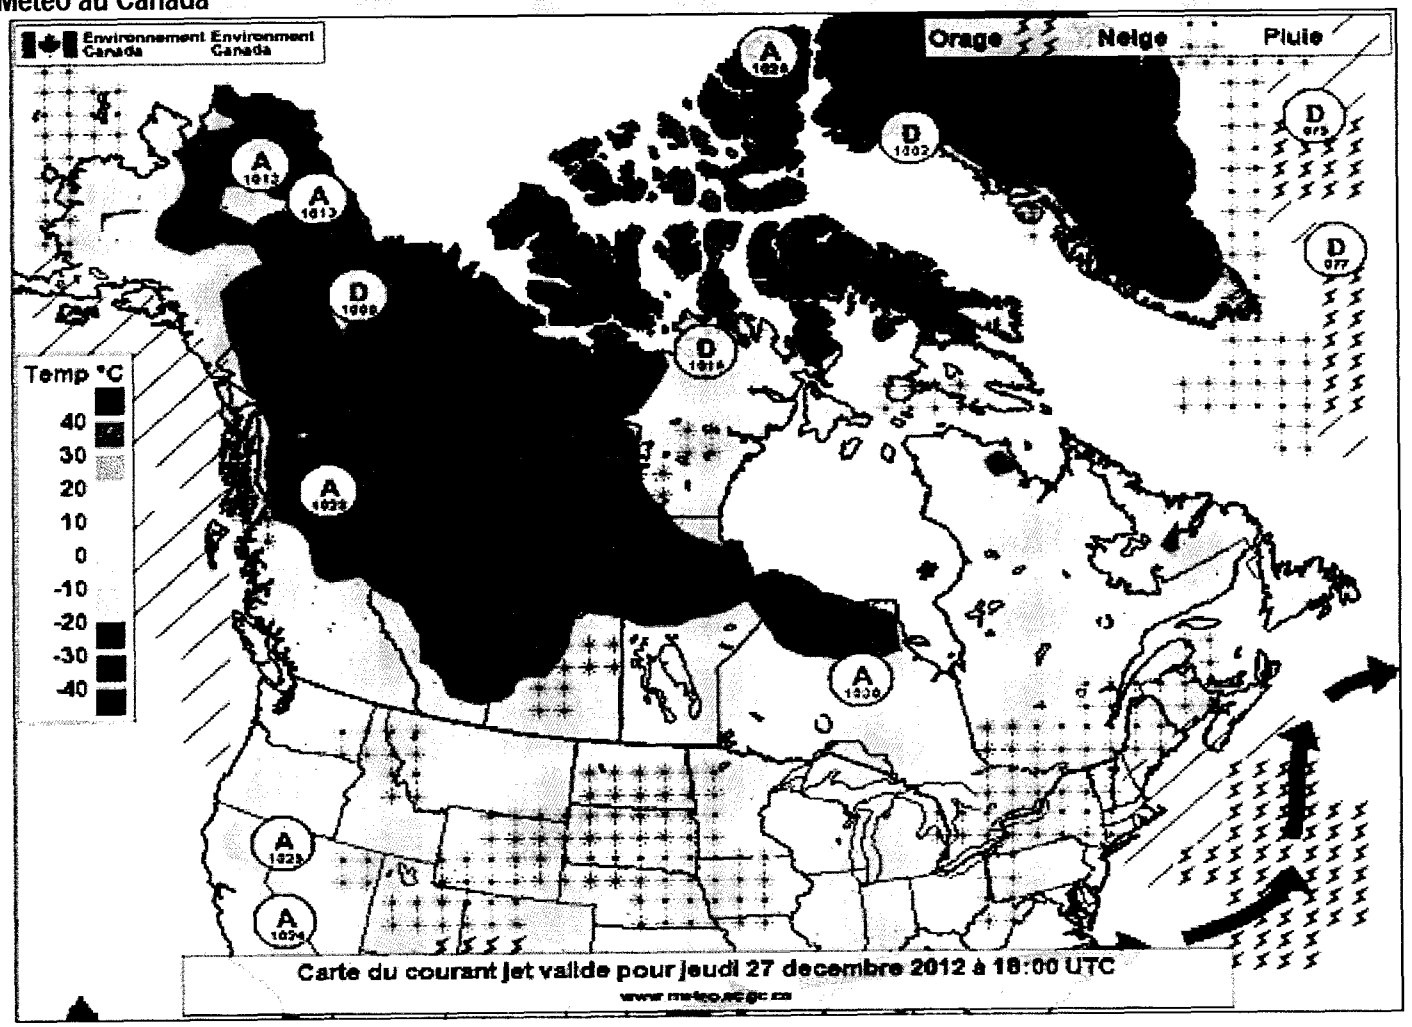

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : À 21 h 15 (HNE) le 26 décembre, Hydro-Québec avait rétabli le courant pour la plupart des abonnés de la province. Les travaux touchant les 2 000 derniers clients devraient être terminés le 27 décembre.

Mesures en cours : Le COG et le bureau régional de SP au Québec continuent de surveiller la situation.

DAILY BRIEF CLASSIFIED ADDENDUM: A classified addendum will be issued by the GOC

CURRENT

1. First Nations (FN) Protests: A number of FN protests are occurring and being planned nationwide. The protests that have occurred since 19 Dec are organized by a group called "Idle No More", which is critical of Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation. The omnibus legislation contains changes to the Indian Act and Navigable Waters Protection Act. To date, the protests have resulted in interruptions to rail services and delays on various highways.

2. Significant Weather – ON, QC, NB: On 27 Dec 2012, a large storm system brought significant amounts of precipitation to the southern portions of ON and QC and northern NB. Flight delays and cancellations were reported at airports in Toronto, Ottawa and Montréal. The transportation sector was impacted over the affected areas in the three provinces. Power outages were reported in QC mainly in the regions of Outaouais, Laurentides and Montréal. The system is expected to continue on its northeast track and impact the rest of the Maritimes. In NB, the ferry that runs from Saint John to Digby, NS was cancelled for the day in anticipation of the storm, Marine Atlantic also cancelled crossing between Cape Breton, NS and NL. As of 28 Dec, Environment Canada has issued weather warnings for southeastern QC, NB, NS and NL.

First Nations (FN) Protests – Nationwide - Update

Incident/Event Summary: A number of FN protests are occurring nationwide, in a number of locations across the country. The protests are expected to be peaceful; however, there are implications to critical infrastructure.

ON: On 27 Dec 2012, the blockade of the commercial-rail corridor by FN protesters continued in Sarnia without incident. On 27 Dec, the Garden River FN, the Anishinawbek FN and the Whitefish FN initiated separate rail blockades on the Huron Central Railway (HCR) line which runs between Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie. The blockades on FN land started at approximately 08:00 EST on 27 Dec and lasted for 12 hours. HCR operations were impacted. The company delayed its trains until the protest was over and the tracks had been inspected. The Sault Ste. Marie protest took place at the intersection of Highways 17A and 17B where the tracks run parallel to Highway 17B. Traffic was slowed down and protesters handed out flyers.

MB: On 28 Dec 2012, protests are expected in Portage La Prairie. One protest is to occur from 08:00 to 12:00 EST on the bridge of the Assiniboine River on Highway 305 with the purpose of slowing traffic. There is a possibility that the protest could move north to the junction of Highways 1 and 16 or to CN or CP Railway main lines. A second protest is planned from 15:00 to 17:00 EST at the intersection of Saskatchewan Avenue and Tupper Street in Portage La Prairie. The first group of protesters may later join the second group.

Current Actions: GOC, TC and AANDC continue to monitor the situation.

(Note: Also reported by TC and AANDC.)

Significant Weather – ON, QC, NB

Incident/Event Summary: The massive storm system which pummelled large areas of the United States arrived in Canada late 26 Dec 2012. According to EC, the weather system hit southern ON, QC and NB.

ON: On 27 Dec, the snowfall tapered off in southern ON but continued throughout the day of 27 Dec in eastern ON. There were no reported major highway closures or power outages. Snowfall accumulations ranged between 10-20 cm. The ON PS RO reported that any weather situations are being handled locally and there have been no requests for provincial assistance.

QC: On 27 Dec, several multi-vehicle traffic accidents were reported due to deteriorated road conditions. Several ON and US bound flights from Pierre Elliott Trudeau International Airport were delayed or cancelled. The region of Montréal was hardest hit with accumulation of 40-45 cm. Approximately 5,500 customers were reported without power in the regions of Outaouais, Laurentides and Montréal. Snowfall is expected to continue until 28 Dec. There have been no requests for provincial assistance.

NB: On 27 Dec, snow and blowing snow began in the southwest and spread to the northeast of the province. Total snowfall amounts of 15 to 30 cm were reported over most areas. Over southern NB the snow changed to rain along the Fundy coast late on 27 Dec. There were no reported major highway closures or power outages. There have been no requests for provincial assistance.

Current Actions: GOC and PS Regional Offices of ON, QC and NB continue to monitor the situation.

Motor Vehicle Accident, Road Closure – Lanaudière, QC

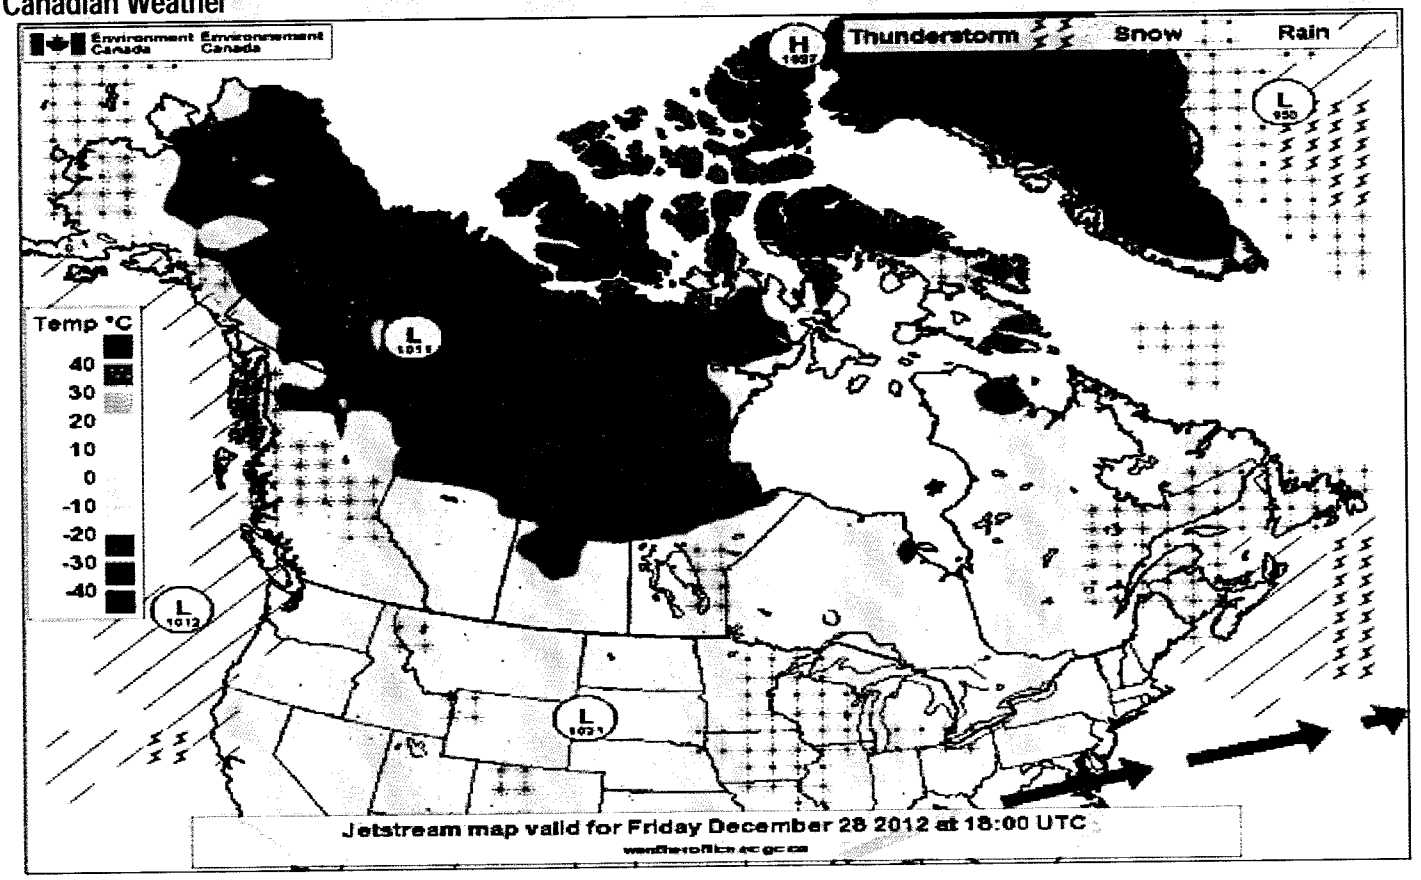

Incident/Event Summary: At 14:50 EST on 27 Dec 2012, PS QC RO reported that a motor vehicle accident involving a transport truck had occurred on Highway 131 near Domaine Bazinet in the Lanaudière area. There was no release of product in the environment and no injuries were reported. The ensuing road closure isolated the communities of Saint-Michel-des-Saint, Saint-Zénon and Manawan. The road was reopened to all traffic at 18:45 EST.

Current Actions: No further actions reported.

2. Mauvais temps – Ontario, Québec et Nouveau-Brunswick : Le 27 décembre 2012, un important système de tempête a apporté des précipitations abondantes dans le Sud de l'Ontario et du Québec et dans le Nord du Nouveau-Brunswick (N.-B.). Aux aéroports de Toronto, d'Ottawa et de Montréal, des vols ont été retardés et annulés. Le secteur des transports dans les régions touchées des trois provinces a été perturbé. Des pannes d'électricité ont été signalées au Québec, principalement dans les régions de l'Outaouais, des Laurentides et de Montréal. Le système poursuivra sa trajectoire vers le nord-est et touchera le reste des Maritimes. Au N.-B., le service de traversier entre Saint John et Digby, en Nouvelle-Écosse (N.-É.), a été annulé en prévision de la tempête. La société Marine Atlantic a également annulé les traversées entre le cap Breton (N.-É.) et Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (T.-N.-L.). Manifestations de Premières nations (PN) – À l'échelle du pays – Mise à jour

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Un certain nombre de manifestations de PN ont actuellement lieu à l'échelle du pays, dans un certain nombre de régions du pays. Les manifestations devraient être pacifiques; toutefois, il y a des incidences sur les infrastructures essentielles.

Ontario : Le 27 décembre 2012, le barrage du corridor commercial ferroviaire par des manifestants des Premières nations a été maintenu sans incident à Sarnia. Le 27 décembre, les Premières nations de Garden River, d'Anishinawbek et de Whitefish ont érigé des barrages distincts sur le chemin de fer de la Huron Central Railway (HCR), lequel relie Sudbury et Sault Ste. Marie. Ces barrages sur les terres des Premières nations ont commencé vers 8 h (HNE) le 27 décembre et ont duré 12 heures. Les opérations de la HCR ont été perturbées. La société a décidé de retarder ses trains jusqu'à ce que les manifestations soient terminées et jusqu'à ce que les voies soient inspectées. La manifestation à Sault Ste. Marie s'est déroulée à l'intersection des routes 17A et 17B, où la voie ferrée longe la route 17B. La circulation était ralentie, et les manifestants ont distribué des feuillets.

Manitoba : Le 28 décembre 2012, des manifestations sont prévues dans la région de Portage La Prairie. L'une d'entre elles aura lieu de 8 h à 12 h (HNE) sur le pont de la rivière Assiniboine, sur la route 305, et visera à ralentir la circulation. La manifestation pourrait se déplacer vers le nord, à la jonction des routes 1 et 16, ou vers une des voies ferrées principales du CN ou du CP. Une deuxième manifestation est prévue entre 15 h et 17 h (HNE) à l'intersection de l'avenue Saskatchewan et de la rue Tupper, à Portage La Prairie. Le premier groupe pourrait plus tard se joindre au deuxième.

Mesures en cours : Le COG, TC et AADNC continuent de surveiller la situation.

(Nota : Cet incident a également été rapporté par TC et AADNC.)

Mauvais temps – Ontario, Québec et Nouveau-Brunswick

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : L'importante tempête qui s'est abattue sur de grandes sections des États-Unis a atteint le Canada le 26 décembre 2012 tard dans la journée. Selon EC, le système a frappé le Sud de l'Ontario, du Québec et du N.-B.

Ontario : Le 27 décembre 2012, la neige a diminué en intensité dans le Sud de l'Ontario, mais il a continué de neiger toute la journée le 27 décembre dans l'Est de l'Ontario. Aucune grande panne de courant ou fermeture d'autoroutes n'a été signalée. Il est tombé entre 10 et 20 cm de neige. Le bureau régional de SP en Ontario a indiqué que les autorités locales avaient la situation en main. Aucune demande d'aide n'a été présentée à la province.

Québec : Le 27 décembre, plusieurs accidents impliquant de nombreux véhicules ont été signalés en raison des mauvaises conditions des routes. À l'aéroport international Pierre Elliot Trudeau, plusieurs vols à destination de l'Ontario ou des États-Unis ont été annulés ou retardés. La région de Montréal a été le plus durement touchée, ayant reçu de 40 à 45 cm. Environ 5 500 abonnés ont été privés d'électricité dans les régions de l'Outaouais, des Laurentides et de Montréal. Il devrait continuer à neiger jusqu'au 28 décembre.

Aucune demande d'aide n'a été présentée à la province.

N.-B. : Le 27 décembre, le Sud-Ouest de la province a été frappé par de la neige et de la poudrerie, et ces conditions se sont étendues aux régions du Nord-Est. La plupart des régions ont reçu de 15 à 30 cm de neige. Dans le Sud de la province, la neige s'est transformée en pluie le long de la côte de la baie de Fundy en fin de journée le 27 décembre. Aucune grande panne de courant ou fermeture d'autoroutes n'a été signalée. Aucune demande d'aide n'a été présentée à la province.

Mesures en cours : Le COG et les bureaux régionaux de SP en Ontario, au Québec et au N.-B. continuent de surveiller la situation.

Accident et fermeture de route – région de Lanaudière, au Québec

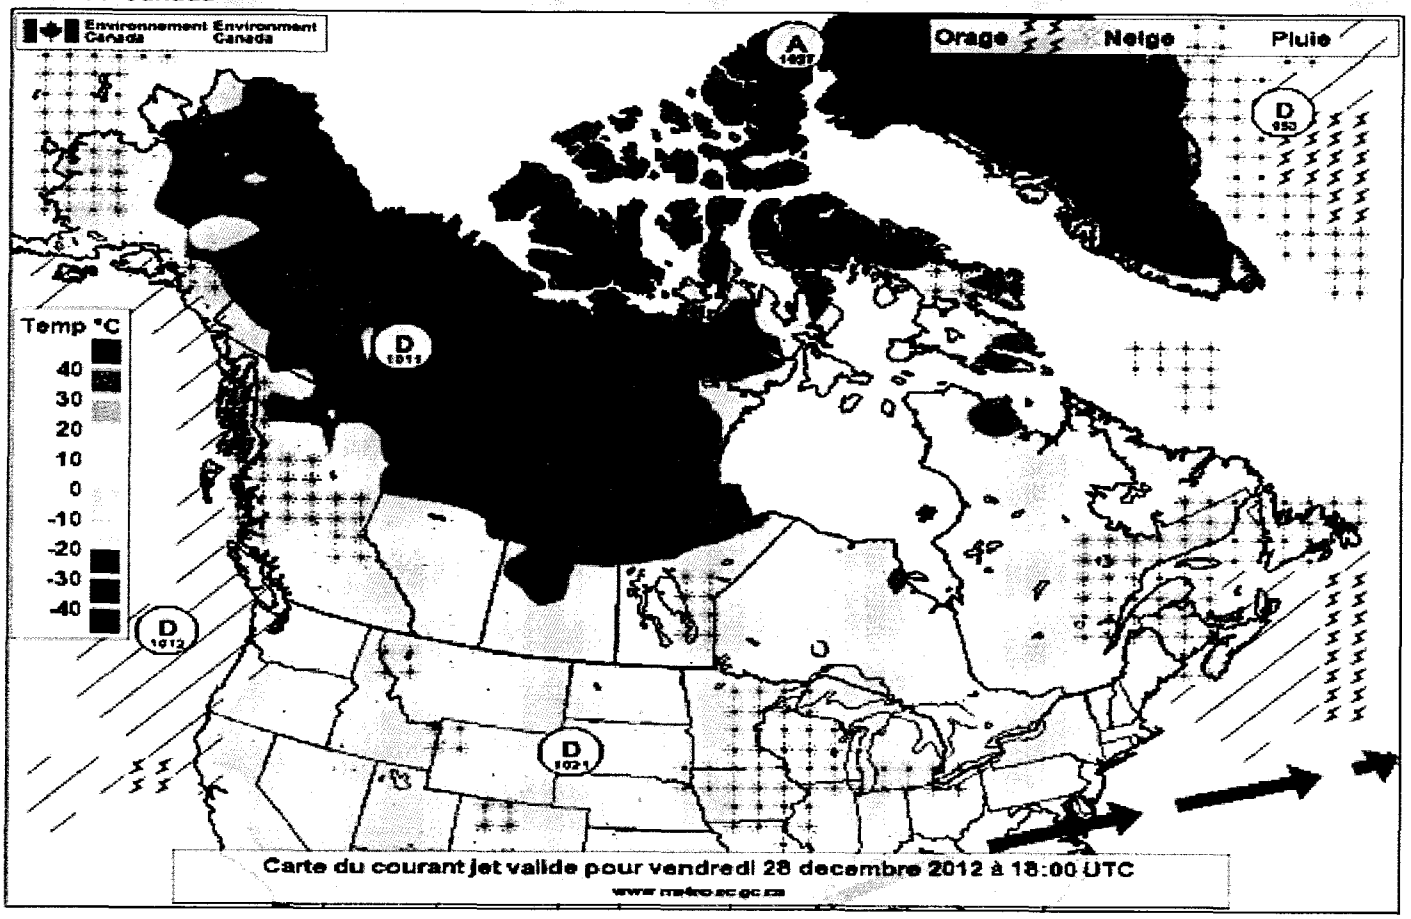

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Le 27 décembre 2012 à 14 h 50 (HNE), le bureau régional de SP au Québec a signalé un accident impliquant un camion de transport sur la route 131 près de Domaine Bazinet dans la région de Lanaudière, au Québec. Aucun produit ne s'est déversé dans l'environnement, et il n'y a pas eu de blessé. La route a été fermée, isolant trois collectivités : Saint-Michel-des-Saints, Saint-Zénon et Manawan. La route a été rouverte à la circulation à 18 h 45 (HNE).

Mesures en cours: Aucune mesure supplémentaire requise.

EVENTS, INCIDENTS and ITEMS OF INTEREST

DAILY BRIEF CLASSIFIED ADDENDUM: There is no classified addendum today

CURRENT

1. First Nations (FN) Protests: A number of FN protests are occurring and being planned nationwide. The protests that have occurred since 19 Dec are organized by a group called "Idle No More", which is critical of Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation. The omnibus legislation contains changes to the Indian Act and Navigable Waters Protection Act. To date, the protests have resulted in interruptions to rail services and delays on various highways.

On 29 Dec 2012 a horse ride is scheduled from Hobbema, AB to Wetaskiwin, AB and a flash dance is scheduled in St. Catharines, ON. There are also nine solidarity protests/events scheduled to take place in the United States.

2. Significant Weather – Maritimes: As of 06:00 EST 29 Dec 2012 the winter storm that passed through much of Quebec and Ontario on 27 Dec 2012 moved towards NL. Northern and central parts of the province received 20-30 cm of snow on 28 Dec 2012.

On 29 Dec, strong easterly winds will accompany the system, with gusts reaching 100 km/h along Newfoundland's south and west coasts, and gusts to 150 km/h in the Wreckhouse area. There is also a winter storm watch issued for NS stating that significant snowfall is possible on 29-30 Dec. PE is also under a winter storm watch, though significant snowfall for the Island is not expected until 30 Dec.

First Nations (FN) Protests – Nationwide - Update

Incident/Event Summary: A number of FN protests are occurring nationwide, in a number of locations across the country. The protests are expected to be peaceful; however, there are implications to critical infrastructure.

BC: On 28 Dec 2012, approximately 50 protestors of the Seton Lake FN established a blockade on the CN rail line near Lillooet for an anticipated period of two days. CN Police have been advised and they report no trains are planned through the area for 29 Dec. Lillooet RCMP are attempting to determine the exact location of the blockade and ensure communications are established with the protesters.

AB: On 29 Dec 2012, a horse ride from Hobbema to Wetaskiwin in support of "Idle No More" is planned for 13:00 to 14:00 EST.

ON: On 28 Dec 2012, the blockade of the commercial-rail corridor by FN protesters continued in Sarnia. Rail traffic is still not moving in the Sarnia area. There is no alternative to this spur for servicing this area. The CN yard in Sarnia is at capacity from parking inbound rail cars.

Separately, a flash dance is planned for 11:00 – 12:00 EST on 29 Dec at the Pen Centre in St. Catharines.

QC: On 28 Dec 2012, the former CN Rail Cascapedia subdivision (between Matapedia and Gaspé) now owned by Société du Chemin de Fer de la Gaspésie was being blocked at Pointe de la Croix/Restigouche by First Nations without the Band Counsel support. CN operations were not affected.

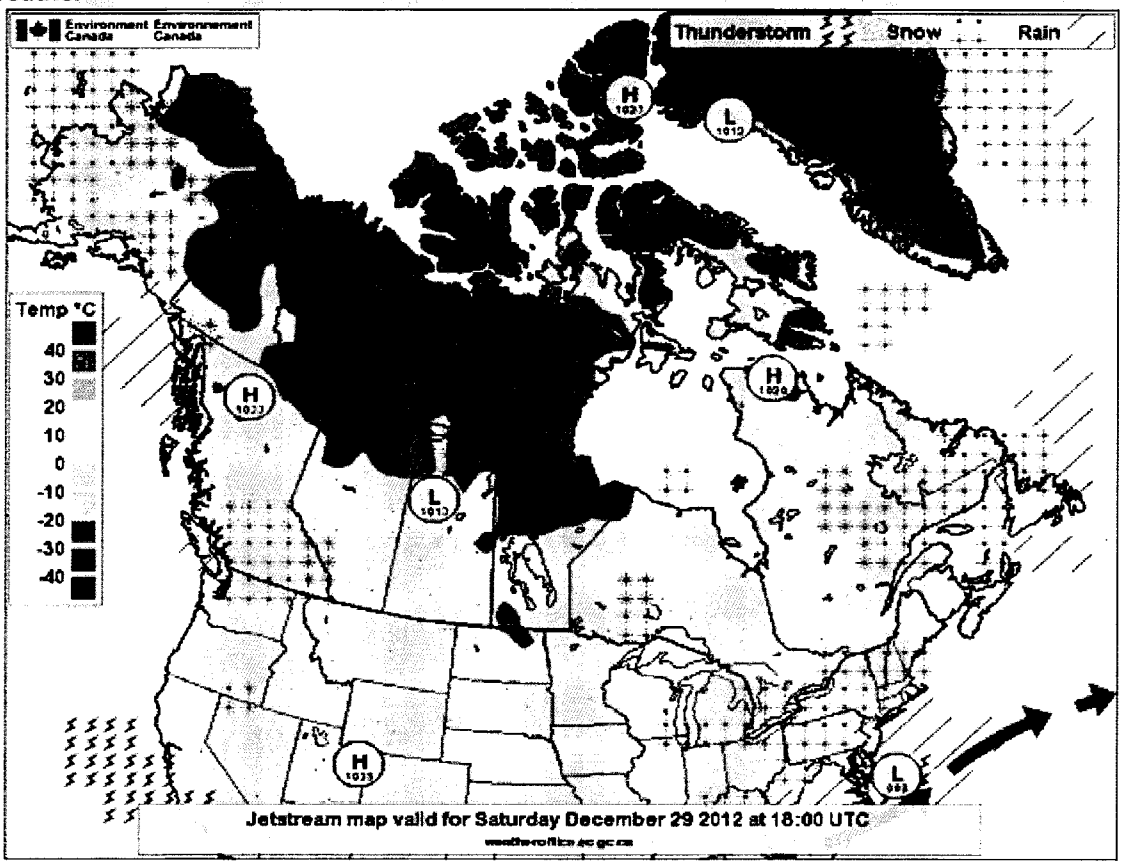

Current Actions: GOC, TC and AANDC continue to monitor the situation.

INCIDENTS EN COURS

1. Manifestations par les Premières Nations : Un certain nombre de manifestations par les Premières nations sont en cours ou prévues à l'échelle nationale. Des manifestations sont organisées depuis le 19 décembre par le groupe « Idle No More », qui critique le projet de loi C-45, la loi omnibus sur le budget du gouvernement. Cette loi prévoit des changements à la Loi sur les Indiens et à la Loi sur la protection des eaux navigables. À ce jour, les protestations ont causé des interruptions des services ferroviaires et des ralentissements sur différentes grandes routes.

Le 29 décembre 2012, une randonnée à cheval entre Hobbema et Wetaskiwin, en Alberta, est prévue, de même qu'une danse éclair à St. Catharines, en Ontario. En signe de solidarité, neuf manifestations et activités sont également prévues aux États-Unis.

2. Mauvais temps – Maritimes: À 6 h (HNE) le 29 décembre 2012, la tempête hivernale qui s'est abattue sur une grande partie du Québec et de l'Ontario le 27 décembre a atteint Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador. Le Nord et le Centre de la province ont reçu de 20 à 30 cm de neige le 28 décembre.

Le système était accompagné de vents violents de l'est, les rafales atteignant 100 km/h le long des côtes sud et ouest de Terre-Neuve et 150 km/h dans la région de Wreckhouse. Une veille de tempête hivernale est en vigueur pour la Nouvelle-Écosse, qui pourrait recevoir beaucoup de neige les 29 et 30 décembre. Une veille est également en place pour l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, où l'on ne prévoit pas de neige abondante avant le 30 décembre.

Manifestations des Premières nations à l'échelle nationale – Mise à jour

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Un certain nombre de manifestations par les Première nations ont lieu à différents endroits à l'échelle du pays. On s'attend à ce que ces manifestations se déroulent dans le calme, mais celles-ci ont une incidence sur les infrastructures essentielles.

Colombie-Britannique (C.-B.) : Le 28 décembre 2012, environ 50 manifestants de la Première nation de Seton Lake ont érigé un barrage sur la voie ferrée du CN située près de Lillooet. Cette manifestation devrait durer deux jours. Le service de police du CN a été informé de la situation. Il a indiqué qu'aucun train n'est prévu dans la région le 29 décembre. Les agents de la GRC de Lillooet tentent de déterminer l'endroit exact où est situé le barrage et s'efforcent d'établir une communication avec les manifestants.

Alberta : Le 29 décembre 2012, une randonnée à cheval d'Hobbema à Wetaskiwin à l'appui du mouvement « Idle No More » doit avoir lieu de 13 h à 14 h (HNE).

Ontario : Le 28 décembre 2012, le barrage érigé par des manifestants des Premières nations sur le corridor commercial ferroviaire était toujours en place à Sarnia. Aucun train ne circule dans la région. Il n'y a pas d'autres embranchements permettant de desservir la région. Le parc du CN à Sarnia est rempli à capacité.

Par ailleurs, une dance éclair est prévue de 11 h à 12 h(HNE) le 29 décembre au Pen Centre à St. Catharines.

Québec : Le 28 décembre 2012, l'ancien chemin de fer de la subdivision de Cascapedia du CN (qui relie Matapédia et Gaspé), appartenant maintenant à la Société du Chemin de Fer de la Gaspésie, était bloqué à Pointe de la Croix-Restigouche par des membres des Premières nations sans l'appui du conseil de bande. Les opérations du CN ne sont pas touchées.

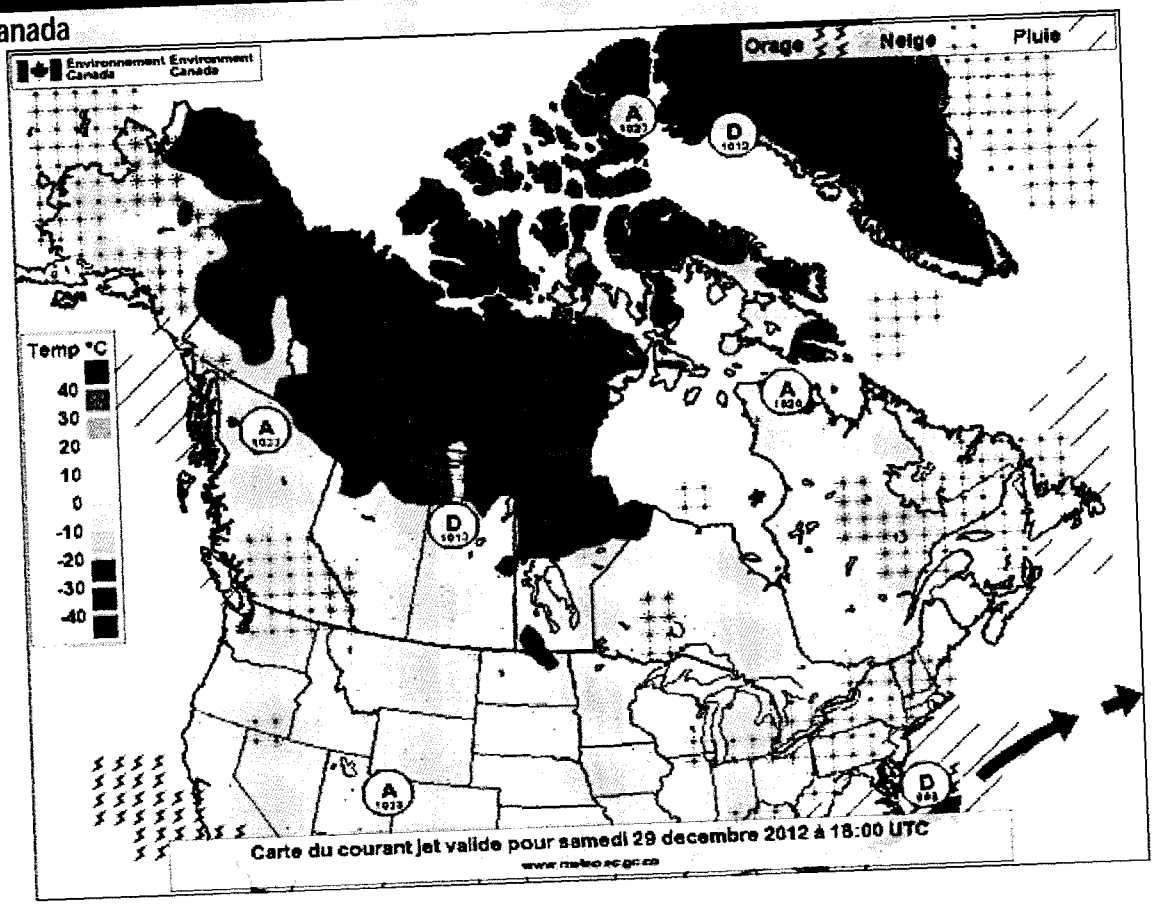

Mesures en cours : Le COG, Transports Canada (TC) et Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada (AADNC) continuent de surveiller la situation.

CURRENT

1. First Nations (FN) Protests: A number of FN protests are occurring and being planned nationwide. The protests that have occurred since 19 Dec are organized by a group called "Idle No More", which is critical of Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation. The omnibus legislation contains changes to the Indian Act and Navigable Waters Protection Act. To date, the protests have resulted in interruptions to rail services and delays on various highways.

On 30 Dec 2012 protests/events are scheduled in Ladysmith, BC, Victoria, BC, High Prairie, AB, Lethbridge, AB, Chatham, ON and Thunder Bay, ON. There is also one solidarity protest/event scheduled to take place in MO.

2. Significant Weather – Maritimes: As of 06:00 EST on 30 Dec 2012, Environment Canada Winter Storm Warnings remain in effect for areas of NS, NB, PE, QC, and NL. Open sources report that the high winds forecasted for the Cabot Strait have forced Marine Atlantic to issue crossing delays for 30 Dec. A Nova Scotia Power spokesperson stated that extra personnel will be on hand to deal with the aftermath of the storm. Motorists across the Maritimes are being advised to use extreme caution or to stay off the roads completely.

On 29 Dec the winter storm passed through NL and the Maritimes. Halifax Stanfield International Airport and St. John's International Airport announced cancellations and delayed flights due to weather conditions. Marine Atlantic cancelled ferries between NS and PE. There were minor power outages in NS and NB.

Significant Weather

National Outlook

The winter storm which crossed Cape Breton,NS yesterday will continue to move northeastward and through Newfoundland today.

Significant Weather in the Outlook period

A major depression over Newfoundland is expected to bring snowfall amounts of 15 to 40 cm over regions northwest of its trajectory (i.e. eastern Labrador). Strong to heavy winds will blow with this storm over several regions of eastern QC, PE, Labrador and northeastern NS. This wind, combined with snow, will cause poor visibitlity. Snow squalls are also forecast over Gulf St-Lawrence onshore with a northwesterly flow, reaching western part of Cape Breton and southwestern Newfoundland. Possible snowsquall will develop today north of Lake Erie associated with strong southwesterly winds ahead of cold front approaching from the west and tonight northwesterly flow behind the front will give snowsqualls off Lake Huron and Georgian Bay affecting southwestern ON.

INCIDENTS EN COURS

1. (122) Manifestations de Premières nations : Plusieurs manifestations de Premières nations sont en cours ou planifiées, à l'échelle nationale. Les manifestations ont débuté le 19 décembre et sont organisées par un groupe appelé « Idle No More », qui critique le projet de loi omnibus C-45 sur le Budget. Le projet de loi omnibus prévoit des modifications à la Loi sur les Indiens et à la Loi sur la protection des eaux navigables. Jusqu'à maintenant, les manifestations ont causé l'interruption de services ferroviaires et des retards sur diverses routes.

Le 31 décembre 2012, des manifestations ou autres activités sont prévues à Winnipeg, au Manitoba, et à Niagara Falls, en Ontario. Une manifestation est également planifiée par solidarité à El Paso, au Texas.

2. Mauvais temps – Maritimes : À 6 h (HNE) le 31 décembre 2012, des avertissements de tempête hivernale diffusés par Environnement Canada étaient toujours en vigueur pour certaines régions de la Nouvelle-Écosse (N.-É.), de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard (Î.-P.-É.), du Québec et de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador. Près de 2 800 abonnés sont toujours privés d'électricité au Nouveau-Brunswick (N.-B.) et en N.-É. Tandis que la tempête se dirige vers l'est, les conditions des routes continuent de s'améliorer puisqu'on continue de les déblayer. La circulation sur le pont de la Confédération est restreinte en raison des vents élevés. Aucun vol important n'a été annulé ou retardé.

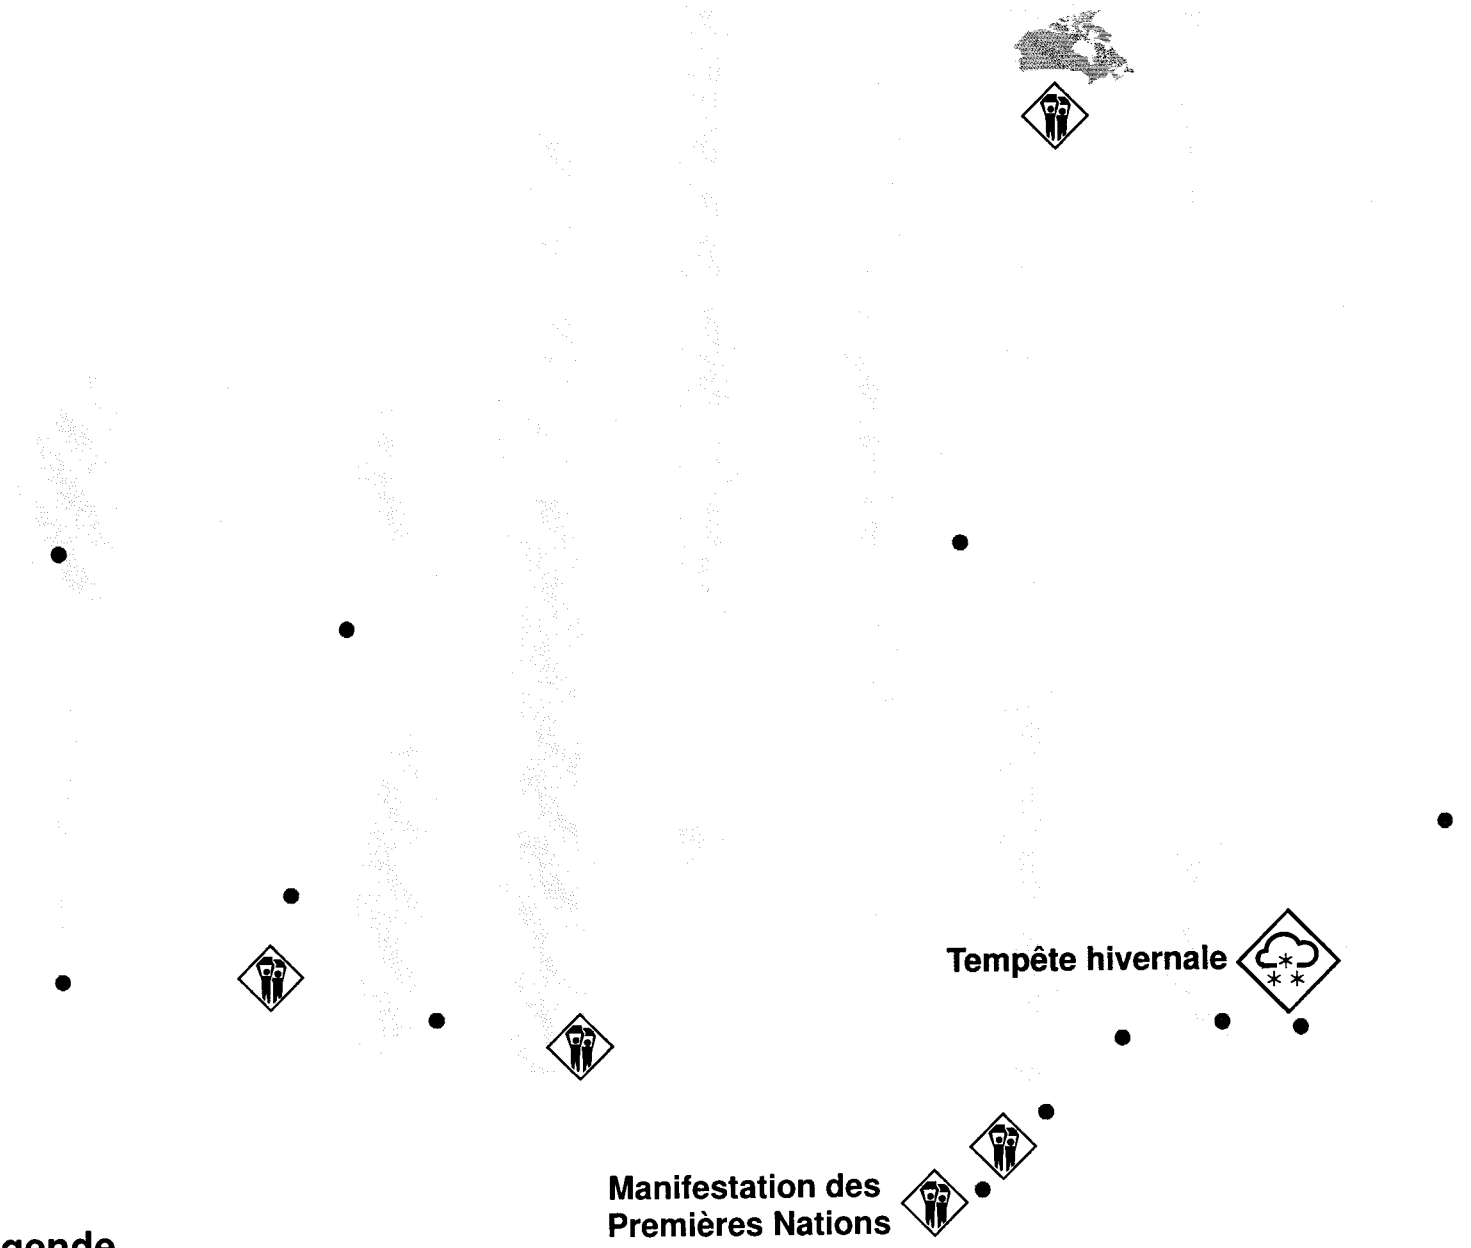

La tempête hivernale qui a traversé le cap Breton (N.-É.) le 30 décembre poursuivra sa route vers le nord-est et traversera Terre-Neuve le 31 décembre. Une importante dépression au-dessus de cette province devrait apporter de 15 à 40 cm de neige dans les régions situées au nord-ouest de sa trajectoire (soit l'Est du Labrador). Cette tempête provoquera des vents forts à violents dans plusieurs régions de l'Est du Québec, à l'Î.-P.-É., au Labrador et dans le Nord-est de la N.-É.

Manifestations des Premières nations à l'échelle nationale – Mise à jour

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Un certain nombre de manifestations par les Premières nations ont lieu à différents endroits à l'échelle du pays. On s'attend à ce que ces manifestations se déroulent dans le calme, mais celles-ci ont une incidence sur les infrastructures essentielles.

Alberta : Le 30 décembre 2012, plus de 400 personnes ont participé à une manifestation à l'extérieur du bureau de circonscription du premier ministre à Calgary.

Manitoba : Le 31 décembre 2012, un repas-rencontre et une collecte de fonds doivent avoir lieu de 17 h à 18 h (HNE) au Thunderbird House à Winnipeg.

Ontario : Le 30 décembre 2012, le barrage érigé par des manifestants des Premières nations sur le corridor commercial ferroviaire était encore en place à Sarnia. La circulation ferroviaire est toujours paralysée dans la région. Il n'y a pas d'autres embranchements permettant de desservir la région. Le parc du CN à Sarnia est bondé.

De plus, le 30 décembre, environ 4 000 passagers de VIA Rail en route pour Montréal, Toronto et Ottawa ont été retardés en raison d'une manifestation des Premières nations sur la voie principale près de Marysville. La manifestation s'est terminée sans heurts, et VIA Rail a repris ses opérations sans incident. Par ailleurs, la manifestation tenue à la gare maritime de Walpole-Algona, près de Chatham (Ontario) n'a pas causé d'interruption des services de traversier. Les manifestants ont distribué des dépliants aux passagers qui attendaient de prendre le traversier sur l'île de Walpole.

Le 31 décembre, on s'attend à ce qu'un grand nombre de personnes participent à une danse éclair et à une ronde, qui doivent avoir lieu à 16 h 30 et à 17 h 30 (HNE) au parc Queen Victoria à Niagara Falls, en Ontario.

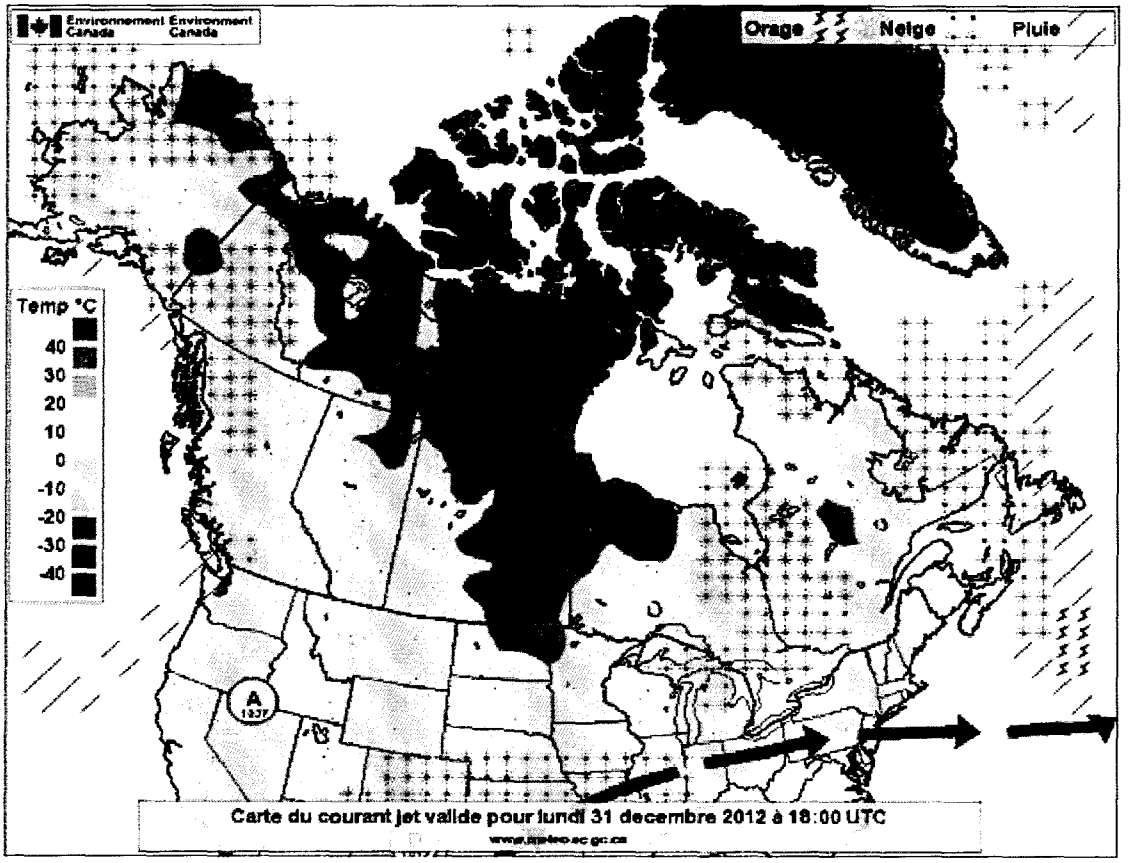

Mesures en cours : Le COG, Transports Canada (TC) et Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada (AADNC) continuent de surveiller la situation.

Situation météorologique importante

Aperçu

La tempête hivernale ayant traversé le cap Breton (N.-É.) hier poursuivra sa route vers le nord-est et traversera Terre-Neuve aujourd'hui.

Événements météorologiques importants dans la période de prévisions

Une importante dépression au-dessus de Terre-Neuve devrait apporter de 15 à 40 cm de neige dans les régions situées au nord-ouest de sa trajectoire (soit l'Est du Labrador). Cette tempête provoquera des vents forts à violents dans plusieurs régions de l'Est du Québec, à l'Î.-P.-É., au Labrador et dans le Nord-est de la N.-É. Combinés à la neige, les vents réduiront beaucoup la visibilité. On prévoit également des bourrasques de neige sur la rive du golfe du Saint-Laurent et vers le nord-ouest, jusqu'à l'Ouest du cap Breton et au Sud-ouest de Terre-Neuve. Il pourrait aussi y avoir des bourrasques de neige au nord du lac Érié en raison des vents forts du sud-ouest soufflant à l'approche d'un front froid qui arrive de l'Ouest. Ce soir, les vents du nord-ouest suivant ce front causeront des bourrasques de neige au large du lac Huron et de la baie Georgienne, ce qui aura une incidence sur les conditions météorologiques dans le Sud-ouest de l'Ontario.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

EVENTS, INCIDENTS and ITEMS OF INTEREST

DAILY BRIEF CLASSIFIED ADDENDUM: There is no classified addendum today

CURRENT

1. (122) First Nations (FN) Protests: A number of FN protests are occurring and being planned nationwide. The protests that have occurred since 19 Dec 2012 are organized by a group called "Idle No More", which is critical of Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation. The omnibus legislation contains changes to the Indian Act and Navigable Waters Protection Act. To date, the protests have been peaceful in nature; however, some protests have resulted in interruptions to rail services and delays on various highways.

On 01 Jan 2013, protests/events are planned in Sudbury and continuing in Sarnia, ON.

2. Significant Weather: As of 07:00 EST on 01 Jan 2013, Environment Canada Winter Storm Warnings are in effect for NL. An intense low pressure system northeast of NL will move east of the Labrador Sea on 01 Jan. Total snowfall amounts for eastern Labrador could reach 50 cm and strong northerly winds gusting as high as 90 km/h will result in reduced visibility and blowing snow.

3. Happy New Year!

Significant Weather

National Outlook

Except over Labrador, new year will begin with quite calm but cold weather conditions over eastern Canada. Along the Labrador coast a significant amount of snow is expected with strong to heavy winds which will cause poor visibility. A weak depression will cross over the Prairies from northwest to southeast creating light snow with less than 10 cm expected. Strong northwesterly flow along St-Lawrence River will develop some snowsqualls over northern Gapsé Peninsula on 1 Jan.

Warnings

Eastern Labrador: winter storm, blowing snow.

Situation météorologique importante

Aperçu

Sauf au Labrador, l'arrivée du Nouvel An est marqué par un temps calme, mais froid dans l'Est du Canada. Le long de la côte du Labrador, on prévoit beaucoup de neige et des vents forts à violents qui réduiront de manière importante la visibilité. Une faible dépression traversera les Prairies du nord-ouest vers le sud-est, apportant de faible neige (moins de 10 cm selon les prévisions). Situation météorologique importante

Aperçu

Un système stationnaire au-dessus de la mer du Labrador combiné à un courant d'air froid au Québec causera des conditions de tempête hivernale au Labrador ainsi que des bourrasques de neige et un refroidissement éolien dans la région du golfe du Saint-Laurent. En raison d'une crête barométrique, le temps sera beau, mais froid, dans l'Ouest du Québec et l'Est de l'Ontario. Une dépression au-dessus du lac Supérieur apportera jusqu'à 10 cm de neige. Une autre dépression à Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (T.-N.-L.) entraînera de la neige et de la poudrerie. On prévoit de la pluie pour la région côtière du Nord de la Colombie-Britannique (C.-B.) et de la neige dans les régions intérieures de cette province.

INCIDENTS EN COURS

1. (122) Manifestations par les Premières Nations : Un certain nombre de manifestations par les Premières nations sont encore prévues à l'échelle nationale. À ce jour, les manifestations ont été pacifiques, mais certaines ont causé des interruptions des services ferroviaires et des ralentissements sur différentes grandes routes. En particulier, un barrage ferroviaire est en place à Sarnia depuis le 21 décembre.
Le 2 janvier en soirée, les médias ont rapporté que l'on démantelait le barrage, mais la nouvelle n'a pas été confirmée.

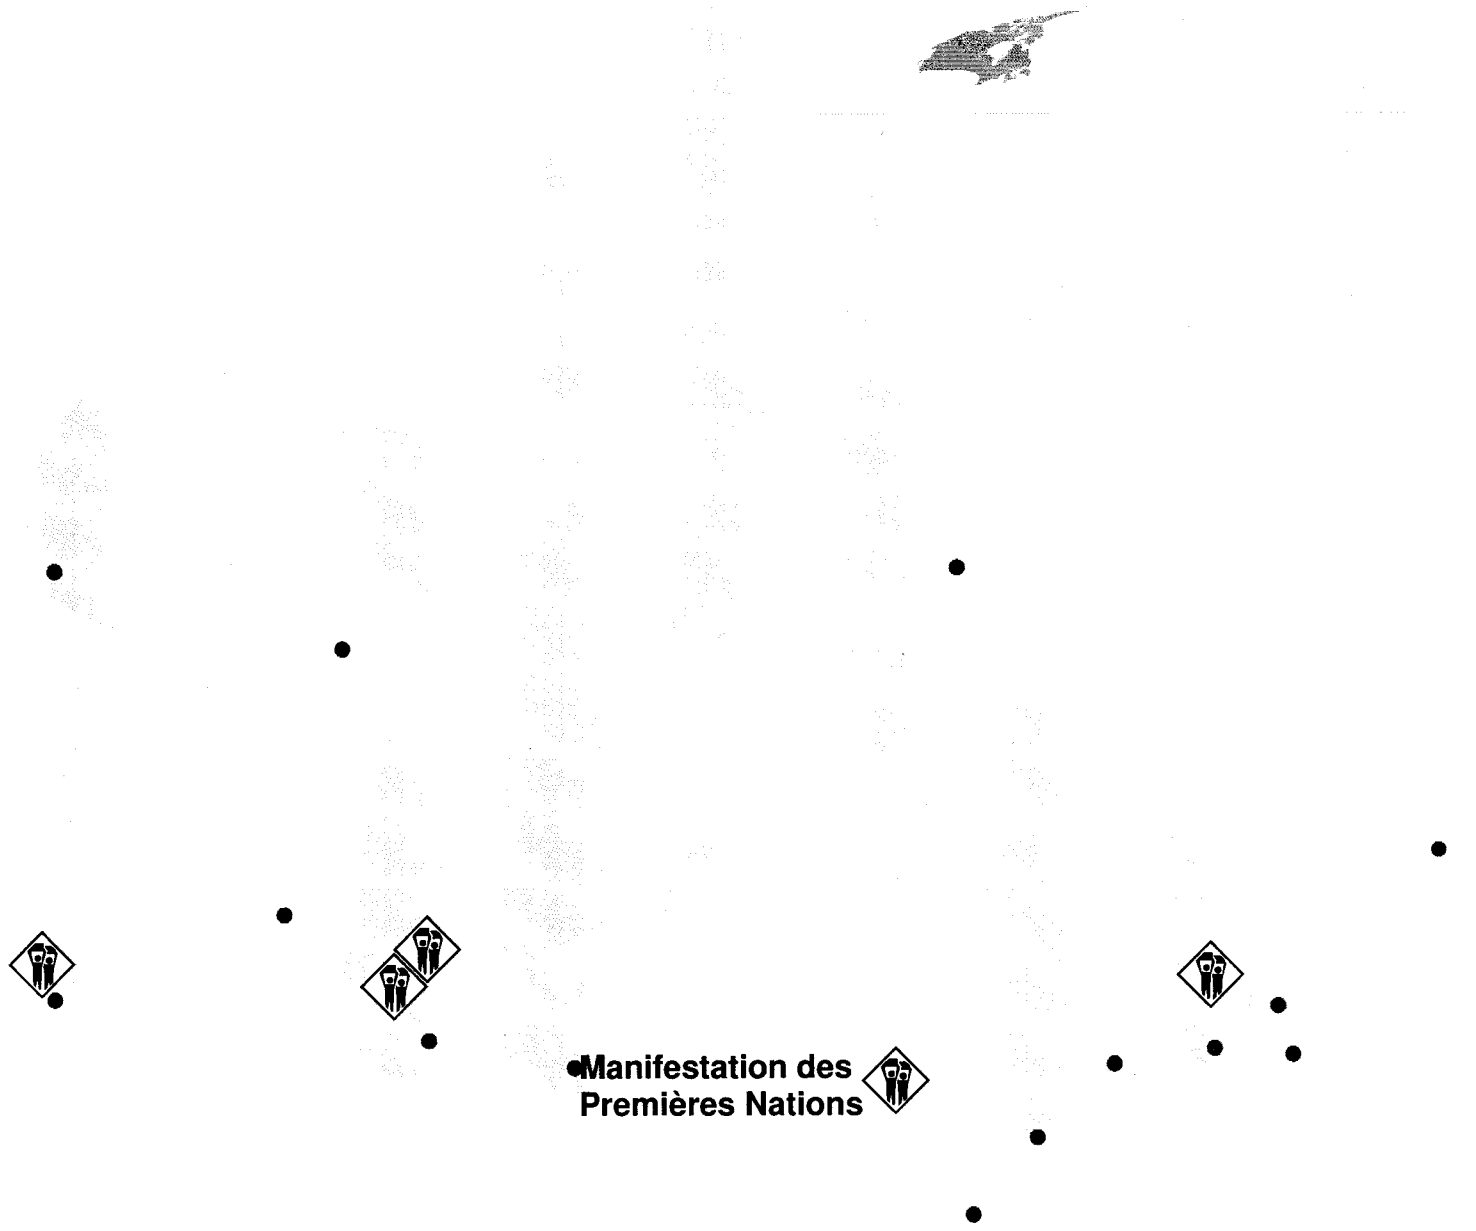

Le 3 janvier, des manifestations et autres activités sont planifiées en Colombie-Britannique (C.-B.), en Saskatchewan, en Ontario et au Québec.

Manifestations des Premières nations à l'échelle nationale – Mise à jour

Sommaire de l'incident/l'événement : Un certain nombre de manifestations par les Premières nations ont lieu à différents endroits à l'échelle du pays. On s'attend à ce que ces manifestations se déroulent dans le calme.

3 janvier 2013

C.-B. : Une manifestation est prévue au North Island College à Port Alberni de 15 h à 17 h (HNE).

Saskatchewan : Une manifestation doit avoir lieu à l'extérieur du bureau du Randy Hoback à Prince Albert de 14 h à 16 h (HNE). Une ronde éclair est également prévue au 8th Street Mall à Saskatoon de 19 h à 20 h (HNE).

Ontario : Le 3 janvier, la Première nation de Mattagami (à Gogama près de Timmins) planifie un rassemblement sur la route 144, direction nord, de 11 h à 16 h (HNE).

Québec : Des manifestants du conseil de bande de la Première nation de Gesgapegiag ont l'intention de distribuer des dépliants le long de la route 132 de 9 h à 15 h (HNE) en Gaspésie.

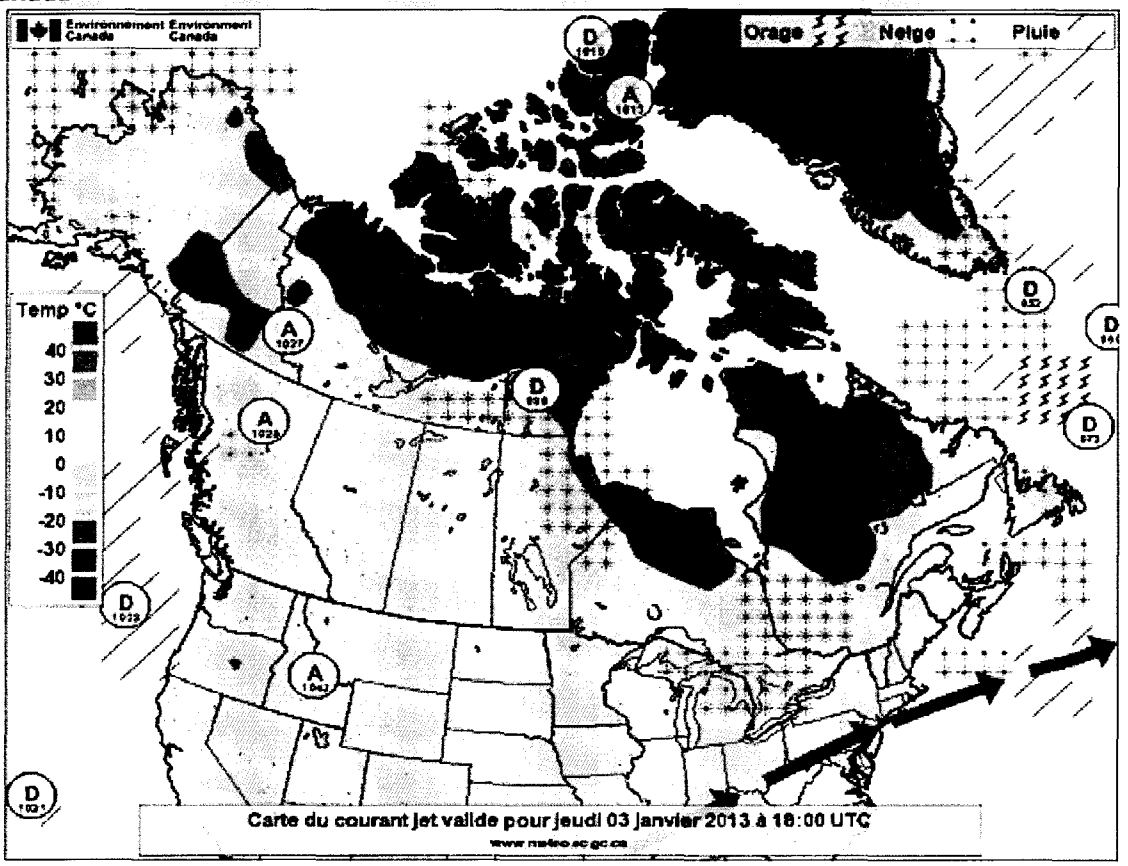

Mesures en cours : Le COG et AADNC continuent de surveiller la situation.

Situation météorologique importante

Aperçu

À Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador, la neige et les bourrasques de neige s'affaibliront aujourd'hui. La température demeurera froide au Québec et dans le Canada atlantique. Une dépression au-dessus des Grands Lacs apportera jusqu'à 5 cm de neige en Ontario et au Québec aujourd'hui. Un système plus intense au-dessus du Nunavut apportera de la neige dans le Nord-Est de l'Ontario ce soir et créera des conditions de blizzard au Nunavut et dans certaines régions du Manitoba. Une crête barométrique causera de la pluie et de la neige dans l'Ouest de la C.-B.

Avertissements

Régions intérieures et côtières du Nord de la C.-B. : avertissements de neige et de pluie verglaçante.
Sud-Ouest du Nunavut et Nord-Est du Manitoba : possibilité d'avertissements de blizzards et de refroidissement éolien ce soir.

Ces événements peuvent occasionner des perturbations aux points d'entrée et aux services ferroviaires, ainsi que des retards sur les autoroutes.

2. (001) Séisme de magnitude 7,5 – Sud-Est de l'Alaska :
Le 5 janvier 2013, le United States Geological Survey a signalé qu'à 3 h 58 HNE, un séisme de magnitude de 7,7 s'est produit à environ 101 km de la baie Edna, au large de l'Alaska, à une profondeur de 9 km; le séisme a été déclassé plus tard à une puissance de 7,5. Une alerte au tsunami a été émise pour les régions côtières de la Colombie-Britannique et de l'Alaska. Le 5 janvier 2013, à 6 h 07 HNE, le West Coast Alaska Tsunami Warning Centre a confirmé que toutes les alertes au tsunami ont été levées. Les collectivités situées dans le rayon de l'alerte ont été informées qu'il n'y a pas de danger pour les régions côtières de la Colombie-Britannique. Aucun dégât n'a été signalé malgré une légère hausse des niveaux d'eau dans certaines régions.

Situation météorologique importante

Aperçu

Des précipations de pluie toucheront la côte de la Colombie-Britannique pour se transformer en neige sur les régions élevées. Des chutes de neige atteindront les Rocheuses ce soir. Un système dépressionnaire sur les Territoires du Nord-Ouest traversera les régions de l'Est des Prairies avec des précipitations de faible neige dans certains endroits. Un autre système touchera les Grands Lacs au cours de la nuit apportant des chutes de neige. Une tempête qui se développe le long de la côte du Labrador se dirigera vers le nord aujourd'hui apportant des chutes de neige et de la poudrerie pour les régions côtières du Labrador. On s'attend à ce que le système depressionnaire perde lentement de son intensité sur les régions du Canada Atlantique.

Avertissements

Est du Québec : Avertissement de bourrasques de neige.
Nunavut : Avertissement de blizzard sur la côte ouest de la Baie d'Hudson.

INCIDENTS EN COURS

1. Situation météorologique importante – Terre-Neuve : Un système dépressionnaire en développement près de la péninsule de Gaspé s'intensifiera alors qu'il se dirigera vers le cap Breton, le 10 janvier. Il continuera de gagner en intensité lorsqu'il se dirigera vers le Sud de Terre-Neuve. La quantité totale de neige prévue varie de 30 cm (péninsule Bonavista) à près de 70 cm (Nord de la presqu'île Avalon). De forts vents, associés à de la neige, entraîneront une visibilité nulle et des conditions de blizzard vers la fin de la journée du 10 janvier et au début de celle du 11 janvier. Environnement Canada a diffusé des avertissements de conditions de blizzard pour le Sud de Terre-Neuve.

À VENIR

1. 11 janvier : Manifestations de Premières nations – Ottawa (Ontario) : Un rassemblement pacifique aura lieu à Ottawa en appui au mouvement Idle No More. L'événement devrait commencer à 7 h (HNE) sur l'île Victoria puis se poursuivre par une marche en direction de la Colline du Parlement, via la rue Wellington, à partir de 10 h (HNE). Selon les organisateurs, de 1 000 à 5 000 personnes sont attendues; l'événement devrait se terminer avant 17 h (HNE). Le service de police d'Ottawa et la Gendarmerie royale du Canada sont au courant de l'événement et ont été mobilisés. La circulation dans cette zone pourrait être perturbée.

DAILY BRIEF CLASSIFIED ADDENDUM: A classified addendum will be issued by the GOC

CURRENT

1. Significant Weather – NL: As of 06:00 EST 11 Jan 2013 Environment Canada reports that a low pressure system over the Southern Grand Banks will continue southward today. Official and unofficial snowfall reports indicate widespread 20 to 30 centimetres snowfall accumulations overnight with higher amounts likely over parts of the Avalon and Northern Burin Peninsula. Blizzard conditions that developed overnight for the Burin, Bonavista and Avalon peninsulas will continue today.

On 10 Jan Transport Canada (TC) reported that due to the blizzard St. John's International Airport had issued a Notice to Airmen (NOTAM) advising that all runways were closed. St. John's International Airport reports that many flights are cancelled on 11 Jan. Widespread sporadic power outages are being experienced in the St. John's area. All schools and many businesses are closed including Provincial and Federal government offices.

2. First Nation (FN) Protests: A number of FN protests, organized by a group called "Idle No More", have occurred since 19 Dec 2012. To date, these protests have been peaceful in nature; however, some protest activities have resulted in interruption at ports of entry, rail services, and delays on highways.
The largest of these protests is expected to take place in Ottawa. This event is scheduled to begin at 07:00 EST on Victoria Island followed by a march to Parliament Hill beginning at approximately 11:00 EST. Organizers anticipate between 1,000 and 5,000 participants and the event is expected to conclude by 17:00 EST. The Ottawa Police and Royal Canadian Mounted Police are aware of the planned event and have been engaged. Traffic disruptions in the area may be anticipated.

INCIDENTS EN COURS

1. Situation météorologique importante – Terre-Neuve : À 6 h (HNE) le 11 janvier 2013, Environnement Canada a signalé qu'un système dépressionnaire au-dessus du Sud des Grands Bancs continuera de se diriger vers le sud aujourd'hui. Les rapports officiels et officieux sur la chute de neige indiquaient que de 20 à 30 cm de neige se sont accumulés à plusieurs endroits pendant la nuit; les quantités les plus importantes sont vraisemblablement tombées sur la presqu'île Avalon et le Nord de la péninsule de Burin. Des conditions de blizzard se sont développées pendant la nuit pour les péninsules de Burin et de Bonavista, ainsi que sur la presqu'île Avalon; ces conditions se poursuivront aujourd'hui.

Le 10 janvier, Transports Canada a signalé qu'en raison des conditions de blizzard, l'aéroport international de St. John's avait diffusé un avis aux navigants (NOTAM) pour les informer de la fermeture de toutes les pistes. De nombreux vols sont annulés le 11 janvier. Des pannes de courant frappent sporadiquement la région de St. John's dans divers secteurs. Toutes les écoles et les entreprises sont fermées, y compris les bureaux des gouvernements fédéral et provincial.

2. Manifestations de Premières nations – Ottawa (Ontario) : Plusieurs manifestations de Premières nations, organisées par un groupe appelé « Idle No More », ont lieu depuis le 19 décembre 2012. Jusqu'à présent, ces manifestations ont été pacifiques, même si certaines activités ont entraîné une interruption du service de certains points d'entrée et des services ferroviaires, ainsi que des retards sur les routes. La plus importante de ces manifestations devrait avoir lieu à Ottawa. L'événement devrait commencer à 7 h (HNE) sur l'île Victoria puis se poursuivre par une marche en direction de la Colline du Parlement vers 11 h (HNE). Selon les organisateurs, de 1 000 à 5 000 personnes devraient participer; l'événement devrait se terminer avant 17 h (HNE). Le service de police d'Ottawa et la Gendarmerie royale du Canada sont au courant de l'événement et ont été mobilisés. La circulation dans cette zone pourrait être perturbée.

Situation météorologique importante

Aperçu

Un intense système de basse pression au-dessus du Sud-Est de Terre-Neuve entraînera de forts vents, ainsi que de 15 à 25 cm de neige supplémentaires, et causera des conditions de blizzard sur l'Est de la province jusqu'à minuit. Les conditions s'amélioreront graduellement, car la neige se changera en pluie pendant la nuit. Un système dépressionnaire au-dessus des Dakotas entraînera une tempête hivernale et des conditions de blizzard sur le Sud du Manitoba aujourd'hui et sur l'Ontario cette nuit, jusqu'au matin du 12 janvier; le système engendrera de 10 à 15 cm de neige ainsi que de la pluie verglaçante à la limite entre la zone pluie et la zone de neige.

Avertissements

Terre-Neuve : Conditions de blizzard sur l'Est de la province.
Manitoba : Tempête hivernale et blizzard; de 10 à 15 cm de neige.
Ontario : Tempête hivernale et pluie verglaçante.
Québec : Pluie verglaçante.

DAILY BRIEF CLASSIFIED ADDENDUM: There is no classified addendum today

CURRENT

1. Significant Weather – NL: As of 06:00 EST on 12 Jan 2013, official and unofficial snowfall reports indicated widespread 25 to 55 cm snowfall accumulations with higher amounts likely over some areas. High winds gusting between 100 and 120 km/h were expected for Terra Nova, Clarenville, Avalon Peninsula North and Bonavista Peninsula regions, with further snowfall amounts of 5 to 10 cm. Blizzard conditions over eastern Newfoundland have tapered to light snow and freezing drizzle or rain and drizzle. Freezing drizzle in the onshore flow over northeastern Newfoundland is expected to persist until late in the day when temperatures will eventually rise above the freezing mark. High waves and pounding surf can be expected for the Bonavista and Avalon Peninsula. This will cause higher than normal water levels which could result in minor coastal flooding at high tide this morning. Newfoundland and Labrador Hydro provided an estimated restoration time of the power between 8:30 and 10:30 EST on 12 Jan. At 20:43 EST on 11 Jan, Transport Canada reports that the NOTAM has been extended and the runways at St. John's International Airport will remain closed until 10:30 EST on 12 Jan.

2. First Nation (FN) Protests: A number of FN protests, organized by a group called "Idle No More", have occurred since 19 Dec 2012. To date, these protests have been peaceful in nature; however, some protest activities have resulted in interruptions at ports of entry, on rail services, and delays on highways.

On 11 Jan 2013, a number of FN leaders met with the Prime Minister in Ottawa, ON while several other FN leaders boycotted the meeting due to the lack of attendance of the Governor General. During these talks, approximately 1,000 protesters demonstrated in front of Langevin Block in Ottawa, causing traffic disruptions. On 12 Jan, events are planned in BC, NT and QC.

INCIDENTS EN COURS

1. Situation météorologique importante – Terre-Neuve : À 6 h (HNE) le 12 janvier 2013, les rapports officiels et officieux sur la chute de neige indiquaient que de 25 à 55 cm de neige se sont accumulés à plusieurs endroits, dont certains ont vraisemblablement reçu des quantités plus importants que d'autres. Des vents forts pouvant souffler de 100 à 120 km/h sont attendus pour les régions de Terra-Nova, de Clarenville, pour le Nord de la presqu'île Avalon et la péninsule de Burin; on prévoit aussi d'autres chutes de neiges pouvant aller de 5 à 10 cm. Les conditions de blizzard qui s'étaient développées sur l'est de Terre-Neuve se sont affaiblies, la province doit maintenant s'attendre à de faibles accumulations de neige et à de la bruine verglaçante, ou à de la pluie et de la bruine. La pluie verglaçante de l'écoulement vers le littéral sur le nord-est de Terre-Neuve devrait se poursuivre jusqu'en fin de journée, alors que la température montera éventuellement au-dessus du point de congélation. On attend de fortes vagues et des vagues déferlantes sur la presqu'île Avalon et la péninsule de Bonavista, ce qui pourrait faire augmenter au-delà des normales les niveaux d'eau et causer des inondations mineures le long de la côte ce matin. Hydro Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador s'attend à pouvoir rétablir le courant entre 8 h 30 et 10 h 30 (HNE) le 12 janvier. À 20 h 43 (HNE) le 11 janvier, Transports Canada a annoncé que l'avis aux navigants (NOTAM) a été prolongé et que les pistes de l'aéroport international de St. John's resteront fermées jusqu'à 10 h 30 (HNE) le 12 janvier.

2. Manifestations de Premières nations : Plusieurs manifestations de Premières nations, organisées par un groupe appelé « Idle No More », ont lieu depuis le 19 décembre 2012. Jusqu'à présent, ces manifestations ont été pacifiques, même si certaines activités ont entraîné une interruption du service de certains points d'entrée et des services ferroviaires, ainsi que des retards sur les routes.

Le 11 janvier 2013, de nombreux chefs des Premières nations ont rencontré le premier ministre, à Ottawa, en Ontario. Plusieurs autres chefs des Premières nations ont boycotté la rencontre pour protester contre l'absence du gouverneur général. Pendant les rencontres, environ 1 000 manifestants ont protesté devant l'édifice Langevin, à Ottawa, ce qui a perturbé la circulation. Le 12 janvier, des activités sont prévues en Colombie-Britannique, aux Territoires du Nord-Ouest et au Québec.

DAILY BRIEF CLASSIFIED ADDENDUM: There is no classified addendum today

CURRENT

1. Significant Weather – NL: On Jan 11 and 12 2013, a blizzard and freezing drizzle and rain hit several parts of NL. As a result, government offices and schools were closed. All the runways at St. John's International Airport were closed until 22:10 EST on Jan 12 and resumed activities even though there were some flight delays, according to the airport website. Widespread isolated power outages also occurred and Newfoundland and Labrador Hydro provided an estimated restoration time at 11:30 EST on Jan 13.

As of 06:00 EST on Jan 13, Environment Canada issued a warning reporting that an intense low pressure system southeast of the Grand Banks will maintain a moist northerly flow over Newfoundland for the next few days. The freezing drizzle from the onshore flow over Northeastern Newfoundland is expected to persist throughout the night. Temperatures will eventually rise above the freezing mark during the morning of 13 Jan.

2. First Nation (FN) Protests: A number of FN protests, organized by a group called "Idle No More", have occurred since 19 Dec 2012. To date, these protests have been peaceful in nature; however, some protest activities have resulted in interruptions at ports of entry, on rail services, and delays on highways.

On 13 Jan 2013, events are planned in BC, AB and QC. The GOC continues to monitor the situation closely and has established contact with its partner agencies, including AANDC, CBSA, RCMP and TC in order to maximize information sharing.

UPCOMING

1. (003) First Nation (FN) Protests, Day of Action – Nationwide: As part of the ongoing FN engagement, a number of FN protests are anticipated to take place as a "National Day of Action", planned for 16 Jan 2013.

Demonstrations and marches are expected in various locations across Canada including in BC, AB, SK, ON and QC. These demonstrations are expected to raise awareness of FN issues and some impact on transportation routes, border crossings and businesses are expected.

1. Situation météorologique importante – Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador : Les 11 et 12 janvier 2013, un blizzard, de la bruine et de la pluie verglaçantes ont affecté plusieurs parties de Terre-Neuve et Labrador et ont causé la fermeture d'écoles et de bureaux gouvernementaux. Toutes les pistes de l'aéroport international de St. John's ont été fermées jusqu'à 22 h 10 (HNE) le 12 janvier, heure à laquelle les activités ont repris malgré certains retards, selon le site Web de l'aéroport. Certains endroits ont subi des pannes d'électricité généralisées; Hydro Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador estime pouvoir rétablir le courant à 11 h 30 (HNE) le 13 janvier.

À 6 h (NHE) le 13 janvier, Environnement Canada a émis un avertissement selon lequel une intense dépression au sud-est des Grands Bancs maintiendra une circulation du nord chargée d'humidité sur l'est de Terre-Neuve aujourd'hui. La bruine verglaçante déversée par les vents de mer sur le nord-est de Terre-Neuve devrait persister ce matin. Les températures grimperont éventuellement au-dessus du point de congélation plus tard dans la matinée du 13 janvier.

2. Manifestations de Premières nations : Plusieurs manifestations de Premières nations, organisées par un groupe appelé « Idle No More », ont lieu depuis le 19 décembre 2012. Jusqu'à présent, ces manifestations ont été pacifiques, même si certaines activités ont entraîné une interruption du service de certains points d'entrée et des services ferroviaires, ainsi que des retards sur les routes.

Le 13 janvier 2013, des activités sont prévues en Colombie-Britannique, en Alberta et au Québec. Le COG continue de suivre la situation de près, et il a communiqué avec ses partenaires, notamment Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada, l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada, la Gendarmerie royale du Canada et Transports Canada, afin de maximiser l'échange d'information.

À VENIR

1. (003) Manifestations des Premières nations – Journée nationale de protestation: Dans le cadre de leur engagement en cours, les Premières nations organiseront de nombreuses manifestations pour la Journée nationale de protestation, le 16 janvier 2013.

Des manifestations et des marches devraient se dérouler à divers endroits partout au Canada, notamment au Québec, en Ontario, en Saskatchewan, en Alberta et en Colombie-Britannique. Ces manifestations devraient sensibiliser les gens sur les enjeux touchant les Premières nations et perturber quelque peu certaines routes et entreprises, ainsi que certains postes frontaliers.

Situation météorologique importante

Aperçu

Une perturbation sur le golfe d'Alaska entraînera une chute de neige dans le nord de la Colombie-Britannique et du Yukon. Un système de basse pression qui se dirige vers le sud à partir des Grands lacs inférieurs causera des précipitations de pluie sur de nombreuses régions du sud et de l'est de l'Ontario et du sud du Québec, ainsi que de la pluie verglaçante sur la Nickel Belt et le sud-ouest du Québec. Un corridor de précipitations de neige s'étendra vers le nord jusqu'au Labrador.

Avertissements

Yukon : Précipitations de neige sur les régions du nord-ouest.
Ontario/Québec : Précipitations de pluie verglaçante de l'île Manitoulin jusqu'à la région de l'Abitibi.
Terre-Neuve et Labrador : Précipitations de bruine verglaçante sur les régions du nord de la province.

Aperçu national: Un système dépressionnaire se déplacera vers le sud-est et traversera le Sud des Prairies aujourd'hui, mettant en place une zone de neige au nord du système; la quantité de neige la plus importante tombera sur le Centre de la Saskatchewan. De la poudrerie précédera également ce système dans le Sud de la Saskatchewan et le Sud-Ouest du Manitoba; elle sera accompagnée de vents vifs du sud-est. Une masse d'air très froid persistera entre le Manitoba et l'Est du Canada. Un refroidissement éolien extrême est prévu pour la majeure partie de l'Ontario, du Québec et du Manitoba.

Événements météorologiques importants dans la période de prévisions: Rien d'important à signaler.

Avertissements:
Colombie-Britannique : Vents potentiellement destructeurs prévus sur le Centre des régions côtières.
Prairies : Neige sur le Centre de la Saskatchewan. Poudrerie sur le Sud de la Saskatchewan. Refroidissement éolien sur le Nord du Manitoba.
Ontario et Québec : Refroidissement éolien dans le Nord de l'Ontario ainsi que dans le Centre et le Sud du Québec.
Canada atlantique : Refroidissement éolien au Nouveau-Brunswick. Bourrasques de neige sur l'Ouest, le Sud et l'Est de la Nouvelle-Écosse.
Arctique : Conditions de blizzard sur l'Ouest de la baie d'Hudson en matinée.

WEATHER OUTLOOK AND WARNINGS (Source: Canadian Meteorological Centre, EC)

National Outlook: An onshore flow will persist across coastal sections of BC along with some rain. A weak low pressure system will track eastward towards Lake Huron along with some light snow in the Great Lakes region and we could see local amounts of up to 10 cm from lake enhancement. An intense feature over the Labrador sea will maintain near blizzard conditions across coastal sections of northern Labrador. A strong northerly flow combined with cold temperatures will persist across much of QC bringing more high windchills. Snowsqualls will persist across the Gulf of St-Lawrence affecting western and southern coastal sections of NL.

Significant Weather in the Outlook Period: Nothing significant to report.

Warnings:
QC: windchill over central/eastern QC.
Atlantic Canada: snowsquall over western and southern coastal sections of NL.

PRÉVISIONS MÉTÉOROLOGIQUES ET AVERTISSEMENTS (Source – Centre météorologique canadien, Environnement Canada)

Aperçu national : Un écoulement vers le littoral persistera à travers les sections côtières de la Colombie-Britannique et entraînera de la pluie. Un faible système dépressionnaire se dirigera vers l'est, vers le lac Huron, et sera accompagné de faible neige dans la région des Grands Lacs. Il pourrait causer jusqu'à 10 cm de neige par endroits. Un important système au-dessus de la mer du Labrador continuera d'engendrer des conditions de quasi blizzard le long de la côte du Nord du Labrador. Des vents forts en provenance du nord, jumelés à des températures froides, continueront de causer un refroidissement éolien important sur la majeure partie du Québec. Des bourrasques de neige continueront de frapper le golfe du Saint-Laurent ainsi que les côtes de l'Ouest et du Sud de la Terre Neuve.

MÉTÉO

PRÉVISIONS MÉTÉOROLOGIQUES ET AVERTISSEMENTS (Source – Centre météorologique canadien, Environnement Canada)

Aperçu national: Un écoulement vers le littoral, provoqué par un système au-dessus du golfe de l'Alaska, demeurera sur la côte de la Colombie-Britannique, ce qui causera des averses de pluie. La pluie se transformera en neige dans les régions montagneuses et dans certaines régions de la côte Nord. Un faible système provoquera la chute de faibles averses de neige dans le Nord de la Saskatchewan et du Manitoba. Les averses de neige diminueront lentement au-dessus des Grands Lacs en raison de l'arrivée d'un système de haute pression. Un intense système au-dessus de la mer du Labrador continue de provoquer des conditions proches du blizzard dans certaines parties du Nord du Labrador. Les bourrasques de neige se poursuivront dans le golfe du Saint-Laurent, ce qui aura des répercussions sur la côte Ouest et Sud de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador.

Conditions Actuelles

Événements météorologiques importants dans la période de prévisions: Rien d'important à signaler.

Avertissements:
Québec : Avertissement de refroidissement éolien en vigueur dans la région de la rivière Manicouagan.

WEATHER OUTLOOK AND WARNINGS (Source: Canadian Meteorological Centre, EC)

National Outlook: Onshore flow precipitation will diminish along the BC coast from north to south where rain is changing to snow over elevated terrains and northern coastal sections. Additionally, starting overnight, a warm front from the Gulf of Alaska will create rain and snow affecting the northern coastal sections. An impulse from the northern USA Plains will cause a mix of precipitations where freezing rain is expected to affect the southern SK. Precipitation will taper off over the Labrador coast where the system will move slowly out the region. A system from the Midwest will move towards the Great Lakes overnight. This system will cause a mix of precipitations beginning by snow, changing to freezing rain and then rain.

PRÉVISIONS MÉTÉOROLOGIQUES ET AVERTISSEMENTS (Source – Centre météorologique canadien, Environnement Canada)

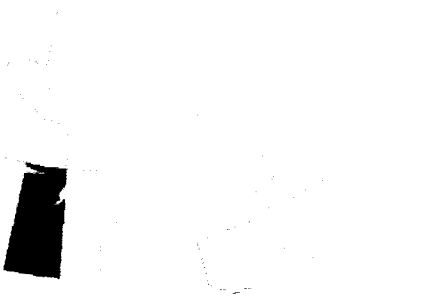

Aperçu national: Les précipitations provoquées par l'écoulement vers le littoral diminueront le long de la côte de la Colombie-Britannique, du Nord au Sud, où la pluie se transforme en neige en altitude et sur la côte Nord. De plus, à compter de cette nuit, un front chaud en provenance du golfe de l'Alaska causera des averses de pluie et de neige sur la côte Nord. Un système en provenance du Nord des Plaines américaines provoquera un mélange de précipitations, et on s'attend à ce que de la pluie verglaçante tombe sur le Sud de la Saskatchewan. Les précipitations diminueront au-dessus de la côte du Labrador, où le système s'éloignera lentement de la région. Un système en provenance du Midwest se déplacera au-dessus des Grands Lacs pendant la nuit et provoquera un mélange de précipitations (neige, pluie verglaçante et pluie).

PRÉVISIONS MÉTÉOROLOGIQUES ET AVERTISSEMENTS (Source – Centre météorologique canadien, Environnement Canada)

Aperçu national : Un système de basse pression traversera le lac Michigan et la zone inférieure des Grands Lacs aujourd'hui puis s'affaiblira au-dessus de la Nouvelle-Angleterre ce soir; il causera un mélange de précipitations (neige, pluie verglaçante et pluie) sur l'Est de l'Ontario et de la neige sur le Sud-Ouest du Québec. Un système dépressionnaire au-dessus de l'Est des Prairies se déplacera vers le Nord de l'Ontario ce soir et entraînera de 5 à 10 cm de neige au nord de sa trajectoire. Un front froid traversera le Nord-Ouest ontarien ce soir et engendrera de la neige. Une dépression traversera l'Ouest de la Colombie-Britannique depuis le Nord et causera de la neige sur les régions côtières et des terres intérieures.

NOTIFICATION - INCIDENT NT122-12

Description of incident: A number of First Nations (FN) Protests are occurring as a result of a grassroots campaign called "Idle No More" which is protesting Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation. Protesters are upset with changes to the Indian Act and Navigable Waters Protection Act, which they say weaken environmental laws and were proposed without adequate consultation with FN.

Protest events have been occurring since 09 Dec 2012. Although the protests have been peaceful in nature, some have affected the transportation sector:

- Members of the Aamjiwnaang FN set up a blockade on the railroad track that crosses Degurse Drive in Sarnia on 21 Dec. Protesters plan to continue the blockade until the Prime Minister meets with Attawapiskat FN Chief Spence, who is on a hunger strike. The line, known as the St. Clair spur, carries CN and CSX trains to several large industries in Sarnia's Chemical Valley and St. Clair Township. The line generally accommodates four or five trains a day. The Chemical Valley is an integral part of the Canadian economy, supplying chemicals and raw materials for the automotive, agricultural, pharmaceutical and other industries. Major pipelines bring crude oil, natural gas, natural gas liquids, and ethane to the region, and a further network of pipelines facilitates transfer of intermediate feed stocks and raw materials from one company to another within Sarnia-Lambton.
- On 28 Dec, an FN rail blockade has been set up between Matapedia and Gaspé. The situation does not affect CN operations but may affect VIA Rail. A VIA train is scheduled to arrive in the area at approximately 19:00 EST. VIA will bus the passengers around the blockade if the protestors remain on site. There is no impact to train operations at this time.
- A FN demonstration is occurring on Saskatchewan Avenue and Tupper Street in Portage La Prairie, MB. The protest is peaceful in nature and is scheduled from 13:00 to 15:00 EST. The RCMP are regulating a detour around the protest site as a precautionary measure. Of note, CN and CP Railway lines are within two blocks of this location; however, there are no reports of disruption to rail operations.

Current GOC actions: The GOC has established initial contact with Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, RCMP, Transport Canada, Emergency Management Ontario, Integrated Terrorism Assessment Centre and PS Regional Offices.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Further products related to this event will be issued upon significant changes to the situation.

NOTIFICATION - INCIDENT NT122-12

Description de l'incident : Diverses manifestations des Premières nations sont en train de se dérouler dans le cadre d'une campagne populaire intitulée « Idle No More », qui critique le projet de loi omnibus C-45 du gouvernement portant sur le budget. Les manifestants protestent surtout contre les modifications apportées à la Loi sur les Indiens et à la Loi sur la protection des eaux navigables qui, selon eux, affaibliront les lois environnementales et pour lesquelles les Premières nations n'ont pas été consultées convenablement avant leur mise en œuvre.

Des manifestations ont cours depuis le 9 décembre 2012. Même si elles sont à caractère pacifique, le secteur des transports a tout de même subi certaines perturbations, notamment :

- Le 21 décembre, des membres de la Première nation d'Aamjiwnaang ont érigé une barricade sur la voie ferrée qui traverse le chemin Degurse, à Sarnia. Les manifestants comptent maintenir la barricade en place jusqu'à ce que le premier ministre rencontre la Chef Spence de la Première nation d'Attawapiskat, qui fait la grève de la faim. Cette voie ferrée, connue sous le nom de l'embranchement de St. Clair, sert aux trains du CN et de CSX qui se rendent à diverses industries majeures de la Chemical Valley de Sarnia et du canton de St. Clair. Habituellement, de quatre à cinq trains passent sur cette voie chaque jour. La Chemical Valley fait partie intégrante de l'économie canadienne, puisqu'elle fournit des produits chimiques et du matériel brut aux industries de l'automobile, de l'agriculture et des produits pharmaceutiques, entre autres. Des pipelines importants amènent du pétrole brut, du gaz naturel, des liquides de gaz naturel et de l'éthane à la région, et un autre réseau de pipelines permet l'acheminement intermédiaire de matières biologiques et de matériaux bruts entre les diverses entreprises de la région de Sarnia-Lambton.
- Le 28 décembre, une barricade a été érigée sur une voie ferrée du CN qui relie Matapédia à Gaspé. La situation n'aura pas d'incidence sur les opérations du CN, mais elle pourrait en avoir sur celles de VIA Rail. Un train de VIA Rail doit arriver dans la région vers 19 h (HNE). Si la barricade et les manifestants sont encore sur place, VIA amènera ses passagers de l'autre côté de la barricade en autocar. Pour l'instant, la situation ne semble pas avoir d'incidence sur les opérations ferroviaires.
- Une manifestation des Premières nations est en train de se dérouler sur l'avenue Saskatchewan et la rue Tupper, à Portage La Prairie, au Manitoba. Cette manifestation est de nature pacifique, et elle doit durer de 13 h à 15 h (HNE). Par précaution, la GRC a prévu un détour pour contourner la manifestation. Il importe de noter que des voies du CN et de CP passent à deux pâtés de cette manifestation, mais qu'aucune perturbation aux opérations ferroviaires n'a été signalée jusqu'à maintenant.

Mesures en cours : Le COG est entré en communications avec Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada, la GRC, Transports Canada, Gestion des urgences Ontario, le Centre intégré d'évaluation des menaces et les bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique Canada.

Les ministères et les organismes ayant d'autres renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de les communiquer au COG.

D'autres produits sur cet incident seront publiés si des changements majeurs surviennent.

Notification fournie à : Personnes-ressources FPT.

Autres produits : Des produits de géomatique suivront.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST122-12 C

Incident: First Nations Protests

Date: Information valid as of 30 Dec 2012, 20:00 EST

Description of current incident: A number of First Nations (FN) Protests are occurring as a result of a grassroots campaign called "Idle No More" which is protesting Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation. In addition, "Idle No More" related protests have also been planned at different locations in the United States in the coming days.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, RCMP, Transport Canada, Emergency Management Ontario, PS Regional Offices and media/open source reporting.

Current actions: GOC is monitoring the situation and has established contact with key federal departments/agencies and PS Regional Offices in order to maintain cohesive information sharing.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

As of 20:00 EST, VIA Rail has issued a statement stating that approximately 2,000 passengers en route to and from Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa are affected by FN protestors blocking the main rail line near Marysville, ON. The protest has been ongoing since approximately 17:00 EST. VIA Rail has dispatched buses to stranded and affected passengers.

At this time, the GOC is aware of the following "Idle No More" related protest planned for 31 Dec 2012:

- ON: The rail blockade in Sarnia is ongoing, but remains peaceful at this time.

Assessment/Analysis: The protests have been peaceful in nature. However, some protests have disrupted rail operations and resulted in delays on various highways.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional situation reports: Further situation reports will be issued as significant developments occur.

Additional Products: Geomatics and other products will be attached to a follow-on message.

Rapport de situation

Numéro d'incident : ST122-12 C

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 30 décembre, 2012, à 20 h (HNE)

Description de l'incident : Diverses manifestations des Premières nations se déroulent dans le cadre d'une campagne populaire intitulée « Idle No More », qui critique le projet de loi omnibus C-45 du gouvernement portant sur le budget. Certaines manifestations reliées à la campagne populaire « Idle No More » sont aussi prévues pour certaines régions des États-Unis dans les prochains jours.

Source(s) des renseignements : Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada, la GRC, Transports Canada, Gestion des urgences Ontario, les bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique Canada, et les médias/sources générales.

Mesures en cours : Le COG surveille la situation et est en communication avec certains ministères et agences fédérales ainsi que les bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique afin de maintenir un échange d'information cohérent.

La gestion des manifestations relève des autorités locales et des organismes d'application de la loi, le cas échéant.

Vers 20 h (HNE), VIA Rail a indiqué qu'environ 2 000 passagers étaient affectés par des manifestations des Premières Nations sur la voie ferroviaire principale près de Marysville, Ontario. Les passagers étaient en route sur des trains à destination de Montréal, Toronto et Ottawa. La manifestation est en cours depuis environ 17 h (HNE). VIA Rail a envoyé des autobus pour assister les passagers affectés.

La manifestation suivante de la campagne populaire « Idle No More » aura lieu le 31 décembre 2012 :

- ON: Le barrage du corridor commercial ferroviaire par des manifestants des Premières nations est maintenu sans incident à Sarnia.

Analyse/évaluation : Jusqu'à maintenant, les manifestations ont été pacifiques. Cependant, quelques manifestations ont causé l'interruption de services ferroviaires et des retards sur diverses routes.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST122-12F

Incident: First Nations Protests

Date: Information valid as of 02 Jan 2013, 15:30 EST

Description of current incident: A number of First Nations (FN) Protests are occurring as a result of a grassroots campaign called "Idle No More" which is protesting Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, media/open source reporting.

Current actions: GOC is monitoring the situation and has established contact with key federal departments/agencies and PS Regional Offices in order to maintain cohesive information sharing.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

On 02 Jan, approximately 50 people from the Gescapegiag FN are blocking Highway 132 in QC near the NB border.

In addition to the events mentioned in ST122-12E, two more Idle No More events are taking place on 02 Jan:

- ON: 16:00 to 18:00 EST in Sudbury. Rally at Tom Davies Square, followed by a march through the downtown area. Participants have indicated they are planning to occupy the northbound lanes of the Paris Street Bridge for 15 minutes.
- BC: 18:00 to 19:00 EST in Vancouver. A rally is planned to take place at the Waterfront Station.

At this time, the GOC is aware of the following "Idle No More" related protest planned for 03 Jan 2013:

- ON: Ongoing rail blockade in Sarnia.
- ON: 11:00 to 16:00 EST at Highway 144 across from Middle Stetham Road. Mattagami FN rally.
- QC: Since 27 Dec, demonstrators from the Listuguj Mi'gmaq FN have set up a blockade on the rail tracks at Pointe-à-la-Croix, QC in support of the Idle No More movement. The demonstrators are targeting cargo trains, and allowing passenger trains through the blockade. To date, no rail traffic has been disrupted.
- BC: 16:00 – 18:00 EST at North Island College, Port Alberni. Nuu-chah-nulth community gathering.

- SK: 18:00 – 19:00 EST in Saskatoon. Flash mob round dance.

An unconfirmed media report indicated 50 to 60 Assembly of First Nations (AFN) Chiefs have discussed plans to launch country-wide disruptions by the middle of January in support of Chief Spence. The date of 16 Jan was allegedly noted as a day to launch a campaign of indefinite economic disruptions, including railway and highway blockades. Of note, media reported that the Idle No More organizers issued a statement distancing the grassroots movement from potential actions by the Chiefs.

Assessment/Analysis: The protests have been peaceful in nature. However, some protests have disrupted rail operations and resulted in delays on various highways.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional situation reports: Further situation reports will be issued as significant developments occur.

Additional Products: Geomatics and other products will be attached to a follow-on message.

Numéro de l'incident : ST122-12F

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 2 janvier 2013, à 15 h 30 (HNE).

Description de l'incident : Diverses manifestations des Premières nations sont en train de se dérouler dans le cadre d'un mouvement populaire intitulé « Idle No More », qui critique le projet de loi omnibus C-45 du gouvernement portant sur le budget.

Sources des renseignements : Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada, les bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique Canada, et les médias/sources générales.

Mesures en cours : Le COG surveille la situation et est en communication avec certains des ministères et agences fédérales clés ainsi que les bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique Canada afin de maintenir un échange d'information cohérent.

La gestion des manifestations relève des autorités et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, le cas échéant.

Le 2 janvier, environ 50 personnes de la Première nation de Gescapegiag ont bloqué l'autoroute 132 au Québec (Québec) près de la frontière avec le Nouveau-Brunswick (N.-B.).

En plus de celles mentionnées dans le rapport ST122-12E, deux autres activités sont prévues le 2 janvier dans le cadre du mouvement « Idle No More » :

- Ontario : De 16 h à 18 h HNE, à Sudbury. Rallye à la place Tom Davies, suivi d'une marche dans le centre-ville. Les participants ont fait savoir qu'ils prévoient occuper, pendant 15 minutes, les voies du pont de la rue Paris en direction nord.
- Colombie-Britannique : De 18 h à 19 HNE, à Vancouver. Un rallye doit se dérouler à la gare Waterfront.

À l'heure actuelle, selon les informations dont dispose le COG, les activités suivantes sont planifiées le 3 janvier 2013 dans le cadre du mouvement « Idle No More » :

- Ontario : Maintien du barrage ferroviaire à Sarnia.
- Ontario : De 11 h à 16 h HNE, sur l'autoroute 144, de l'autre côté de la route Middle Stetham. Rallye de la Première nation Mattagami.
- Québec : Depuis le 27 décembre, des manifestants de la Première nation des Mi'gmaq de Listuguj bloquent la voie ferrée à Pointe-à-la-Croix, au Québec, en soutien au mouvement « Idle No More ». Les manifestants bloquent les trains de marchandises, mais ils permettent aux trains de voyageurs de passer. Jusqu'à maintenant, la circulation ferroviaire n'a pas été perturbée.

- Colombie-Britannique: De 16 h à 18 h HNE, au North Island College de Port Alberni. Rassemblement communautaire des Nuu-chah-nulth.
- Saskatchewan: De 18 h à 19 h HNE à Saskatoon. Rassemblement éclair de danse en cercle.

Selon un reportage média non confirmé, de 50 à 60 chefs de l'Assemblée des Premières nations auraient discuté de la possibilité de lancer des mesures de perturbation à l'échelle du pays d'ici la mi-janvier en soutien à la Chef Spence. La date du 16 janvier aurait supposément été retenue pour lancer une campagne indéfinie de perturbations économiques, notamment au moyen de barricades sur des voies ferrées et des autoroutes. Il y a lieu de signaler que, selon les médias, les organisateurs du mouvement « Idle No More » ont publié un communiqué pour distancer le mouvement populaire des mesures potentielles que les Chefs pourraient prendre.

Évaluation/analyse : Jusqu'à maintenant, les manifestations ont été pacifiques. Cependant, quelques manifestations ont causé l'interruption de services ferroviaires et des retards sur diverses routes.

Les ministères et les organismes qui ont plus de renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Fermetures et perturbations possibles de ponts prévues le 5 janvier

La Police provinciale de l'Ontario (PPO) a fait part de son inquiétude concernant des fermetures et des perturbations possibles de ponts le 5 janvier en raison de manifestations annoncées par le mouvement « Idle No More ». La PPO prévoit des ralentissements dans les secteurs suivants :

- Pont des Trois nations (Cornwall)
- Pont Blue Water
- Pont Peace
- Territoire mohawk de Tyendinaga
- Route 17 à Nipissing

Un représentant de l'administration du pont Blue Water a déclaré qu'aucune fermeture ni aucun ralentissement ne seront tolérés sur le pont, et ce, pour des questions de sécurité publique.

L'administration du pont Peace (APP) a indiqué qu'elle gérerait toute perturbation de la même façon qu'elle gère d'autres activités, comme le marathon du Niagara et le Festival de l'amitié. Les organisateurs demanderont à l'APP le droit d'organiser un « défilé » sur le pont Peace. Les organisateurs se sont engagés à ne pas bloquer le pont et ils signeront une entente écrite avec l'APP. Celle-ci fermera la voie de droite en direction des États-Unis pendant environ une heure afin de répondre aux besoins du « défilé ». Les deux autres voies resteront ouvertes, une en direction du Canada et une en direction des États-Unis. L'activité devrait commencer vers 11 h (HNE). On prévoit qu'environ 150 à 180 participants passeront les douanes aux États-Unis pour ensuite revenir au Canada.

Les médias sociaux ont aussi indiqué que la route 403 dans le secteur du Skyway pourrait être touchée, mais ces renseignements ne sont pas confirmés.

Barrage en cours à Sarnia

La semaine passée, des avocats du CN se sont présentés devant la Cour supérieure de justice de l'Ontario afin de prolonger pour une période indéterminée une injonction visant à mettre fin au barrage.

Le juge a ordonné au chef de police du service de police de Sarnia de se présenter devant le tribunal le 2 janvier afin de justifier les mesures prises en lien avec les deux injonctions. John Desotti, juge de la Cour supérieure de justice, a déclaré que le chef de police devait trouver une façon de faire respecter l'injonction déposée le 21 décembre qui visait à mettre fin au barrage organisé par des manifestants autochtones. Le juge Desotti a ensuite suspendu la séance jusqu'au 3 janvier à midi (HNE). Ron Plain, porte-parole des Premières Nations, a accepté de collaborer avec les manifestants afin de mettre fin au barrage le 2 janvier. Il convient de noter que le conseil de bande Aamijwnaang a indiqué le 31 décembre qu'il n'appuie pas le barrage du chemin de fer.

Évaluation et analyse : Le COG juge que l'interruption de session a probablement été ordonnée afin de laisser le temps à toutes les parties concernées de trouver une résolution pacifique au conflit et d'éviter les accusations d'outrage au tribunal lors de la reprise des procédures judiciaires le 3 janvier.

Les ministères et les organismes qui détiennent d'autres renseignements sur cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

RESTRICTED Distribution Addendum to Situation Report

Incident Number: ST122-12F (Restricted Addendum)

Incident: First Nations Protests

Date: Information valid as of 02 Jan 2013, 15:30 EST

Source(s) of reporting: Ontario Provincial Police (OPP), Transport Canada, media/open source reporting.

Additional Restricted Information:

Potential bridge closures/disruptions planned for 05 Jan

The OPP indicated it is concerned about potential bridge closures/disruptions related to protest events, announced by Idle No More, for 05 Jan. The OPP expects slowdowns in the following areas:

- Three Nations Bridge (Cornwall)
- Blue Water Bridge
- Peace Bridge
- Tyendinaga Mohawk Territory
- Highway 17 in Nipissing

A representative from the Blue Water Bridge Authority indicated they would not tolerate any bridge closures/slowdowns on the Blue Water Bridge, citing public safety issues.

The Peace Bridge Authority (PBA) mentioned that they will treat any disruption in the same manner as they would deal with other events, such as the Niagara Marathon, Friendship Festival, etc. They noted the organizers will be applying to the PBA to conduct a "parade" across the Peace Bridge. The organizers have committed that they will not conduct a blockade of the bridge and will be entering into a written agreement with the PBA. The PBA will shut down the U.S bound curb lane for approximately an hour to accommodate the "parade". The other two lanes will remain open, one Canada-bound and one U.S.-bound. This event is scheduled to commence around 11:00 EST. It is anticipated that approximately 150-180 people will be participating. Participants will clear U.S. customs and then return to clear customs in Canada.

The OPP also advised it may be required to assist in Sarnia (rail blockade).

It was also discussed that social media indicated that Highway 403 at the Skyway may be impacted but this is unconfirmed.

Ongoing blockade in Sarnia

CN lawyers appeared in Ontario Superior Court in Toronto last week to have an earlier injunction, ordering an end to the blockade, extended for an indefinite period of time.

The Police Chief of the Sarnia Polices Services was ordered to appear in court on 02 Jan to justify his actions through the two injunctions. Superior Court Justice John Desotti indicated the Police Chief must find a means to enforce a court injunction issued on 21 Dec to end the blockade by FN protesters. Justice Desotti later adjourned court proceedings until 12:00 EST on 03 Jan. FN spokesperson Ron Plain agreed to work with protesters to end the blockade on 02 Jan. Of note, it was reported on 31 Dec that the Aamijwnaang Band Council does not support the rail blockade.

Assessment/Analysis: The GOC assesses that the court adjournment was likely initiated to provide time for all parties involved to find a peaceful resolution in order to avoid being found in contempt of Court when proceedings resume on 03 Jan.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional Products: Geomatics and other products will be attached to a follow-on message.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST122-12G

Incident: First Nations Protests

Date: Information valid as of 03 Jan 2013, 17:00 EST

Description of current incident: A number of First Nations (FN) Protests are occurring as a result of a grassroots campaign called "Idle No More" which is protesting Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, media/open source reporting.

Current actions: GOC is monitoring the situation and has established contact with key federal departments/agencies and PS Regional Offices in order to maintain cohesive information sharing.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

The rail blockade in Sarnia has been removed. CN Police will be escorting trains as a precaution over the next few days.

At this time, the GOC is aware of the following "Idle No More" related protest activities planned for 04 Jan 2013:

- ON: Commencing 14:00 EST 04 Jan and ending 11:00 EST on 06 Jan at Sioux Lookout. "Idle No More" Public Pow Wow.
- QC: 09:00 – 15:00 EST in Gaspésie. Protesters from the Gesgapegiag Band Council plan to distribute pamphlets along Highway 132.

An unconfirmed media report indicated 50 to 60 Assembly of First Nations (AFN) Chiefs have discussed plans to launch country-wide disruptions by the middle of January in support of Chief Spence. The date of 16 Jan was allegedly noted as a day to launch a campaign of indefinite economic disruptions, including railway and highway blockades. Of note, media reported that the Idle No More organizers issued a statement distancing the grassroots movement from potential actions by the Chiefs.

There is a media report that Assembly of First Nations (AFN) National Chief Atleo announced that FN leaders will meet on 24 Jan, the anniversary of the Crown-First Nations Gathering. An invitation to the Prime Minister and the Governor General was sent on 01 Jan.

Assessment/Analysis: The protests have been peaceful in nature. However, some protests have disrupted rail operations and resulted in delays on various highways.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional situation reports: Further situation reports will be issued as significant developments occur.

Additional Products: Geomatics and other products will be attached to a follow-on message.

Rapport de situation

Numéro de l'incident : ST122-12G

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 3 janvier 2013, à 17 h (HNE).

Description de l'incident : Diverses manifestations des Premières nations sont en train de se dérouler dans le cadre d'un mouvement populaire intitulé « Idle No More », qui critique le projet de loi omnibus C-45 du gouvernement portant sur le budget.

Sources des renseignements : Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada, les bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique Canada, et les médias/sources générales.

Mesures en cours : Le COG surveille la situation et est en communication avec certains des ministères et agences fédérales clés ainsi que les bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique Canada afin de maintenir un échange d'information cohérent.

La gestion des manifestations relève des autorités et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, le cas échéant.

La barricade à Sarnia a été enlevée. Par mesure de précaution, la Police du CN escortera les trains pendant les prochains jours.

À l'heure actuelle, selon les informations dont dispose le COG, les activités suivantes sont planifiées le 4 janvier 2013 :

- Ont. : De 14 h HNE le 4 janvier à 11 h HNE le 6 janvier, à Sioux Lookout. Pow-Wow public « Idle No More ».
- Québec : De 9 h à 15 h HNE, en Gaspésie. Des manifestants qui font partie du conseil de bande de Gesgapegiag comptent distribuer des brochures le long de l'autoroute 132.

Selon un reportage média non confirmé, de 50 à 60 chefs de l'Assemblée des Premières nations auraient discuté de la possibilité de lancer des mesures de perturbation à l'échelle du pays d'ici la mi-janvier en soutien à la Chef Spence. La date du 16 janvier aurait supposément été retenue pour lancer une campagne indéfinie de perturbations économiques, notamment au moyen de barricades sur des voies ferrées et des autoroutes. Il y a lieu de signaler que, selon les médias, les organisateurs du mouvement « Idle No More » ont publié un communiqué pour distancer le mouvement populaire des mesures potentielles que les Chefs pourraient prendre.

Des médias ont signalé que le chef national Atleo de l'Assemblée des Premières nations a annoncé la tenue d'une rencontre des chefs des Premières nations prévue pour le 24 janvier, soit à la date anniversaire du Rassemblement entre la Couronne et les Premières nations. Une invitation a été envoyée le 1er janvier au premier ministre et au gouverneur général.

Évaluation/analyse : Jusqu'à maintenant, les manifestations ont été pacifiques. Cependant, quelques manifestations ont causé l'interruption de services ferroviaires et des retards sur diverses routes.

Les ministères et les organismes qui ont plus de renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Autres rapports de situation : D'autres rapports de situation seront émis au fur et à mesure que des développements importants se produisent.

Autres produits : Des produits de géomatique ainsi que d'autres produits seront joints à des messages subséquents.

Région des Prairies
Emerson (Manitoba), heure inconnue : Manifestations possibles.

Région du Pacifique
Douglas (Peace Arch), à 14 h (HNE) : Manifestations pacifiques pour bloquer la frontière.
Poste Coho-Seattle, traversier de Victoria, terminal de Victoria (C.-B.), entre 17 h 30 et 20 h 30 (HNE) : Manifestations pacifiques et jeu d'os traditionnel à l'entrée et à la sortie du terminal au moment de l'arrivée (en après-midi) du traversier Coho de Port Angeles (Washington).
Rykerts-Porthill, entre 17 h et 19 h (HNE) : Rassemblement en guise de solidarité.

Il importe de souligner que des barrages pourraient être érigés sur des voies ferrées dans la région de Tyendinaga le 5 janvier. Ils auront des répercussions sur les chemins de fer VIA et CN.

Évaluation et analyse : L'ASFC précise que toutes les régions s'affairent à préparer des plans opérationnels. Le Centre des opérations frontalières a préparé des alertes à la frontière au cas où il serait nécessaire d'en diffuser au sujet de la fermeture d'un port.

Les ministères et les organismes qui détiennent d'autres renseignements sur cet incident sont priés d'en aviser le COG.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST122-12H

Incident: First Nations Protests

Date: Information valid as of 04 Jan 2013, 16:30 (HNE)

Description of current incident: A number of First Nations (FN) Protests are occurring as a result of a grassroots campaign called "Idle No More" which is protesting Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, ON Ministry of Transportation (MTO), New Brunswick Department of Public Safety, Transport Canada, Canada Border Services Agency, media/open source reporting.

Current actions: GOC is monitoring the situation and has established contact with key partners in order to maintain cohesive information sharing.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

On 04 Jan, the Prime Minister announced he will be meeting with a delegation of FN leaders, coordinated by the Assembly of First Nations (AFN), on 11 Jan. The meeting will include the AANDC Minister and focus on two areas: 1) the treaty relationship and aboriginal rights and 2) economic development. Media reporting indicates Chief Spence will take part in the meeting.

The protest activities are dynamic in nature and subject to change. At this time, the GOC is aware of the following "Idle No More" related protest activities planned for 05 Jan 2013.

Protest Events (Possible Disruptions)

Ontario

- 11:00 – 14:00 EST at Fort Erie. The Peace Bridge Border blockade will occur between 13:00 – 14:00 EST.
- 11:00 EST at Cornwall. Seaway International Bridge blockade.
- 11:00 – 12:00 EST at Sarnia. Blue Water Bridge blockade.
- 13:00 EST in the Hamilton area. Closure of Highway 403 at Main Street.
- Oshawa (Time unknown). Rally at Albert Street over Highway 401.
- Potential protest on the CN Rail Line through Tyendinaga in Eastern ON. Note: Via Rail issued a travel advisory regarding a potential blockade at Marysville.
- Pic River - Marathon (10:00 – 16:00 EST). Rail blockade on CP Railway line at Highway 627.

- Walpole Island Ferry (Time unknown): Protest

New Brunswick
- There is currently a blockade of the CN Rail line near Adamsville, Kent County. The blockade may continue for several days.
- A peaceful protest is taking place near, but not on, Highway 102 (the former TransCanada Highway) – near Kingsclear FN. No end time is indicated.
- Woodstock, NB. Houlton, Maine Border blockade (reportedly cancelled).

Saskatchewan
- 13:00 EST Peaceful Slow Down Barricade on the Trans-Canada Highway. (exact location not yet determined).

Alberta
- 08:00 – 09:00 EST in Hardisty. "Turn off the Taps! blockade at the Pipeline Terminal".

British Columbia
- Douglas Peace Arch 14:00 EST: Peaceful protest to "block the border".
- Rykerts / Porthill 17:00-19:00 EST: Solidarity gathering.
- Coho / Seattle - Victoria Clipper Ferry, Terminal – Victoria, BC 17:30 – 20:30 EST: Peaceful protest / traditional bone game to be played at the entrance / exit of the terminal to coincide with the afternoon arrival of the MV Coho ferry from Port Angeles, Washington.

Northwest Territories
- 12:00 – 13:00 EST at Fort Providence. Highway 3 blockade at the Deh Cho Bridge.

United States
- 11:00 – 12:00 EST at International Falls MN. "Idle No More Solidarity Round Dance International Falls, MN Border Crossing (at Fort Frances, ON).

Other Protest Events

Quebec
- Unknown time in Gaspésie. Protesters from the Gesgapegiag Band Council are planning a march.

- 17:00 – 18:00 EST at Orchard Park Shopping Centre, Kelowna. Flash Round Dance.

United States
- Presque Isle Mall, Maine (Time unknown). Flash mob drum circle event.

Assessment/Analysis: Although it may have a mitigating effect, it is unclear what implications the 11 Jan meeting between the Prime Minister and FN leaders, including Chief Spence, will have on planned protest activities. To note, some activities planned for 05 Jan have been cancelled as of 04 Jan.

The protests have been peaceful in nature. However, some protests have disrupted rail operations and resulted in delays on various highways.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Évaluation/analyse : Bien que la rencontre du 11 janvier entre le Premier ministre et des chefs des Premières Nations, dont la chef Spence, puisse avoir un effet d'atténuation, on ne sait pas quelles seront les implications pour les manifestations prévues. Certaines activités qui devaient avoir lieu le 5 janvier ont été annulées le 4 janvier.

Jusqu'à maintenant, les manifestations ont été pacifiques. Cependant, quelques manifestations ont causé l'interruption de services ferroviaires et des retards sur diverses routes.

Les ministères et les organismes qui ont plus de renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Autres rapports de situation : D'autres rapports de situation seront émis au fur et à mesure que des développements importants se produisent.

Autres produits : Des produits de géomatique ainsi que d'autres produits seront joints à des messages subséquents.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST122-12I

Incident: First Nations Protests

Date: Information valid as of 05 Jan 2013, 12:30 (EST)

Description of current incident: A number of First Nations (FN) Protests are occurring as a result of a grassroots campaign called "Idle No More" which is protesting Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, New Brunswick Department of Public Safety, Transport Canada, Canada Border Services Agency, media/open source reporting.

Current actions: GOC is monitoring the situation and has established contact with key partners in order to maintain cohesive information sharing.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

On 04 Jan, the Prime Minister announced he will be meeting with a delegation of FN leaders, coordinated by the Assembly of First Nations (AFN), on 11 Jan. The meeting will include the AANDC Minister and focus on two areas: 1) the treaty relationship and aboriginal rights and 2) economic development. Media reporting indicates Chief Spence will take part in the meeting.

The protest activities are dynamic in nature and subject to change. At this time, the GOC is aware of the following "Idle No More" related protest activities planned for 05 Jan 2013.

Rail Operations

As of 10:45 EST, CN and VIA Rail advise that operations are normal across Canada.

Ongoing Protest Events

Ontario

- 12:00 – 13:00 EST at Sarnia. Blue Water Bridge (BWB) blockade. As of 11:33 EST, the BWB Authority is holding traffic coming into Canada. Approximately 200 protesters are present. The Blue Water Bridge was closed as of 11:39 EST. At 11:46 EST, CBSA issued a Border Alert to advise that the Port of Entry (POE) is experiencing a service disruption and to expect possible delays.
- 13:00 - 14:00 EST at Fort Erie. Peace Bridge Border blockade. As of 11:33 EST, approximately 70 protesters are present in the vicinity of the Peace Bridge.
- 11:00 EST at Cornwall. Seaway International Bridge blockade. The Seaway International Bridge was closed at 10:30 EST: As of 11:50 EST, approximately 300 protesters had started to arrive at the Cornwall POE from the U.S. side; it is estimated protesters will have crossed by approximately 12:30. CBSA has issued a Border Alert to advise the POE is experiencing a service disruption and to expect possible delays.

- 13:00 EST in the Hamilton area. Closure of Highway 403 at Main Street.
- Oshawa (Time unknown). Rally at Albert Street over Highway 401.
- Potential protest on the CN Rail Line through Tyendinaga in Eastern ON. Note: Via Rail issued a travel advisory regarding a potential blockade at Marysville.
- Pic River - Marathon (10:00 – 16:00 EST). Rail blockade on CP Railway line at Highway 627.

Saskatchewan
- 13:00 EST Peaceful Slow Down Barricade on the Trans-Canada Highway. (exact location not yet determined).

British Columbia
- Douglas Peace Arch 14:00 EST: Peaceful protest to "block the border".
- Rykerts / Porthill 17:00-19:00 EST: Solidarity gathering.
- Coho / Seattle - Victoria Clipper Ferry, Terminal – Victoria, BC 17:30 – 20:30 EST: Peaceful protest / traditional bone game to be played at the entrance / exit of the terminal to coincide with the afternoon arrival of the MV Coho ferry from Port Angeles, Washington.
- 16:00 EST at the Kingsgate POE (south of Cranbrook). Potential protest.

Northwest Territories
- 16:00 – 18:00 EST at Fort Providence. Highway 3 blockade at the Deh Cho Bridge.

United States
- 14:00 EST at International Falls MN. "Idle No More Solidarity Round Dance International Falls, MN Border Crossing (at Fort Frances, ON). No attendees have been noted yet.

Concluded Protest Events

New Brunswick
- Blockade of the CN Rail line near Adamsville, Kent County.
- Protest near Highway 102 (the former TransCanada Highway) – near Kingsclear FN.
- Woodstock, NB. Houlton, Maine Border blockade (reportedly cancelled).

Ontario
- Walpole Island Ferry (Time unknown): Protest

Alberta
- 08:00 – 09:00 EST in Hardisty. "Turn off the Taps! blockade at the Pipeline Terminal".

Assessment/Analysis: Although it may have a mitigating effect, it is unclear what implications the 11 Jan meeting between the Prime Minister and FN leaders, including Chief Spence, will have on planned protest activities. To note, some activities planned for 05 Jan have been cancelled as of 04 Jan. However, media is reporting on 05 Jan that an organizer of the Idle No More rallies in Metro Vancouver advised that rallies will continue even though the Prime Minister has agreed to meet with FN leaders.

The protests have been peaceful in nature. However, some protests have disrupted rail operations and resulted in delays on various highways.

Rapport de situation

Numéro de l'incident : ST122-12I

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 5 janvier 2013, à 12 h 30 (HNE)

Description de l'incident : Diverses manifestations des Premières nations sont en train de se dérouler dans le cadre d'un mouvement populaire intitulé « Idle No More », qui critique le projet de loi omnibus C-45 du gouvernement portant sur le budget.

Sources des renseignements : Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada, les bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique Canada, le ministère de la Sécurité publique du Nouveau-Brunswick, Transports Canada, l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada et les médias/sources générales

Mesures en cours : Le COG surveille la situation et est en communication avec des partenaires afin de maintenir un échange d'information cohérent.

La gestion des manifestations relève des autorités et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, le cas échéant.

Le 4 janvier, le premier ministre a annoncé qu'il rencontrerait une délégation de chefs des Premières Nations le 11 janvier; l'Assemblée des Premières Nations (APN) va coordonner cette rencontre. La réunion, à laquelle participera le ministre des Affaires autochtones et du Nord canadien, portera sur deux sujets : 1) les relations découlant des traités et les droits autochtones, et 2) le développement économique. Les médias ont indiqué que la chef Spence participera à la rencontre.

Les activités associées aux manifestations sont dynamiques et peuvent changer à tout moment. À l'heure actuelle, selon les informations dont dispose le COG, les activités sont planifiées par le groupe « Idle No More » pour le 5 janvier 2013.

Mesures en cours : Le COG surveille la situation et est en communication avec des partenaires afin de maintenir un échange d'information cohérent.

La gestion des manifestations relève des autorités et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, le cas échéant.

Le 4 janvier, le premier ministre a annoncé qu'il rencontrerait une délégation de chefs des Premières Nations le 11 janvier; l'Assemblée des Premières Nations (APN) va coordonner cette rencontre. La réunion, à laquelle participera le ministre des Affaires autochtones et du Nord canadien, portera sur deux sujets : 1) les relations découlant des traités et les droits autochtones, et 2) le développement économique. Les médias ont indiqué que la chef Spence participera à la rencontre.

Les manifestations du 5 janvier étaient toutes pacifiques. Toutes les opérations frontalières ont repris normalement.

Manifestations en cours

Ontario

- Ligne ferroviaire de CN Rail à Tyendinaga, Est de l'Ontario. À 17 h 15 (HNE), TC a indiqué qu'un barrage a été érigé sur la voie ferrée près de Tyendinaga, perturbant les services ferroviaires et touchant environ 1200 passagers. Des plans sont en place pour utiliser des autobus. Via Rail a émis un avis aux voyageurs indiquant qu'on ne sait pas quand sera levé le barrage.

Manifestations ayant pris fin

Colombie-Britannique

- Douglas (Peace Arch). Fin du rassemblement pacifique à 18 h (HNE).
- Rykerts/Porthill. Rassemblement de solidarité terminé à 19 h (HNE).
- Coho/Seattle – Gare portuaire du traversier Victoria Clipper – Victoria (C.-B.). Manifestation terminée à 20 h 5 (HNE).
- Passage frontalier de Kingsgate (sud de Cranbrook). Manifestations terminées à 17 h 35 (HNE) (aucune incidence sur les opérations).

États-Unis

- Poste frontalier à International Falls (Fort Frances, Ontario). Manifestations terminées à 16 h 15 (HNE).

À l'heure actuelle, le COG ne sait pas si des manifestations dans le cadre du mouvement « Idle No More » sont prévues pour le 6 janvier 2013.

Évaluation/analyse : Bien que certaines activités du 5 janvier aient perturbé les opérations frontalières, les retards étaient relativement de courte durée. Le 5 janvier, à 17 h 15 (HNE), un barrage a été érigé à Tyendinaga, en Ontario, entraînant l'arrêt de la circulation ferroviaire. Pour le moment, on ne sait quand pas quand sera enlevé le barrage.

Les ministères et les organismes qui ont plus de renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Autres rapports de situation : D'autres rapports de situation seront émis au fur et à mesure que des développements importants se produisent.

Autres produits : Des produits de géomatique ainsi que d'autres produits seront joints à des messages subséquents.

Rapport de situation

Numéro de l'incident : ST122-12L FINAL

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations

Date : Renseignements mis à jour, le 6 janvier 2013, à 8 h (HNE)

Description de l'incident : Diverses manifestations des Premières nations sont en cours dans le cadre d'un mouvement populaire intitulé « Idle No More », qui critique le projet de loi omnibus C-45 du gouvernement portant sur le budget.

Sources des renseignements : Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada, les bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique Canada, Transports Canada, l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada et les médias/sources générales

Mesures en cours : Le COG surveille la situation et est en communication avec des partenaires afin de maintenir un échange d'information cohérent. La gestion des manifestations relève des autorités et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, le cas échéant.

Le 4 janvier, le premier ministre a annoncé qu'il rencontrerait une délégation de chefs des Premières Nations le 11 janvier; l'Assemblée des Premières Nations (APN) va coordonner cette rencontre. Les médias ont indiqué que la chef Spence participera à la rencontre.

Le 6 janvier 2013, à 00 h 02 (HNE), TC a signalé que le barrage érigé sur la voie ferrée CN Rail à Tyendinaga a été enlevé. Le 6 janvier, à 7 h 15 (HNE), TC a indiqué qu'un train de marchandises a traversé la région touchée sans incident. Le 6 janvier, Via Rail Canada a mis à jour son avis aux voyageurs pour indiquer que la voie ferrée n'est plus bloquée. Tous les services ferroviaires retourneront graduellement à la normale.

Évaluation/analyse : Les manifestations autochtones du 5 janvier étaient toutes pacifiques. Quelques opérations frontalières et services ferroviaires ont été perturbés pendant une courte période de temps, notamment le service de Via Rail Canada, ce qui a touché environ 1200 passagers.

Même si cela peut avoir un effet d'atténuation, on ne sait pas quelles sont les implications de la réunion du 11 janvier entre le Premier ministre et les chefs des Premières nation, dont le chef Spence, aura sur les activités de manifestations prévues.

Les ministères et les organismes qui ont plus de renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST122-12L FINAL

Incident: First Nations Protests

Date: Information valid as of 06 Jan 2013, 08:00 (EST)

Description of current incident: A number of First Nations (FN) Protests have occured as a result of a grassroots campaign called "Idle No More" which is protesting Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, Transport Canada, Canada Border Services Agency, media/open source reporting.

Current actions: GOC is monitoring the situation and has established contact with key partners in order to maintain cohesive information sharing. Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

On 04 Jan, the Prime Minister announced he will be meeting with a delegation of FN leaders, coordinated by the Assembly of First Nations (AFN), on 11 Jan. Media reporting indicates Chief Spence will take part in the meeting.

On 06 Jan at 00:02 EST, TC advised the FN rail blockade on the CN Rail Line through Tyendinaga was cleared. As of 07:15 EST on 06 Jan, TC reported that a CN freight train was able to travel through the affected area without incident. On 06 Jan, VIA Rail updated its travel advisory to indicate the FN rail blockade ended; all VIA services will gradually return to normal.

Assessment/Analysis: FN protest activities on 05 Jan were peaceful in nature. Some border operations and rail services were affected for a short period of time, including VIA service which affected approximately 1,200 passengers.

Although it may have a mitigating effect, it is unclear what implications the 11 Jan meeting between the Prime Minister and FN leaders, including Chief Spence, will have on planned protest activities.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional situation reports: This will be the last situation report on this event; however, the GOC will continue to monitor and report on FN protest activities in the GOC Daily Brief.

Additional Products: Nil.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST003-13A

Incident: First Nations Protests – National Day of Action

Date: Information valid as of 13 Jan 2013, 10:30 EST

Description of current incident: As part of the ongoing First Nations (FN) engagement, a number of FN protests are anticipated as part of a "National Day of Action" planned for 16 Jan 2013.

On 16 Jan, several demonstrations are expected in various locations across Canada. Media has reported that the protestors are seeking to cause an "economic slowdown" by organizing blockades at border crossings and on railway lines. Marches, demonstrations and other forms of peaceful protest have been scheduled by various organizations under the "Idle No More" banner in order to raise awareness of FN issues.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, media/open source reporting.

Current actions:

The GOC continues to monitor the situation closely and has established contact with key federal departments/agencies and PS Regional Offices in order to maintain cohesive information sharing.

A consolidated events matrix is being maintained by the GOC and will be distributed periodically, as information becomes available.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

Future actions: The GOC will also be hosting a conference call with partners on Monday 14 Jan 2013 to coordinate efforts and to assess impacts.

Assessment/Analysis: The national "Day of Action" planned for 16 Jan is expected to cause interruptions to passenger and freight trains, disruptions to traffic and potential delays at border crossings/ports of entry. Based on past events related to the "Idle No More" movement; demonstrations are expected to remain peaceful.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional situation reports: Further situation reports will be issued as more information becomes available.

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations – Journée nationale de protestation

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 13 janvier 2013, à 10 h 30 HNE

Description de l'incident : Dans le cadre de leur engagement en cours, les Premières nations ont organisé de nombreuses manifestations pour la Journée nationale de protestation, le 16 janvier 2013.

Le 16 janvier, diverses manifestations seront tenues dans plusieurs endroits du Canada. Selon les médias, les manifestants veulent causer un « ralentissement économique » en érigeant des barricades à des postes frontaliers et sur des voies ferrées. Des marches, des manifestations et d'autres types d'activités pacifiques de protestation ont également été prévues par des organisations du mouvement Idle No More afin de sensibiliser les gens aux enjeux avec lesquels les Premières nations doivent composer.

Source(s) des renseignements : Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada, bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique Canada (SP), médias et information de sources ouvertes.

Mesures en cours :

Le COG continue de suivre la situation de près, et il a communiqué avec les ministères et organismes clés du gouvernement fédéral et avec les bureaux régionaux de SP afin d'assurer le caractère uniforme de l'échange d'information.

Le COG tiendra à jour une matrice complète des incidents qu'il distribuera au besoin, à mesure que de nouveaux renseignements deviennent disponibles.

La gestion de l'incident relève des administrations et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, selon les besoins.

Mesures à venir : Le COG tiendra, lundi le 14 janvier 2013, une téléconférence des partenaires pour coordonner les efforts et évaluer les répercussions de ces incidents.

Analyse/évaluation : La journée nationale de protestation prévue pour le 16 janvier devrait entraîner des perturbations quant aux déplacements de trains passagers et de marchandises, des perturbations du trafic et des retards potentiels aux postes frontaliers et aux points d'entrée. Par contre, si l'on se fie aux activités précédentes qu'a organisées le mouvement Idle No More, les manifestations devraient rester de nature pacifique.

Les ministères et les organismes qui ont plus de renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Description of current incident: As part of the ongoing First Nations (FN) engagement, a number of FN protests are anticipated as part of a "National Day of Action" planned for 16 Jan 2013.

At this time, partners have identified one protest that is likely to have an impact. On 16 Jan 2013, protesters plan to slow down traffic at the primary entrance to the Ambassador Bridge, connecting Windsor ON with Detroit MI (USA), for approximately one hour between 12:00 EST and 13:00 EST.

In addition, there is potential for other protests across the country. Please refer to attached matrix for a list of known events by province.

Marches and demonstrations are expected to remain peaceful.

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations – Journée nationale de mobilisation

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 15 janvier 2013, à 12 h 30 (HNE)

Description de l'incident : Dans le cadre de leur mobilisation en cours, les Premières nations ont organisé un certain nombre de manifestations pour la Journée nationale de mobilisation devant se tenir le 16 janvier 2013.

Pour l'instant, les partenaires ont relevé une manifestation qui pourrait avoir des répercussions. Le 16 janvier 2013, les manifestants prévoient ralentir la circulation à l'entrée principale du pont Ambassador reliant Windsor (Ontario) et Détroit (Michigan aux États-Unis) pendant environ une heure entre 12 h et 13 h (HNE).

De plus, d'autres manifestations pourraient se dérouler un peu partout au pays. Veuillez consulter la matrice ci-jointe pour avoir une liste des évènements connus par province.

Les marches et les démonstrations devraient demeurer pacifiques.

Mesures en cours

Le COG continue de surveiller et d'analyser la situation de près; il a communiqué avec les principaux ministères et organismes ainsi qu'avec les bureaux régionaux de SP en vue d'assurer un échange d'information homogène et de cibler les répercussions potentielles.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST003-13E

Incident: First Nations Protests – National Day of Action

Date: Information valid as of 16 Jan 2013, 18:30 EST

Description of current incident: On 16 Jan 2013, a number of peaceful FN protests took place across the country as part of the "National Day of Action".

In Manitoba, at approximately 13:00 EST, protesters in Portage la Prairie established two blockades on CN and CP railway lines. The blockade of the CN rail lines, by approximately 20 protesters, has resulted in the stoppage freight traffic, causing the back-up of train traffic throughout Manitoba. CN has obtained a court injunction against the blockade and has ordered protesters to leave. As of 18:30 EST, protesters remain on-site. The blockade of the CP rail line, by approximately 6 protesters, lasted less than an hour and ended with minimal disruptions to rail traffic.

In Ontario, at approximately 14:00 EST, several protesters from Tyendinaga FN established blockades on the main CP and CP railway lines east of Belleville ON, including the CN line used by VIA Rail. These blockades have resulted in delays to freight and passenger train traffic. VIA Rail estimates that the blockades will affect between 10 to 20 trains travelling between Toronto-Montréal and Toronto-Ottawa. VIA Rail has begun making alternate arrangements for its passengers. As of 18:30 EST, the blockades remain in effect.

Beginning at approximately 11:00 EST, a peaceful protest at the main entrance of the Ambassador Bridge (Windsor) took place. The protest, which ended at approximately 14:00 EST, blocked the main truck artery onto the bridge, causing delays of approximately 2 hours to outbound traffic. United States-bound traffic at the Rainbow Bridge in Niagara Falls, ON was also momentarily blocked as protesters performed a ceremonial Round Dance in front of the bridge's entrance.

In British Columbia, at approximately 15:30 EST, approximately 45 FN protesters have blocked the CN main rail line by Kitwanga, between Prince George and Prince Rupert. As of 18:30 EST, the blockade remains active and has resulted in the delay of one VIA Rail train.

A number of other blockades and slowdowns, in addition to other protests, took place across the country without incident and with minimal impacts.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, Canada Border Services Agency, Transport Canada, media/open source reporting.

Current actions:

The GOC continues to monitor and analyze the situation and has established contact with key federal departments/agencies and PS Regional Offices in order to maintain cohesive information sharing and to identify potential impacts.

A consolidated events matrix is being maintained by the GOC and will be distributed periodically, as information becomes available.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

Future actions: The GOC will continue to work with federal and provincial partners to coordinate efforts and to assess impacts.

Assessment/Analysis: Ongoing rail blockades, particularly those in Ontario and, Manitoba are affecting economically important rail corridors and, if they continue for prolonged periods, have the potential to result in significant economic losses.

Thus far, impacts from other protests have included interruptions to passenger and freight trains, disruptions to road traffic, and delays at border crossings/ports of entry, including significant delays at the Ambassador Bridge, Canada's busiest border crossing. To date, all protests have been peaceful.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional situation reports: Further situation reports will be issued as more information becomes available.

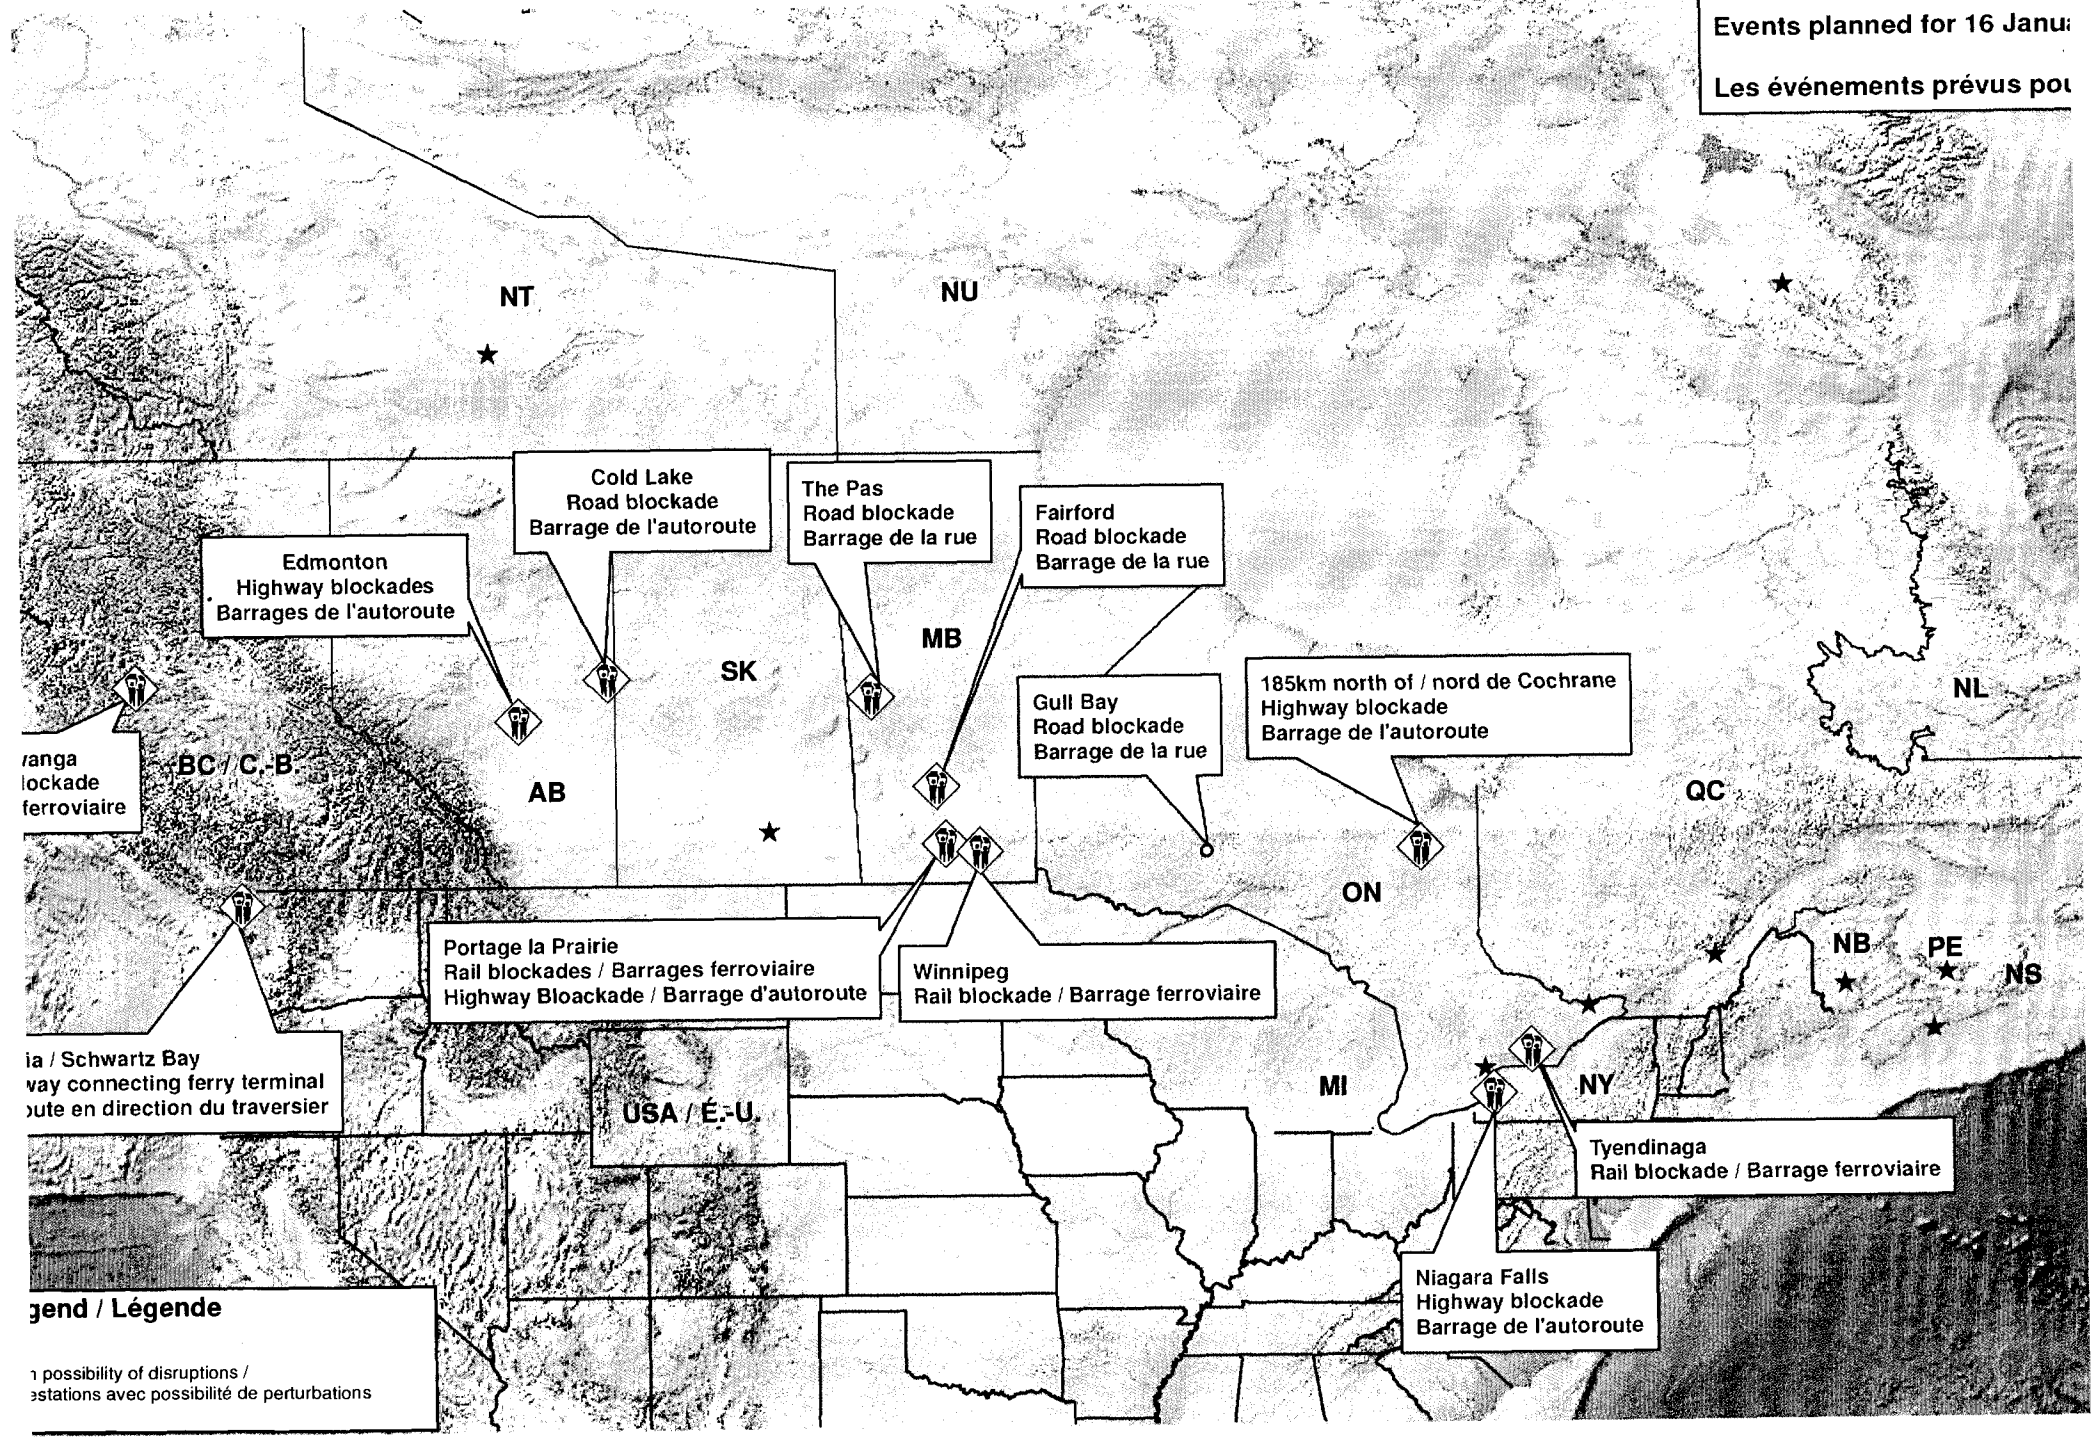

Additional Products: A geomatics product will be attached to this message.

Rapport de situation

Numéro d'incident : ST003-13E

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations – Journée nationale de mobilisation

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 16 janvier 2013, à 18 h 30 (HNE)

Description de l'incident : Le 16 janvier 2013, les Premières nations ont organisé un certain nombre de manifestations pacifiques un peu partout au pays dans le cadre de la Journée nationale de mobilisation.

An Manitoba, vers 13 h (HNE), des manifestants ont érigé des barrages sur les voies ferrées de CN et de CP à Portage la Prairie. Le blocage des voies du CN, par environ 20 manifestants, a interrompu le trafic des marchandises et entraîné des bouchons ferroviaires dans tout le Manitoba. CN a obtenu une injonction judiciaire exigeant la levée du barrage et a ordonné aux manifestants de quitter les lieux. À 18 h 30 (HNE), les manifestants étaient toujours sur place. Le blocage de la voie de CP, par environ six manifestants, a duré moins d'une heure et s'est terminé sans avoir fortement perturbé le trafic ferroviaire.

En Ontario, vers 14 h (HNE), plusieurs manifestants de la Première Nation de Tyendinaga ont érigé des barrages sur les voies ferrées principales de CP et CN à l'est de Belleville (Ontario), y compris la voie de CN utilisée par VIA Rail. Ces barrages ont retardé le trafic ferroviaire de marchandises et de passagers. VIA Rail estime que les barrages auront des répercussions pour des trains, entre 10 et 20, qui font la liaison entre Toronto et Montréal et Toronto et Ottawa. VIA Rail a pris des mesures pour proposer à ses passagers d'autres arrangements. À 18 h 30 (HNE), les barrages étaient toujours en place.

Il y a eu à partir de 11 h (HNE), une manifestation pacifique à l'entrée principale du pont Ambassador (Windsor). La manifestation, qui a pris fin vers 14 h (HNE), a bloqué la principale voie d'accès au pont utilisée par les camions et entraîné des retards d'environ deux heures pour la circulation sortant du pays. Au pont Rainbow, à Niagara Falls (Ontario), la circulation à destination des États-Unis a aussi été temporairement arrêtée pendant que les manifestants effectuaient une ronde cérémoniale devant l'entrée du pont.

En Colombie-Britannique, vers 15 h 30 (HNE), environ 45 manifestants des Premières Nations ont bloqué la ligne ferroviaire principale de CN près de Kitwanga, entre Prince George et Prince Rupert. À 18 h 30 (HNE), le barrage était toujours en place et il avait retardé un train de VIA Rail.

Il y a eu d'autres barrages et ralentissements, en plus d'autres manifestations, dans tout le Canada sans incident; ils ont eu des répercussions minimales.

Mesures en cours

Le COG continue de surveiller et d'analyser la situation de près; il a communiqué avec les principaux ministères et organismes ainsi qu'avec les bureaux régionaux de SP en vue d'assurer un échange d'information homogène et de recenser les répercussions possibles.

Le COG tient à jour une matrice des évènements et diffusera cette dernière périodiquement, au fur et à mesure qu'il obtient de l'information.

La gestion de l'incident relève des administrations et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, selon le cas.

Mesures à venir : Le COG continuera de collaborer avec ses partenaires fédéraux et provinciaux pour coordonner les efforts et d'évaluer les répercussions.

Analyse/évaluation : Le blocage en cours des voies ferrées, en particulier en Ontario et au Manitoba, visent des lignes ferroviaires d'importance économique et, s'il se poursuit pendant longtemps, il pourrait causer des pertes économiques considérables.

Jusqu'à présent, les répercussions des autres manifestations ont été des perturbations des trains de passagers et de marchandises, des perturbations du trafic routier, et des retards aux postes frontières, y compris des retards importants au pont Ambassador, le passage frontalier le plus utilisé au Canada. Pour le moment, toutes les manifestations se sont déroulées dans le calme.

Les ministères et les organismes qui ont plus de renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Autres rapports de situation : D'autres rapports de situation seront diffusés à mesure que l'on recevra d'autres renseignements.

Autres produits : Une matrice des évènements sera envoyée sous pli séparé.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST003-13D

Incident: First Nations Protests – National Day of Action

Date: Information valid as of 16 Jan 2013, 12:30 EST

Description of current incident: As of 12:30 EST, 16 Jan 2013, a number of peaceful FN protests are underway across the country as part of the "National Day of Action".

As of 12:30 EST, 16 Jan 2013, a peaceful protest is underway at the main entrance of the Ambassador Bridge (Windsor ON), blocking the main truck artery onto the bridge and causing delays to outbound traffic. As of 12:30 EST, border queues extend to approximately 3 km. The protest is scheduled to last until 14:00 EST, at which time protesters are expected to disperse.

Other ports of entry potentially affected by protests, at least temporarily, on 16 Jan 2013 include the Sault Ste. Marie International Bridge and the Three Nations Crossing Bridge in Cornwall ON.

Other road and rail blockades also have the potential to impact Critical Infrastructure. Protesters in Portage la Prairie plan to blockade CN and CP railway lines, as well as the Trans-Canada Highway. Moreover, media is also reporting that protesters from Tyendinaga FN are also planning to shut down CN and CP railway lines at 13:00 EST.

There are a number of other rail and road blockades and slowdowns, in addition to other protests across the country. All are expected to remain peaceful.

Please refer to attached matrix for a list of known protest events by province.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, Canada Border Services Agency, Transport Canada, media/open source reporting.

Current actions:

The GOC continues to monitor and analyze the situation and has established contact with key federal departments/agencies and PS Regional Offices in order to maintain cohesive information sharing and to identify potential impacts.

A consolidated events matrix is being maintained by the GOC and will be distributed periodically, as information becomes available.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

Future actions: The GOC will continue to work with federal and provincial partners to coordinate efforts and to assess impacts.

Assessment/Analysis: The ongoing impacts are likely to include interruptions to passenger and freight trains, disruptions to road traffic and potential delays at border crossings/ports of entry. The severity of these impacts will be determined primarily by the duration of the planned road, rail and border blockades, particularly those of CN and CP main lines, which at the moment have an indefinite end time. Based on past events and recent FN protests; demonstrations are expected to remain peaceful.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional situation reports: Further situation reports will be issued as more information becomes available.

Additional Products: An events matrix and geomatics product will be attached to this message.

Rapport de situation

Numéro d'incident : ST003-13D

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations – Journée nationale de mobilisation

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 16 janvier 2013, à 12 h 30 (HNE)

Description de l'incident : À 12 h 30 (HNE), le 16 janvier 2013, les Premières nations procèdent à un certain nombre de manifestations pacifiques un peu partout au pays dans le cadre de la Journée nationale de mobilisation.

À 12 h 30 (HNE), le 16 janvier 2013, une manifestation pacifique est en cours à l'entrée principale du pont Ambassador (Windsor, Ontario), bloquant la principale voie d'accès au pont utilisée par les camions et entraînant des retards dans la circulation sortant du pays. À 12 h 30 (HNE), les files d'attente à la frontière s'étendaient sur une distance d'environ trois kilomètres. La manifestation devrait se terminer à 14 h (HNE); à ce moment, les manifestants devraient se disperser.

Parmi les autres points d'entrée qui pourraient être touchés par les manifestations le 16 janvier 2013, à tout le moins temporairement, notons : le pont international de Sault Ste. Marie et le pont des Trois nations de Cornwall (Ontario).

D'autres blocus de routes et de voies ferrées peuvent aussi avoir des répercussions sur les infrastructures essentielles. Les manifestants à Portage la Prairie envisagent de bloquer les voies ferrées du CN et du CP, ainsi que la Transcanadienne. Selon les médias, les manifestants de la Première nation Tyendinaga planifient aussi de fermer les voies ferrées du CN et du CP à 13 h (HNE).

Il y a un certain nombre d'autres blocus de voies ferrées et de routes ainsi que des ralentissements en plus de la tenue d'autres manifestations un peu partout au pays. Tous ces évènements devraient demeurer pacifiques.

Veuillez consulter la matrice ci-jointe pour avoir une liste des évènements connus par province.

Mesures en cours

Le COG continue de surveiller et d'analyser la situation de près; il a communiqué avec les principaux ministères et organismes ainsi qu'avec les bureaux régionaux de SP en vue d'assurer un échange d'information homogène et de cibler les répercussions potentielles.

Le COG tient à jour une matrice des évènements et diffusera cette dernière périodiquement, au fur et à mesure que l'information est disponible.

La gestion de l'incident relève des administrations et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, selon les besoins.

Mesures à venir : Le COG continuera de collaborer avec ses partenaires fédéraux et provinciaux pour coordonner les efforts et d'évaluer les répercussions.

Analyse/évaluation : Parmi les répercussions des évènements en cours, il y aura probablement des perturbations du déplacement des trains de passagers et de marchandises, des perturbations de la circulation routière et des retards possibles aux postes frontaliers et aux points d'entrée. La gravité de ces répercussions sera principalement déterminée par la durée des blocus de routes, de voies ferrées et de postes frontaliers, notamment les principales voies ferrées du CN et du CP, dont la durée pour l'instant demeure indéfinie. Si on se fie aux manifestations antérieures et récentes organisées par les Premières nations, les manifestations devraient demeurer de nature pacifique.

Autres rapports de situation : D'autres rapports de situation seront diffusés à mesure que d'autres renseignements deviennent disponibles.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST003-13F FINAL

Incident: First Nations Protests – National Day of Action

Date: Information valid as of 17 Jan 2013, 15:00 EST

Description of current incident: On 16 Jan 2013, a number of peaceful FN protests took place across the country as part of the "National Day of Action".

In Ontario, a peaceful protest at the main entrance of the Ambassador Bridge (Windsor) took place between approximately 11:00 EST and 15:00 EST. The protest blocked the main truck artery onto the bridge, causing delays of about 2 hours to outbound traffic. United States-bound traffic at the Rainbow Bridge in Niagara Falls, ON was also momentarily blocked as protesters performed a ceremonial Round Dance in front of the bridge's entrance.

At approximately 14:00 EST, several protesters from Tyendinaga FN established blockades on the main CP and CP railway lines east of Belleville ON, including the CN line used by VIA Rail. These blockades, which lasted until approximately 19:00 EST, resulted in delays to freight and passenger train traffic.

In Manitoba, at approximately 13:00 EST, protesters in Portage la Prairie established two blockades on CN and CP railway lines. The blockade of the CN rail lines, by approximately 20 protesters, has resulted in the stoppage freight traffic, causing the back-up of train traffic throughout Manitoba. The CN rail blockade was lifted at approximately 22:00 EST. The blockade of the CP rail line, by approximately 6 protesters, lasted less than an hour and ended with minimal disruptions to rail traffic.

In British Columbia, at approximately 15:30 EST, about 45 FN protesters blocked the CN main rail line by Kitwanga, between Prince George and Prince Rupert. The blockade, which resulted in the delay of one VIA Rail train, was lifted at approximately 21:00 EST.

A number of other blockades and slowdowns, in addition to other protests, took place across the country without incident and with minimal impacts.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, Canada Border Services Agency, Transport Canada, media/open source reporting.

Current actions:

The GOC continues to monitor and analyze the situation and has established contact with key federal departments/agencies and PS Regional Offices in order to maintain cohesive information sharing and to identify potential impacts.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

Future actions: The GOC will continue to work with federal and provincial partners to coordinate efforts and to assess the impact of upcoming protests.

A consolidated events matrix will continue to be maintained by the GOC and will be distributed daily, or as required.

Departments and Agencies with further information on other upcoming FN protest activities are asked to continue reporting to the GOC.

The next event of significance is expected to be the 28 Jan 2013 "Idle No More International Call-to-Action."

Assessment/Analysis: Impact from "National Day of Action" related protests include interruptions to passenger and freight trains, temporary disruptions to road traffic, and delays at border crossings/ports of entry, including significant delays at the Ambassador Bridge, Canada's busiest border crossing. To date, all protests have been peaceful.

Additional situation reports: This will be the last situation report on this specific event; however, the GOC will continue to monitor and report on FN protest activities in the GOC Daily Operations Brief.

Numéro d'incident : ST003-13F FINAL

Incident : Manifestations des Premières nations – Journée nationale de protestation

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 17 janvier 2013, à 15 h (HNE)

Description de l'incident : Le 16 janvier 2013, les Premières nations ont organisé un certain nombre de manifestations pacifiques un peu partout au pays dans le cadre de la Journée nationale de mobilisation.

En Ontario, entre 11 h et 15 h (HNE) environ, une manifestation pacifique a eu lieu à l'entrée principale du pont Ambassador (Windsor). La manifestation a bloqué la principale voie d'accès au pont utilisée par les camions et a entraîné des retards d'environ deux heures pour la circulation sortant du pays. Au pont Rainbow, à Niagara Falls (Ontario), la circulation à destination des États-Unis a aussi été temporairement arrêtée pendant que les manifestants effectuaient une ronde cérémoniale devant l'entrée du pont.

Vers 14 h (HNE), plusieurs manifestants de la Première Nation de Tyendinaga ont érigé des barrages sur les voies ferrées principales de CP et de CN à l'est de Belleville (Ontario), y compris la voie de CN utilisée par VIA Rail. Ces barrages, qui ont pris fin autour de 19 h (HNE), ont retardé le trafic ferroviaire de marchandises et de passagers.

Au Manitoba, vers 13 h (HNE), des manifestants ont érigé des barrages sur les voies ferrées de CN et de CP à Portage la Prairie. Le blocage des voies de CN, par environ 20 manifestants, a interrompu le trafic des marchandises et a entraîné des bouchons ferroviaires dans tout le Manitoba. La levée du barrage de CN a eu lieu vers 22 h (HNE). Le blocage de la voie de CP, par environ six manifestants, a duré moins d'une heure et s'est terminé sans avoir fortement perturbé le trafic ferroviaire.

En Colombie-Britannique, vers 15 h 30 (HNE), environ 45 manifestants des Premières Nations ont bloqué la ligne ferroviaire principale de CN près de Kitwanga, entre Prince George et Prince Rupert. Le barrage, qui a retardé un train de VIA Rail, a été levé autour de 21 h (HNE).

Il y a eu, dans l'ensemble du pays, d'autres barrages et ralentissements, en plus d'autres manifestations, sans incident; ils ont eu des répercussions minimales.

Le COG continuera de tenir à jour une matrice des évènements et la diffusera quotidiennement, ou au besoin.

Les ministères et organismes qui détiennent des renseignements sur les prochaines manifestations des PN sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Le prochain événement d'importance est prévu le 28 janvier 2013. Il s'agit d'un appel à l'action lancé à l'échelle internationale par le mouvement « Idle No More ».

Analyse/évaluation : Parmi les répercussions des manifestations associées à la journée nationale de mobilisation figurent la perturbation de trains de passagers et de marchandises, la perturbation temporaire du trafic routier et des retards aux postes frontaliers, y compris des retards importants au pont Ambassador, le passage frontalier le plus utilisé au Canada. Pour le moment, toutes les manifestations se sont déroulées dans le calme.

Autres rapports de situation : Il s'agit du dernier rapport de situation à propos de cet incident précis; toutefois, le COG continuera de surveiller la situation et de rendre compte des manifestations des Premières nations dans son rapport quotidien des opérations.
