National Aboriginal Demonstrations and Protests

Framework for Defining the RCMP's Coordinated National Response.

Objectives

This document proposes to establish a framework on how RCMP Contract and Aboriginal Policing Directorate (CAP) will manage the coordinated response and its activities in responding to events related to the current national aboriginal demonstrations and protests (NADP).

Background

In October 2012, the Government of Canada introduced Bill C-45 "A Second Act to Implement Certain Provisions of the Budget Tabled in Parliament and Other Measures". The bill received royal assent on December 14, 2012.

Since the introduction of this legislation, First Nations leaders have expressed concern with proposed changes to the Indian Act in Bill C-45 and an alleged lack of consultation by the federal government prior to the bill's introduction.

In response to the impending ratification of Bill C-45, First Nations activists in western Canada under the banner of 'Idle No More' used social networking websites to call for a series of demonstrations to occur across Canada on December 10, 2012. This only resulted in small, localized protests in various areas across the country and failed to gain a substantial turnout consistent with a "national day of action."

On December 11, 2012, Attawapiskat First Nation Chief Theresa Spence began a hunger strike on Victoria Island in Ottawa to draw attention the Bill C-45's impact on First Nations communities. Her hunger strike continues.

Despite the recent passage of Bill C-45, a series of nation-wide, peaceful demonstrations occurred on December 21, 2012 and also on January 9 and January 16, 2013. To date over 400 Aboriginal based protests have been identified.

Idle No More (INM) organizers continue to advocate peaceful protest and have recently distanced themselves from Chief Spence. Furthermore, Chief Spence has garnered support from the regional AFN Chiefs from Manitoba, Ontario, and the NWT. These Chiefs have recently voiced support for total blockages of some transportation routes. There appears to be growing divergence between factions between the groups.

INM is now calling for a World Day of Action on January 28, 2013 to coincide with MP's return to the House of Commons. It is important to note that there is no indication that planned protests will be extremist in nature and there is currently no overt threat to critical infrastructure.

Role of CAP

1. Provide national guiding principles on how RCMP deals with situations and events surrounding national aboriginal demonstrations and protests (NADP).
2. Provided a link with operations and adjust the response accordingly.
3. Provide RCMP Senior Management with Situational .
4. Ensure the development and renewal of a national communication plan.
5. Support CROPS with consistent messaging, sharing of information, etc.
6. Provide direction/guidance to CROPS with respect to reporting information.
7. Liaison with AFN Executive (NAPS).
8. Provide strategic awareness to Government.
9. Indentify key roles
    - D.G. NAPS – Incident Director

Partnerships

CAP will require the support of services offered by other RCMP business lines in order to be effective for each of the response options described at the various levels. Such services may include Intelligence Gathering, TRA, and Communications.

MURDERED AND MISSING ABORIGINAL WOMEN

ISSUE: To provide an update on the issue of murdered and missing Aboriginal women and girls which has garnered significant national interest from the media, the public and special interest groups.

BACKGROUND: There is continued public debate about missing and murdered Aboriginal women cases, including calls from the Assembly of First Nations (AFN), the Native Women's Association of Canada (NWAC) and international UN bodies for a national public inquiry on the subject. Recent public reports by the Oppal Commission of Inquiry in British Columbia and the Human Rights Watch (HRW) have highlighted the disproportionate victimization of Aboriginal women and perceived police inaction.

CURRENT STATUS:
The RCMP has completed a comprehensive file review of all incidents of murdered and missing Aboriginal women and girls occurring within RCMP jurisdiction and will remain vigilant in our efforts to resolve all outstanding cases. The number of cases reviewed includes 90 missing persons cases and 327 homicide investigations involving Aboriginal women occurring within RCMP jurisdiction.

On February 13, 2013, HRW, an international human rights monitoring and advocacy organization, released a report that examined the relationship between police and indigenous women and girls in British Columbia. The report raised concerns about the treatment of indigenous women and girls by the RCMP in northern British Columbia alleging long-standing abuse by RCMP police personnel. In the report, the adequacy of RCMP policies and existing complaint and oversight mechanisms relative to the protection for the human rights of indigenous women and girls are questioned. HRW has declined to release the identity of the alleged victims to RCMP. The Commission for Public Complaints Against the RCMP (CPC) has initiated a public interest investigation into the HRW allegations; the RCMP is engaged with the CPC and fully supportive of this independent external investigative process.

In February 2013, the House of Commons established a Special Parliamentary Committee with the mandate to "conduct hearings on the critical matter of missing and murdered indigenous women and girls in Canada and propose solutions to address the root causes of violence against indigenous women." RCMP representatives have appeared before this committee on June 13, 2013 and anticipate future appearances.

Simultaneous to the work of the Special Parliamentary Committee and the CPC public interest investigation, there are three separate United Nations entities scheduled to visit Canada in the fall of 2013.

- Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW)
- Inter-American Commission for Human Rights (IACHR)
- Special Rapporteur on the rights of Indigenous people – Prof. James Anaya

The delegations will be investigating human rights concerns affecting Aboriginal peoples in such areas as, environmental protections, equitable access to education, health care, safe drinking water, safety and security and the concerns surrounding disproportionate numbers of murdered and missing Aboriginal women. The Department of Foreign Affairs, Trade and Development (DFATD) has been identified as the lead for these visits.

The Office of the Auditor General of Canada is also engaged in an audit entitled "Emergency management on reserves". While the parameters of the inquiry have yet to be fully defined, policing on reserves is anticipated to be included as part of the audit.

Over the past 12 months Aboriginal protests and demonstrations have increased. This surge in activity coincides with the emergence of the 'Idle No More' (INM) movement in November 2012, as a reaction to perceived abuses of indigenous treaty rights by the Government of Canada, in particular Bill C-45 (Jobs and Growth Act, 2012).

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:

- Aboriginal protest activities, relative to a myriad of social and environmental concerns, have persisted throughout the year and may be stimulated depending on the outcome of the CPC investigation and the UN visits to Canada.

- The RCMP is a participant in the DFATD lead working group that is planning and coordinating the UN visits. The RCMP will be a contributor throughout the UN visits highlighting RCMP programs and investigative best practices specific to the safety and security of Aboriginal peoples.

BRIEFING NOTE TO THE COMMISSIONER / NOTE D'INFORMATION AU COMMISSAIRE

COMMISSIONER'S VISIT TO "M" DIVISION - JULY 11-14, 2013

ISSUE:

- To provide briefing information for the Commissioner for his upcoming visit to the Yukon on July 11th to the 14th, 2013.

BACKGROUND:

- Briefing material requested for issues in "M" Division with special attention to aboriginal communities and relationships with the RCMP.

- Following the in custody death of Raymond Silverfox in 2008, relations with First Nation Leadership and Communities were becoming strained. The newly elected Grand Chief of the Council of Yukon First Nations (CYFN) wrote a very strongly worded letter to the Commanding Officer that was highly critical of the RCMP. The in custody death, and a high profile criminal investigation into two members conduct in Watson Lake led to the Minister of Justice calling for a Police Review.

- The result of the Police Review was the "Sharing Common Ground" Report. This report contained a number of recommendations for improved police services including many that dealt directly with improving First Nation relationships.

  "M" Division has successfully responded to these recommendations, including:

  Increased collaboration with First Nation Leadership and Communities on the identification of First Nation priorities.

  First Nations are being consulted with on all transfers in and out of the Communities, and First Nations involved along with other community leaders in selecting of new Detachment Commanders.

  The Commanding Officer and Senior Officers in the Division are meeting regularly with First Nations leaders and these leaders are being kept informed on any significant incident that involves First Nations citizens. The Commanding Officer's First Nations Advisory Committee has been reviewed and refreshed.

Approved by – Approuvé par C/Supt. Peter Clark Commanding Officer "M" Division	Date 13-07-03

First Nations Policing Coordinator is in regular contact with First Nation Leadership on issues of concern.

"M' Division has signed a tri-lateral MOU with Yukon Department of Justice and the Alberta Government for utilizing the civilian led Alberta Serious Incident Response Team for the investigation of any serious incidents in the Yukon involving RCMP members.

- Yukon First Nations that have settled land claims progressing toward enforcing their own laws on settled land. Some of these communities are starting to write their own laws, looking at enforcement activities, particularly environment/conservation enforcement on First Nation land. Some communities are much further along than others. Teslin has been negotiating with the Federal and Territorial Government for a number of years, have a number of laws passed, starting to build capacity that will lead to enforcing own laws. Looking to partner with Yukon Government for courts, jails, etc.

CURRENT STATUS:

- Currently "M" Division is enjoying good relationships with First Nation Communities and Leadership. Detachment Line Officers are reporting no concerns being brought forward from Communities.

Overview of key files, problematic issues, successes, ongoing cooperative efforts:

- Missing Aboriginal male from Mayo was reported on 2013-06-17.

  Mayo RCMP along with a number of Division RCMP resources, community partners, and neighboring communities were involved in the search. The search was coordinated along with local First Nation Leadership. Search command was set up within the Band office, First Nation equipment and resources were utilized throughout the search. First Nation provided food for all the searchers including the RCMP throughout the search.

  The First Nation was appreciative of the close working relationship that was utilized during this search. This search is a good example of a collaborative approach being taken with community partners.

- Level of Street Crime in Whitehorse. Concerns had been raised by Department of Justice officials and the local media over the past year on the level of street crime in Whitehorse.

  "M" Division responded by forming a Street Crew Reduction Team. This team has been successful in making numerous arrests, including a number of drug busts that have alleviated some of the concern and has garnered positive local media attention.

- Idle no more protests. In conjunction with the January 11th, 2013 meeting between the Prime Minister and Aboriginal Leaders, several rallies and protests occurred within the Yukon.

  Direct communication was established between members, INM organizers and Yukon First Nations leadership.

  On January 11th, 2013 peaceful rallies were held in Whitehorse, Haines Junction, Beaver Creek and Dawson City with no serious incidents reported.

  M Division continues to monitor open source communication and maintain dialogue with Yukon INM organizers.

- Liard Aboriginal Women's Society (LAWS). LAWS, and other women's groups and the RCMP began two years of workshops together. Sessions focused on the justice system, policing, culture, historical colonialism, residential schools and how society responds to women who experience violence. Through this work they came to share a common understanding of the past and develop a common vision for the future.

  The result of this work is the "Together for Justice" protocol between the RCMP and the Liard Aboriginal Women's Society. The Protocol gives both parties an ongoing commitment to maintain and build a relationship and details how they will work together to build community safety and treat clients with dignity.

- Cop Watch Whitehorse. Local woman trying to start a Cop Watch group of volunteers to record police misconduct, similar to the group that she started in Vancouver's downtown east side.

  Community members have been speaking up against the need for a Cop Watch group.

  The Coordinator of the Yukon's Status of Women Council has given an interview to the media regarding the Cop Watch group she stated that a cameras-in-cops-faces approach would not be helpful here. During the interview she states that "it is not the same antagonistic or misunderstood kind of relationship that it was. There's a lot more communication. We're working together with the RCMP on a number of fronts."

- Northern B.C. Human Rights watch report. The Human Rights report that alleges aboriginal women and girls in northern B.C. have been abused and assaulted by the RCMP was reported on in the Yukon.

  CBC radio conducted an interview with the President of the Yukon Aboriginal Women's Council regarding the Human Rights report. The President during the interview stated that they have an excellent working relationship with the RCMP.

- First Nation leaders from across Canada will gather in Whitehorse on July 16th – 18th, 2013 for the Assembly of First Nations 34th Annual General Assembly.

RCMP KEY COMMUNICATIONS ISSUES

Beyond the Border Vision

Several of the initiatives have implications for the RCMP, notably Shiprider, which continues to be the subject of regular media inquiries.

Gender and Respect within the RCMP

In response to the Gender Based Assessment of November 2012, the RCMP authored an action plan focusing on the culture and composition of the Force. A group of employees has also launched a class action suit. Implementation of C-42 and the changes to the benefits as a result of DRAP will continue to generate media coverage.

National Security Issues

A series of high profile national security files in Canada or allegedly involving Canadians (e.g., Algeria, Bulgaria, Operation Smooth) have reignited interest and attention to issues of radicalization and terrorist threats in Canada. Law enforcement's efforts to investigate and disrupt terrorists, the looming threat of terrorism in Canada, the prevention of terrorist acts, international collaboration, and managing the consequences of a terrorist act on Canadian soil are all topical.

Aboriginal Issues

The RCMP will face continued debate about missing and murdered Aboriginal women, including calls from the Assembly of First Nations and other bodies for a national public inquiry on the subject. This follows public reports by the Oppal Commission of Inquiry in B.C. and the Human Rights Watch on the subject. Furthermore, three UN bodies are also expected to be visiting Canada in the fall to report on various aspects of this issue. Media attention is expected to continue. Aboriginal issues are also garnering attention coast to coast as a result of First Nations protests under the "Idle No More" movement.

National Division/Sensitive Investigations

The RCMP has realigned the mandate of the former "A" Division and created the newly titled National Division. Notably, the Division will focus expertise on sensitive, high-risk investigations into significant threats to Canada's political, economic and social integrity.

Bullying/Child Exploitation
There have been a couple of high profile cases that have brought public attention to issues facing youth in Canada including online bullying and exploitation. The Rehtaeh Parsons case in particular has mobilized law enforcement, public, media and government to tackle not only individual investigations, but larger societal factors contributing to this kind of victimization.

RCMP's Political Independence
The RCMP's relationship with government has come under increasing media scrutiny, which may be contributing to a perception that the Force is not managed at arm's length.

Scenario Note

Commissioner's Visit to "E" and "K" Divisions

April 8-12, 2013

Idle No More (INM) – Aboriginal-based issues protests in British Columbia and Alberta

Item #1: "E" Division - British Columbia

Background:

- Since December 17, 2012, there have been 191 recorded events related to the "Idle No More" movement across "E" Division. Peaceful events such as rallies, marches, round dances and information sessions occurred in major cities, such as Vancouver and Victoria.

Key Issues:

- There are seven (7) events planned in "E" Division between March 22 and June 21, 2013, consisting mainly of peaceful rallies. A national scheduled event entitled "Day of Action Against Chevron and the Pacific Trail Pipeline" occurred on March 30th, 2013 and was attended by INM members. Also, it had been reported that some protestors may attempt a border crossing without the proper documentation, on March 31, 2013, at the Peace Arch Port of Entry in Surrey.

Item #2: "K" Division - Alberta

Background:

- There were 132 peaceful events, of a similar nature to those in B.C., recorded across "K" Division in various cities, such as Calgary, Edmonton and Lethbridge.
- There was one minor incident on the National Day of Action on January 16th, reported by various media outlets, which involved a vehicle forcing its way through a roadblock on a highway outside of Edmonton.

Key Issues:

- Similar to B.C., there was a protest in Calgary on March 30, 2013, in solidarity with the "Day of Action Against Chevron and the Pacific Trail Pipeline". There are two (2) events planned for April 15, 2013, in "K" Division: a march in Edmonton, and a protest at Red Deer's Courthouse.

Item #3: Joint Events

Key Issues:

- INM founders along with numerous First Nations Chiefs have announced their alliance with an organization referred to as "Defenders of the Land" (DoL). In a joint declaration published on March 18, 2013, representatives for both organizations disclosed a new course of non-violent actions (including economic disruption and civil disobedience) which will be organized under a new banner called "Sovereignty Summer". According to reports, some events will be targeting resource development projects involving pipelines, tar sands, natural gas, fisheries or mines.

- Over 80 individuals are planning to participate in the construction of an unsolicited resistance camp entitled "Unist'ot'en Protest Camp" in the Peace River Region, B.C. Some attendees would be members of/in support of the Deep Green Resistance (DGR). Local INM organizers have also stated there will be future joint events with the DGR. However, no national/official INM sites confirm that statement.

BRIEFING NOTE TO THE COMMISSIONER / NOTE D'INFORMATION AU COMMISSAIRE

"K" Division Commissioner's Briefing – Grande Prairie Detachment

In anticipation of the Commissioner's visit to "K" Division commencing on 2013-02-19, this Briefing Note provides an update on current issues in Alberta,

Operational Overview:

"K" Division

Aboriginal Protests and Idle No More (INM) Movement

- As of 2013-02-05 there have been 104 Aboriginal Protest and INM events in the Province of Alberta; 71 of these events have occurred within RCMP jurisdiction.
- In most cases, the RCMP has been informed of protests in advance and has worked with event organizers to mitigate public safety risks.
- Seventeen (17) of these events have been in Western Alberta District including three in Grande Prairie that are known to the RCMP.

Highway 63

- Highway 63 is the major highway linking Fort McMurray, Alberta, and points south, including Edmonton. In 2010 and 2011, there were 57 fatalities and 298 serious injuries on this two lane highway.
- "K" Division has prioritized Traffic Safety throughout the Division and is re-directing police resources to address this priority. The Alberta Government has long range plans to twin the highway.

Reorganization of Federal Policing in "K" Division

- Federal Re-engineering is proceeding - multi-discipline teams focused on Organized and Serious Crimes are being established. The membership has been engaged and we are represented in Transitional Committees to allow for seamless and supported transition.

Canada

Hobbema

- On 2013-02-02 at approximately 0400 hrs, Maskwicis Detachment members were dispatched to a complaint of gunfire on the Samson Cree First Nation.

- Another incident which received significant attention was a drive by shooting on the Samson Cree First Nation which resulted in the death of five year old Ethan YELLOWBIRD (on 2011-07-11). The investigation resulted in the three youths being charged with Manslaughter. The Youths have entered guilty pleas to Manslaughter and sentencing arguments are set to resume on 2013-02-20.

Western Alberta District

Smith's Landing First Nation (SLFN)

- Smith's Landing First Nation (SLFN) is a community of Dene people located along the borders of Alberta and North West Territories. The population of the Nation is 324 people. Accounting firm Meyers Norris Penny (MNP) was hired by the Salt River First Nation to review financial records of SLFN

Grande Prairie

Maclean's Magazine Article on Grande Prairie

- An article from Maclean's Magazine in December 2012 identified Grande Prairie in its rankings of Canada's most dangerous cities. This interpretation was based on crime data.
- The Grande Prairie Detachment and community acted quickly to refute the article. See Detachment Overview (page 6) for further information. As noted by Supt. Ray NOBLE, Impaired Driving and other enforcement statistics reflect proactive work by the police service and do not necessarily equate to erosion of public safety.

Serious Crimes Branch Report

Homicides	2012	2011	2010	2009	2008
North MCU	18	28	30	27	27
South MCU	14	23	10	11	24
Total	32	51	40	38	51

Some highlighted Western Alberta District Serious Crimes Branch files from 2011 & 2012 are as follows:

Corporate Overview:

Alberta Justice and Solicitor General Ministry (AJSG)

- The Justice Minister and Solicitor General is Jonathan Denis, QC.
- Mr. Tim Grant became Deputy Solicitor General in December, 2012. Mr. Grant achieved the rank of Major-General in the Canadian Armed Forces and commanded troops in Western Canada and Afghanistan.
- The current working relationship between the RCMP and AJSG is excellent, with appropriate communication between agencies on budgeting, resourcing and policing initiatives in the Province of Alberta.

Integrated Traffic Units

- RCMP and Alberta Traffic Sheriffs started to integrate services in 2009 during a pilot project. There are 181 RCMP Regular Members and 109 Traffic Sheriffs in the program.

- Pursuant to a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) approved by Public Safety Canada, the Government of Alberta obtained a 70/30% cost share for the Traffic Sheriff resources under the Provincial Police Service Agreement (PPSA).
- The MOU and cost sharing agreement expire on May 20, 2013. "K" Division is working with AJSG to develop a way forward strategy for Traffic Services.

Budgets and Human Resources

- "K" Division efforts to build the number of frontline PPSA resources continue in the context of tightening Provincial Government spending. For 2013, AJSG approved an additional 40 resources to the PPSA.
- The RCMP's five-year policing plan calls for the addition of up to 500 new positions between 2013 and 2018. Lower than expected oil revenues have been a focus of media attention, and all areas of provincial spending will be closely monitored.

Core Survey Results

- The recent survey of Canadians indicates Albertans continue to be satisfied with the RCMP's contribution to a safe and secure Canada:

	2010	2011	2012
"K" Division Canadians	84%	91%	88%
National Canadians	84%	87%	86%

- Areas of concern in "K" Division include open communication (61%), adequate communication by the RCMP about its work (64%) and RCMP members going the "extra mile" to provide quality service (66%).

Detachment Overview:

- The Western Alberta District (WAD) Commander is C/Supt. Brenda LUCKI.
- The Officer in Charge of Grande Prairie Detachment is Supt. Ray NOBLE.
- Grande Prairie Detachment serves approximately 65,000 people, including 55,000 in the City of Grande Prairie and approximately 10,000 in the rural area, which includes the village of Hythe, the hamlets of Bezanson, Clairmont, Crooked Creek, Debolt, Dimsdale, Landry Heights, Teepee Creek, Webster, Wedgewood, County of Grande Prairie and a portion of the MD of Greenview. Beaverlodge Detachment is amalgamated with the Grande Prairie Rural Detachment.
- There are 111 total regular RCMP members assigned to Grande Prairie Detachment.
- There are also 55 Municipal Employees, 6 Guards/Matrons, 6 Administrative staff and one Civilian Member at Grande Prairie Detachment, for a total of 179 positions.

Community Profile

- The Grande Prairie area is one of the fastest growing regions in Canada. Deemed one of Alberta's small business hotbeds, Grande Prairie offers excellent opportunity for continued growth. It has a strong economic base, supported by a thriving Oil and Gas industry, as well as government, agriculture and forestry; however, the community also has a wide range of industries such as education, service and retail. The Grande Prairie area is rich in opportunities for leisure and recreation such as Provincial heritage sites, golf courses, parks, campgrounds and year-round community events.

Community and Detachment Priorities

- Grande Prairie detachment has identified several community objectives on their 2012-2013 Annual Performance Plan (APP):
  - To increase traffic enforcement to target speeding infractions
  - To reduce drug abuse by performing drug enforcement projects
  - To enhance police relations with the community
  - To develop better methods in tracking prolific offenders

Detachment Profile Summary

Grande Prairie Municipal:

- Criminal Code per Member in 2012 is 121.64 (roughly 20 cases above the 2011 Municipal Division average);
- 2012 Criminal Code per 1000 population is 64 cases above the 2011 Municipal Division average;
- Total Criminal Code has increased 15% since 2006, and Workload has increased 20% for the same period;
- 2011 Total Crime Severity Index was 150.89 (Alberta's Total CSI was 88.61);
- Violent Crime Severity Index was 118.31 (Alberta's Violent CSI was 94.35);
- Weighted Clearance Rates are above both the National and Provincial averages. The Total WCR is only slightly above; however, the Violent WCR is moderately higher.

Grande Prairie Provincial:

- Criminal Code per Member in 2012 is 78.16 (roughly 26 cases below the 2011 Provincial Division average);
- Criminal Code per 1000 population is well below the 2011 Provincial Division average;
- Total Criminal Code has increased 22% since 2006 and Workload has increased 3% during the same period;
- 2011 Total Crime Severity Index was below Alberta's Total CSI at 72.37;
- Violent Crime Severity Index was slightly above Alberta's Violent CSI at 96.29;
- Both the Weighted Clearance Rate and Violent WCR are well below the National and Provincial averages.

BRIEFING NOTE TO THE COMMISSIONER / NOTE D'INFORMATION AU COMMISSAIRE

Communications (Key Messages/Issues):

Aboriginal protests and Idle No More events

- The RCMP will continue to work with protest organizers to address the public safety risks associated with public protests.
- "K" Division is engaged with Aboriginal leadership, municipal policing partners and private industry to ensure effective law enforcement response to public protests.

Highway 63

- The twinning of Highway 63 is politically sensitive.
- RCMP and Government of Alberta messaging is focused on reinforcing safe driving habits, as most accidents/fatalities on Highway 63 are attributable to dangerous driving/seatbelt use/speed/not driving to conditions/driver error.
  - RCMP Traffic Services is committed to ensuring road safety.
  - Accidents happen when driver's make poor choices.
  - Stay sober; stay focused; buckle in; slow down; drive to road conditions.

Hobbema

- In recent years, community leaders in Hobbema have been successful in encouraging the local community to work with the RCMP to prevent/solve crimes related to gang violence.
- The police can only work with the information they have.
- The citizens of Hobbema are demonstrating their commitment to ensuring the RCMP has the information we need to ensure public safety in this community.

MINISTERIAL VISIT
WHITEHORSE, YUKON TERRITORY
JANUARY 19, 2013

When: January 19, 2013, 2:30 to 3:30.

Location:
Whitehorse Detachment
4100 4th Avenue
Whitehorse, Yukon Territory
Y1A 1H5
867-667-5555

Driver:
Carter Mann will travel with the Minister by rental car to the Detachment.

Parking:
Available at the Whitehorse Detachment.

Background on Whitehorse:
Population: The city of Whitehorse is home to approximately 27,332 people. Nearly 75% of the Yukon total population lives in Whitehorse.

Demographics: Whitehorse attracts people from other northern Yukon communities, the NWT Delta communities, and the Western Canadian provinces. We have strong representation from First Nations people. To a much lesser extent we also have Inuit, Indo-Canadian, Asian, and European representation in Whitehorse.

Whitehorse is the center for the vast majority of Yukon services, government and transportation. Tourism is a large and critical component of the Yukon economy. The Alaska pipeline project and the sharp increase in natural resource exploration and mining is expected to have an effect on not just Whitehorse but other areas of the Yukon.

Crime: The Whitehorse RCMP Detachment is a busy Detachment with a higher than average Criminal Code caseload per member. It is the busiest Detachment in the Yukon. The vast majority of calls for service are directly related to alcohol and/or drug issues. The most prevalent drugs are various forms of cocaine and marijuana. Drug and alcohol problems result in the Whitehorse Detachment often being called upon as the primary resource to ensure individuals have a safe place to stay (Lodged and monitored in cells).

Whitehorse RCMP Detachment: The Whitehorse Detachment consists of a total of 50 employees and comprises 10 Public Service employees who conduct critical office management and support staff functions and 40 RCMP regular members. This includes one Inspector, two Operations Sergeants, and six Corporals who are in charge of the general duty members, General Investigation Sections, Provost, and the Kwanlin Dun First Nation Unit.

The Division Operational Communications Centre (OCC) also reports to the Whitehorse Detachment Commander. The unit consists of 13 civilian members who provide 911 dispatch and emergency calls for all of the detachments throughout the Territory. Whitehorse Detachment general duty members work a rotating four on/four off schedule. It consists of two 12-hour day shifts followed by two 11-hour night shifts.

The current Detachment building is located within the "M" Division headquarters building. It occupies half of the ground floor with a large interview suite with temporary holding cells on one side.

Strategic consideration - Minister's meeting with the Premier of Yukon, Darrell Pasloski, and potential for Idle No More protests

In conjunction with the January 11, 2013, meeting between the Prime Minister and Aboriginal Leaders, several rallies and protests occurred within the Yukon.

Direct communication was established between RCMP members, Idle No More organizers and Yukon First Nations leadership.

On January 11, 2013, peaceful rallies were held in Whitehorse, Haines Junction, Beaver Creek and Dawson City, Yukon with no serious incidents reported.

"M" Division continues to monitor open source communication and maintain dialogue with Yukon Idle No More organizers.

ISSUE:
• To advise the Commissioner of two (2) demonstrations which occurred on Friday December 21st, 2012, in Nova Scotia.

BACKGROUND:
• Friday December 21st, 2012, was designated as a National Day of Action for the "Idle No More" movement. The movement originated with First Nations communities and has grown with the opposition to Bill C-45.
• On December 21st, 2012, two (2) demonstrations were held in the communities of Auld's Cove and Millbrook, Nova Scotia.
• Approximately two hundred (200) demonstrators attended each of these events.
• RCMP members and Transportation, Infrastructure and Renewal employees provided traffic control on the Trans Canada Highway at both of these locations.
• Traffic slow downs occurred during each of these events.
• No incidents of violence or injury were reported at either of these demonstrations.

CURRENT STATUS:
• Additional demonstrations are expected, however no specific details regarding dates and locations of future events are known at this time.
• Our members will continue to liaise with the First Nations communities in an attempt to gather intelligence on upcoming planned demonstrations.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:

- "H" Division Criminal Operations will continue to monitor the situation.
- "H" Division Communication Services is fully engaged.

FYI...Deputy Lang is working to schedule this meeting for next week.

Mo, can you please book both the two proposed time right now as "tentative" in the Commissioner's schedule. We can confirm after the Deputy hears from AFN. Book for an hour for now..

After 3:30 PM on Wednesday the 9th here at RCMP HQ
After 1:30 PM on Friday the 11th, preferably here at RCMP HQ.

Deputy, I'm happy to take the scheduling off your hands if you'd prefer. You can have Charlene contact me directly.

Commissioner,

an issue being addressed by two Regional Chiefs.
I am still working it out.

The issue is their expectations of a national RCMP role in safety and security for communities involved with Idle No More etc as the movement escalates. we are not the LEA of jurisdiction where much of this stuff is going on.
I have asked for clarification on the attendees and information on the proposed items for discussion before a commitment can be finalized.
We can discuss Monday.

Adding Steve. Not sure who is on deck today.

I've been advised of one ongoing issue in a contract jurisdiction. Could we please start getting updates on any ongoing activities with regards to these protests? If it would be helpful, we could start convening calls so that we can get info fed up the chain to both our office and the Commissioner's Office.

CN Police advise that rail blockade appears to be forming up on the New Castle Sub MP 18. (New Brunswick)

CN police have approached the protestors. The Mohawk Warriors flag is now flying at the blockade. They are informed by the protestors that they intend to remain on the blockade of our tracks for 4 days.

CN sending further support to the area.

Adding Steve. Not sure who is on deck today.

I've been advised of one ongoing issue in a contract jurisdiction. Could we please start getting updates on any ongoing activities with regards to these protests? If it would be helpful, we could start convening calls so that we can get info fed up the chain to both our office and the Commissioner's Office.

CN Police advise that rail blockade appears to be forming up on the New Castle Sub MP 18. (New Brunswick)

CN police have approached the protestors. The Mohawk Warriors flag is now flying at the blockade. They are informed by the protestors that they intend to remain on the blockade of our tracks for 4 days.

CN sending further support to the area.

ISSUE:
Supporters of the Idle No More movement have planned a protest 2013-01-05 at the entrance to the Hardisty, Alberta Petroleum "Tank Farm" (junction of Highway 13 and Range Road 95).

Information received to date suggests a full blockade may occur.

BACKGROUND

Neither the town of Hardisty nor the "Tank Farm" are situated on First Nations land and there are no First Nations Bands in the immediate area.

Planning for this event has been ongoing for the past week and indications are the Idle No More group may enact a full blockade of the main entrance to the Hardisty petroleum "Tank Farm".

Eastern Alberta District has been fully engaged assisting Killam detachment since learning of this planned event.

CURRENT STATUS

anticipates a peaceful protest as their goal is to raise awareness about pipelines on First Nations land and to educate people about Bill C-45.

not intending a full blockade of the highway and agreed that allowing traffic flow would better serve his purpose regarding the negative impact of Bill C-45.

Following the conversation with RCMP,
The majority were in favour of a full blockade at the Hardisty "Tank Farm".

Eastern Alberta District management has engaged "K" Division Criminal Operations and strategic plans have been created with adequate resources identified and deployed.

Contingency plans have also been created to address a full blockade of the "Tank Farm" should this occur.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:

STRATEGIC COMMUNICATIONS:
"K" Division Strategic Communications Unit has been engaged and have prepared multiple media strategies to employ dependent on the circumstances.

RECOMMENDATIONS/STRATEGIC ADVICE:

Continue to engage the participants

CN obtained an Injunction through the Moncton Court of Queens Bench late this afternoon. The Injunction was served by a third party about an hour ago. The protesters removed the barricade and left the area. There is no clear indication of their intentions for tomorrow.

RCMP members on site were not required to intervene; the protest was peaceful for its duration.

Initially, their plans were to protest during the day onlyj over a period of four days. So, they could be following this plan.

We will have our members periodically check this location to determine if the protesters return. CN police are keeping a presence on site.

Members from Richibucto District will be contacting the protest leader from Elsipogtog First Nation to find out their plans for tomorrow.

Have a good evening.

Supt. Mike O'Malley
Acting CROPS Officer

PROS 2012 1642112
ABORIGINAL PROTEST - RAILWAY BLOCKADE

ISSUE:

• To inform of a protest movement by Elsipogtog First Nations in District 5, which is aimed at blocking the CN Railway for seven days.

BACKGROUND:

• Earlier today, a group of protesters set up to block a portion of the CN Railway parallel to Route 126 in Adamsville, 50 kilometres north of Moncton.

• This is a continuation of the Idle No More Protest in Rexton on December 21st to December 24th where Aboriginal protesters blocked Route11 for 4 days.

CURRENT STATUS:

• Protesters, are communicating openly with the RCMP and plan to protest peacefully 24 hours a day, each day.

• Additional resources are being deployed to assist with highway and railway safety concerns and general security. This resource will be maintained until the situation is resolved..

and a northbound passenger train is scheduled to depart from Moncton tomorrow at 16:54 hres.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:

• A northbound passenger train is scheduled to depart from Moncton tomorrow at 16:54 hres, a time when the protest is expected to be over.

STRATEGIC COMMUNICATIONS:

• Our divisional media unit has developed a strategy to respond to media and public enquiries both pro-actively and re-actively

Idle No More planned protests

ISSUE:
- To inform of the planned protests in New Brunswick aligned with the Idle No More movement.

BACKGROUND:
-Since late December 2012, there has been several protests across New Brunswick by several First Nations members. Our overall relationship with the individuals involved has been extremely positive and no violence nor any arrests have been generated from these protests.

CURRENT STATUS:
- A protest march is planned to take place tomorrow, January 9th, 2013, at noon in downtown Moncton from the Champlain Mall to City Hall. It is expected this action will cause significant disruption to traffic. A plan has been designed to manage the event and ensure overall public safety.
-Further, there is also a call for a non-violent protest in front of the office of MP Mike ALLEN in Woodstock on January 11th, 2013 by members of the Woodstock First Nation which is supported by the Chief. The Woodstock Town Police has been advised accordingly.
- As well there is a plan, by the same group, to block the Trans-Canada highway; however, this is suspended pending the outcome of the talks between the PM and the National Chief of First Nations.

Once again no violence is expected.

STRATEGIC COMMUNICATIONS:
Our Divisional media unit will prepare a strategy to deal with any media enquiries should these events take place as planned.

Idle No More Protests – Nova Scotia

Issue:
· To advise the Commissioner of the outcome for various rallies and protests relating to the Idle No More movement held today in Nova Scotia.

Background:
· The planned meeting between the Prime Minister and Aboriginal Leaders today in Ottawa sparked several rallies and protests in Nova Scotia relating to the Idle No More movement.

Current Status:
· A planned railway disruption at Millbrook First Nation near Truro, Nova Scotia was averted by advancing the train's schedule and departing prior to the blockade set up.
· A peaceful rally held in Antogonish had 50 people in attendance with no issues identified.
· A peaceful rally in Halifax (Halifax Regional Police area) had upwards of 200 protesters, the vast majority of whom were non-Aborginal, and no issues identified.
· There have been some reports that protestors at Millbrook First Nation may attempt to block the train on Saturday afternoon, 2013-01-11.

Recommendations/Strategic Advice:
· The District Policing Officers and senior managers are actively engaged in directing the response to these events.
· Community and Aboriginal Diversity Policing Services (CADPS) are actively engaged.
· RCMP Risk Managers, CN Police, municipal policing partners and key provincial stakeholders continue to be engaged.
· "H" Division Communications Strategists are aware and engaged.
· "H" Division Criminal Operations will continue to monitor these events.

BRIEFING NOTE TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL / NOTE D'INFORMATION AU PROCUREUR GÉNÉRAL

'Idle No More' Protests – Nova Scotia

PURPOSE:

- To inform the Attorney General of Nova Scotia of protests and potential railway interruption planned for today relating to the 'Idle No More' movement.

BACKGROUND:

- The pending meeting between the Prime Minister and Aboriginal Leaders on Jan 11th, 2013 in Ottawa has sparked local rallies and protests.
- On 2013-01-10, RCMP Millbrook members became aware of a plan for the potential blockade of the #102 Highway or a railway interruption on the tracks that transit the Millbrook First Nation for Friday, 2013-01-11.

- Unorganized and unannounced protests may occur throughout the Division throughout the day and for the weekend.

CURRENT STATUS:

- All indications thus far are that the protests will be peaceful.
- RCMP Risk Managers, CN Police and municipal policing partners are aware.
- Operational plans have been drafted and additional resources have been deployed to address the policing response.

RECOMMENDATIONS or STRATEGIC ADVICE:

- The District Policing Officers and senior management are actively engaged in directing the response to these events.
- Community and Aboriginal Diversity Policing Services (CADPS) are actively engaged.
- "H" Division Communications Strategists are aware and engaged.
- "H" Division Criminal Operations will continue to monitor these events.

ISSUE: Two Idle No More Demonstrations occurring in D Division resulting in highway closures

PURPOSE:

- To advise the Commissioner of peaceful demonstrations that occurred on PTH # 6 by members of the Misipawistik Cree Nation in Grand Rapids, Manitoba and by the Pinaymootang First Nation at the Fairford Bridge on Highway #6 Near Gypsumville, Manitoba

BACKGROUND:

- On 2013-01-23 at 17:05 hrs approximately 12 people initiated a one hour road closure of PTH # 6 approximately 100 metres South of the bridge that spans the Saskatchewan River in Grand Rapids.

- Members of Grand Rapids detachment attended the location to alert motorists and prevent any possible altercations between protestors and motorists.

- The road was re-opened at 18:05 hrs without incident.

- On 2013-01-11 at 14:30 hrs. members of Gypsumville detachment received information of a possible protest occurring on PTH #6 at the Fairford Bridge near Gypsumville.

- Members spoke to and were advised that it would be a peaceful protest and the highway would not be blocked.

- At 17:00 hrs. Gypsumville detachment received a report of approximately 40 persons blocking highway #6 at the Fairford Dam and traffic was not being allowed through.

- Gypsumville detachment members arrived approximately 20 minutes after the complaint was received. There were no protestors on the highway and no vehicles parked at the location

- members spoke to once back at the detachment and were advised that he was at the scene at approximately 16:00 hrs and observed 4 – 6 vehicles and approximately 15 people on the shoulder of the road.

CURRENT STATUS:

- Members are continuing with positive dialogue with the organizers and protestors.

- Information suggests that on January 16, 2013 further protests may be initiated at both locations.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:

- Possibility of media attention.

STRATEGIC COMMUNICATIONS:

- Division MLO will respond to any media enquiries using HQ suggested media lines.

RECOMMENDATIONS/STRATEGIC ADVICE:

Steve, Mike,

Just so you know CAP are sending this out to divisions today. It works in conjunction with consistent messaging already distributed by Comms.

RCMP Response to Protest Activity
In Response to Idle No More (DRAFT)

Key messages are provided to ensure consistent and up-to-date messaging by RCMP senior management. They are to be used by designated RCMP members and senior managers when speaking or responding to the public or the media.

Internal Use Only – Not for Public/Media Distribution

Communications

The RCMP recognizes the fundamental right of freedom of expression and peaceful assembly for all Canadians under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The overall RCMP objective is to work with all parties in order to preserve peace, protect life, property and enforce the law.

The RCMP should take a low profile, reactive approach to communicating about any planned protests. (Refer to NHQ Media Relations Policy Ops Manual 27.1) Messages in most cases should be limited to the RCMP's role. Questions regarding the causative issues should be referred to the organizer of the event.

Care should be taken to maintain consistent messaging across RCMP Divisions and aligned with other policing partners.

If the RCMP are called upon to actively address blockades or protestors, consult with the District Officer and Cr. Ops Officer, who will work with Media Relations to develop further communications material and in some incidents move to a higher-profile proactive approach.

Role of the RCMP:

The RCMP's primary role in any demonstration or protest is to preserve the peace, protect life, property and enforce the law.

Key Messages:

In most cases the below overall key messages form the initial response followed only by other specific messaging as needed.

Overall:

As with any dispute, protest or disagreement, the RCMP is an impartial party. (See Ops. Man 37.7 Labour Disputes)

The RCMP is here to uphold the law, maintain the public peace and ensure safety for all parties, including the protesters.

The RCMP works within the existing legal framework that balances public safety with individual rights.

RCMP Response to Protest Activity
In Response to Idle No More (DRAFT)

The Canadian Charter of Rights underscores the right of individuals to peacefully express their opinions/views and to speak out on the issues. The RCMP will uphold this right and acknowledge that the police have a duty and responsibility to protect the right of Canadians who voice their opinions on the issues.

The RCMP will engage avenues of mediation, consultation and dialogue in an attempt to resolve the specific dispute.

A dedicated liaison officer may be appointed to work with the impacted parties. The RCMP will attempt to negotiate/mediate to resolve the conflict before taking enforcement action.

Traffic Disruptions – Specific Messaging:

Protest activities may interrupt the normal flow of traffic. The RCMP will work with those involved to minimize the impact on the traveling public and to ensure order and public safety.

The RCMP objective in policing road closures / blockades is to safely restore the orderly flow of traffic.

The RCMP may forward information to media outlets, as specific disruptions become known.

The traveling public is advised to check ahead for road closure information and to monitor local media for information and alternate routes.

Enforcement / Threats / Violence / Illegal Activity/ Court Orders/Injunctions – Specific Messaging:

The RCMP will act to preserve the peace, maintain public safety. Those who unlawfully interfere with or threaten the safety of any person or property will be investigated in accordance with legislated responsibilities.

The RCMP encourages anyone who may have information about any criminal activity associated with the dispute to contact the police of jurisdiction immediately.

The RCMP will have a uniform presence at demonstrations/protests. The RCMP will strive at all times to balance the need to maintain the peace with the democratic right to hold peaceful demonstrations.

The level of intervention will be applied in the context of a careful assessment of risk, taking into account the likelihood and extent of loss of life, injury, and damage to property as a result of the intervention.

If an enforcement order is issued, the RCMP has the operational discretion to enforce that order once it has reviewed resources, etc in order to ensure public and police officer safety.

RCMP Response to Protest Activity
In Response to Idle No More (DRAFT)

The RCMP will exercise proper discretion in regards to court orders and the enforcement of injunctions.

The proper exercise of police discretion should not be confused with lack of enforcement. Police may wait for a lower-risk opportunity to arrest offenders to prevent the escalation of a situation.

Questions about the Court Order / injunction should be directed to the issuing court.

NOTE: Background Information about Injunctions/Court Orders

As per Divisional Policy determine who has primary responsibility to enforce injunctions, the police of jurisdiction can be requested to attend to preserve peace, protect life and property, and enforce the law

If the subjects do not honor the injunction terms, the party that originally sought the injunction can ask a judge to find the subjects in contempt of the court. The judge then may issue a court order to have the police of jurisdiction enforce the injunction.

Reporting:

In the event that a demonstration/protest is highly significant or sensitive; involves a substantial numbers of protesters or large impact is anticipated; an injunction order has been sought and/or enforcement/arrests may garner national attention consider submitting a briefing note to NOC for National situational awareness.

Commissioner, Daniel, Rennie,

I have guts of a BN for this briefing. I would appreciate your comments and additions as to recommendations (what the Minister can say flowing from it) that you both spoke about today.

I am also bringing the Situation Report from today, two examples of information we have received, the AFN National Strategy for Safety and Security Deck they gave us, and our response to protest activity messaging.

The day is running down...should this be in BN format to the Minister ? Should we just speak from it ? how do we just table drop recommended talking points ? Steven will quarterback this in the morning.....

Idle No More

ISSUE: Ministers Briefing "Idle No More" 2013-01-16.

BACKGROUND:

- Idle No More is a grass roots campaign This campaign has made it very clear that they only support peaceful protests and have distanced themselves recently from Chief Spence and the other three Chiefs.
- The 'Idle No More' (INM) movement continues to hold peaceful, relatively brief public awareness demonstrations. The movement originated with First Nations communities and has grown with the opposition to Bill C-45.
- Attendance varies from very few participants to several hundred at other demonstrations such as those in solidarity with Attawapiskat Chief Spence who has held a hunger strike since December 11, 2012.
- Over the past several weeks, demonstrations have been held at shopping malls, government and public facilities, roads and highways, rail lines and FN Band Offices, but increasingly the focus of demonstrations have been targeting transportation infrastructure.

CURRENT STATUS:

- There have been over 400 protests to date.
- From information to date there appears to two factions emerging:
  - Idle no More; and the chiefs of Manitoba, Ontario and NWT have aligned themselves with Chief Spence and have announced that there will be total blockades of the highways and Rail lines for 24 hours, nationally on January 16, 2013.

- The protests which have garnered the most attention recently are:
  - CN rail blockade in Sarnia. The Sarnia Police and the OPP were criticized by an Ontario Supreme Court Justice for not enforcing an Injunction.
  - VIA rail blockades in Ontario which affected over 2000 passengers. were not within RCMP jurisdiction.
  - January 5, 2013, protests at border crossings across Canada
  - Millbrook NS, rail line blockaded on January 11, 2013 and reopened the same evening.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:

- All information which has been gathered to date has specifically been for law enforcement purposes.
- The RCMP's primary role in this or any protest is to preserve peace, protect life, property and enforce the law.
- The RCMP will remain neutral unless a criminal offence has occurred.
- The RCMP must continue to liaise and maintain open dialogue with the Assembly of First Nations.

STRATEGIC ADVICE:

- The RCMP will continue to monitor these protests at a national level.
- The RCMP will continue to assess these protests on a case by case basis at the divisional level.
- Operational response to events will remain at the divisional level.
- Any police actions will continue to be dealt with by the police of jurisdiction in the Province or Territory in which they occur.
- Any actions to date within RCMP jurisdiction have been peaceful and have not been deemed criminal in nature.
- RCMP are prepared to increase national monitoring should Idle no More actions escalate.

Sir, Ma'am, All,

Unfolding event, at present there is a FULL blockade of Hwy 2 on the south entrance to Edmonton within Edmonton City limits. We have assisted EPS with access and involvement of a member of the CO's aboriginal advisory committee as well as an influential Chief to attempt to influence protest organizers.

It appears the event is going to immediately be scaled back to a slow down and information / messaging event with two open lanes of traffic. EPS and RCMP resources communicating in real time and coordinating traffic management efforts.

Proper BN to NOC forthcoming as this unfolds and more is known.

Idle No More – Highway 2 Blockade
Edmonton, Alberta
2013-01-16

ISSUE:
On 2013-01-16 from 1300-1500 hours, supporters of the Idle No More movement enacted a full and later partial blockade of the northbound lanes of the Queen Elizabeth II Highway near Gateway Park in Edmonton, Alberta.

CURRENT STATUS:

Approximately 100 people participated in this demonstration.

The blockade occurred within the Edmonton city limits (Edmonton Police Service jurisdiction) but very near the border of Leduc RCMP Detachment.

A coordinated response to this blockade was undertaken with the Edmonton Police Service assuming command.

"K" Division CROPS, Central Alberta District Management, Leduc, Devon, Beaumont detachments, "K" Division Integrated Traffic Services, and Alberta Department of Transportation were all engaged with response plans in place.

Traffic was diverted intermittently at various locations in response to the initial full blockade.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:

Primary access to the Edmonton International Airport is south of the blockade and was not significantly affected by backlogged or diverted traffic.

STRATEGIC COMMUNICATIONS:
Edmonton Police Service assumed responsibility for protester media communications.

"K" Division Strategic Communications Unit members were engaged and assisted with media releases pertaining to traffic disruption.

RECOMMENDATIONS/STRATEGIC ADVICE:
Ongoing communications with Senior Edmonton Police Service and on site RCMP command.

A review with the Edmonton Police Service will be undertaken to determine best practices in the event of future similar occurrences.

Sir, Ma'am, All,

Unfolding event, at present there is a FULL blockade of Hwy 2 on the south entrance to Edmonton within Edmonton City limits. We have assisted EPS with access and involvement of a member of the CO's aboriginal advisory committee as well as an influential Chief to attempt to influence protest organizers.

It appears the event is going to immediately be scaled back to a slow down and information / messaging event with two open lanes of traffic. EPS and RCMP resources communicating in real time and coordinating traffic management efforts.

Proper BN to NOC forthcoming as this unfolds and more is known.

Idle No More – Highway 2 Blockade
Edmonton, Alberta
2013-01-16

ISSUE:
On 2013-01-16 from 1300-1500 hours, supporters of the Idle No More movement enacted a full and later partial blockade of the northbound lanes of the Queen Elizabeth II Highway near Gateway Park in Edmonton, Alberta.

CURRENT STATUS:

Approximately 100 people participated in this demonstration.

The blockade occurred within the Edmonton city limits (Edmonton Police Service jurisdiction) but very near the border of Leduc RCMP Detachment.

A coordinated response to this blockade was undertaken with the Edmonton Police Service assuming command.

"K" Division CROPS, Central Alberta District Management, Leduc, Devon, Beaumont detachments, "K" Division Integrated Traffic Services, and Alberta Department of Transportation were all engaged with response plans in place.

Traffic was diverted intermittently at various locations in response to the initial full blockade.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:

Primary access to the Edmonton International Airport is south of the blockade and was not significantly affected by backlogged or diverted traffic.

STRATEGIC COMMUNICATIONS:
Edmonton Police Service assumed responsibility for protester media communications.

"K" Division Strategic Communications Unit members were engaged and assisted with media releases pertaining to traffic disruption.

RECOMMENDATIONS/STRATEGIC ADVICE:
Ongoing communications with Senior Edmonton Police Service and on site RCMP command.

A review with the Edmonton Police Service will be undertaken to determine best practices in the event of future similar occurrences.

Peaceful Protest at Teslin Tlingit Council Office (Teslin First Nation) Yukon Territory.

ISSUE:
Detachment Commander was advised that community members are holding a protest at the Teslin Tlingit Council building and preventing employees from going to work.

BACKGROUND:
- This incident is not related to the Idle No More Movement.
- Organizers indicate they are not happy with the band and some of the decisions made
- recently one employee was fired and another was suspended.
- the different clans have been meeting and are questioning how things are being run with the new Chief and councilors.
- Chief advised that the First Nation government has contacted their lawyer who is engaged
- Yukon College and Yukon Fish and Wildlife use the same building and their access will be impacted by a protest.

CURRENT STATUS:
- Approx 12 people observed standing by an open fire with signs attached to vehicles.
- Employees were able to enter main building to go to work.
- One complaint of uttering threats was received in the morning between a protester and employee, currently under investigation.
- Detachment Commander has met with the Chief, Councilors, and Elders group to discuss this issue and exchange information.
- Detachment Commander continues regular contact with the Chief and protestors throughout out the day
- Protesters intend a peaceful protest

- Chief indicates a meeting has been scheduled for March 7th and protesters are pleased with this
- No visible signs of media present, however, some phone interviews conducted.

RECOMMENDED RESPONSE:
- Teslin Detachment and District Policing Officer will continue to monitor the situation.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:
- RCMP involvement is minimal

Innu community raise concerns over N.L. Government's decision to ban hunting of George River caribou

ISSUE:
The Newfoundland and Labrador government announced a five-year ban on hunting caribou from the George River herd in Labrador. There has been significant public outcry from some within the Innu community regarding this announcement.
BACKGROUND:
2013-01-28 Newfoundland and Labrador Justice Minister, Environment Minister and Aboriginal Affairs Minister made a public announcement regarding the hunting ban of the George River caribou herd that will apply to all hunters, including aboriginals.
A recent census put the population at less than 20,000 animals, a decline of more than 70 per cent since July 2010.
The Métis and the Inuit leaders have agreed to stop hunting George River caribou for two years, but the Innu have always argued that their aboriginal rights trump the province's hunting laws and have indicated that they would continue to hunt.
The NL Government has taken the position that conservation of the George River herd takes precedent over aboriginal rights to hunt.
Innu leaders have raised concerns regarding the NL Government's lack of consultation prior to making this announcement and the fact that the hunting ban applies only when the herd is in Labrador.

The Newfoundland and Labrador government has no control over the animals when they migrate into Quebec.
will continue to hunt George River caribou despite a five-year ban announced. indicated that the ban will disrupt the culture of the Innu people in Labrador.
Innu Nation, said that the ban is unjustified and it is a threat to their way of life.
2013-01-29 During a heated exchange between Simeon Tshakapesh and VOCM "Open Line" host Randy Simms, Tshakapesh indicated that this incident was indicative of bigger problems between the NL Government and the Innu Nation.
He referenced evicting the Provincial Court from their building in the community of Natuashish.
There is indication that reference to seeking legal advice on the matter and bringing the "Idle No More Movement" to Labrador.
CURRENT STATUS:
contacted the RCMP detachment in Natuashish on the evening of 2013-01-29 to inform the acting NCOi/c that he would be encouraging hunting activities as he did not feel the Innu had to respect this ban.
declined an invitation to meet and discuss these matters further with the police.
It has been confirmed

Scheduled Court went ahead in Natuashish on 2013-01-30 without incident. The next court date is scheduled for the week of 2013-02-25 and there has been no further mention of court disruption.
At present the Provincial Fish and Wildlife Enforcement division of the NL Department of Justice is the lead enforcement agency.
The RCMP will continue to monitor the situation, gather intelligence and assist the Provincial Fish and Wildlife Enforcement Division as required.
The RCMP will continue working with and engaging the Innu community, other stakeholders as well as our enforcement partners as this situation unfolds.

ISSUE:
A demonstration related to the Idle No More movement took place in front of the D Division HQ building.

BACKGROUND:
On 2013-01-19 a peaceful protest organized by the Rosseau River was scheduled to take place between 1100 hours and 1400 hours in front of the D Division HQ building.
An Operational Plan was developed for the RCMP response to the protest in conjunction with the Winnipeg Police Service (WPS) who have primary jurisdiction for the D Division HQ building.

CURRENT STATUS:
The protest took place as planned and commenced at 1130 hours with approximately 50 persons in attendance.
D Division APS members engaged the organizers upon arrival to discuss the planned activities of the group.
A "spiritual ceremony" took place under the direction of First Nation elders. made a brief speech to the people who had gathered.
The event ended and the people dispersed at approximately 1300 hours.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:
None at this time.

STRATEGIC COMMUNICATIONS:
The D Division MRO was aware of this matter and had prior to discussions with NHQ Communications and the WPS MRO. Inquiries from the media will be addressed by the WPS MRO.

COMMENDATIONS/STRATEGIC ADVICE:
None at this time.

You'll note that there is an article in the media today referencing the fact that the police chiefs from Edmonton and Calgary and the officer in charge of Alberta's RCMP (Dale) are scheduled to discuss the Idle No More protests at a meeting in Edmonton on Monday with Alberta Solicitor General Jonathan Denis. This meeting was called by EPS Chief Rod Knecht in his capacity as the President of the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police however the info somehow made it's way into the media. I've just been advised that this meeting will be postponed as Chief Rick Hansen from Calgary and D/Comm Dale McGowan are now unavailable to attend.

If there's any further updates on this, we'll let you know. Marianne

2013/02/14		u/k	Nationwide	YZ - Nationally Scheduled Events	There is a call out for February 14, 21 and/or 28 to be a day of some kind of action. February 14 is a day of awareness for missing and murdered Aboriginal women and INM is supporting this. Currently organizers are calling for primarily teach-ins and awareness pieces.			Idle No More is inviting people to join in creating an inclusive Valentine's and organize community events to coincide with One Billion Rising (an international campaign to stop violence against women and girls) and Have a Heart Day (an initiative to support Indigenous children). Candlelight vigils, teach-ins, rallies, round dances and other creative acts of awareness, resistance and solidarity are being encouraged."		e-mail from K Div 2013-02-06, 1404
2013/02/14		u/k	Nationwide	YZ - Nationally Scheduled Events	Idle No More is organizing events in solidarity with "Have a Heart Day", an initiative to support Indigenous children. Candle light vigils, teach-ins, ralies, round dances and other creative acts of awareness, resistance and solidarity are being encouraged.	U/k		Celebrate Have a Heart Day by supporting Indigenous children to grow up safely at home, get a good education, be healthy, and proud of their cultures. Have a Heart Day is about caring Canadians working together to ensure Indigenous children have proper services that make them feel proud of who they are.
2013/02/14		u/k	Worldwide	Z - International Events	Idle No More is organizing events in solidarity with "V-Day", which is a global activis movement to end violence against women and girls. Candle light vigils, teach-ins, ralies, round dances and other creative acts of awareness, resistance and solidarity are being encouraged.	U/k		On Valentine's Day, an international event is taking place known as One Billion Rising, an attempt to get One Billion Men and Women to rise against violence towards women and girls. This includes solidarity work with activist demanding action on the issue of missing and murdered Indigenous women in Canada, and globally.

2013/02/03		Unknown	Toronto	Ontario	INM protestors and anti-nuclear activist blocked the CP rail line near the General Electric-Hitachi nuclear processing facility. The protestors blocked a train but left peacefully according to police. The rail-line protest came after a demonstration at the plant and a march through the surrounding neighbourhood earlier that day.	Unknown	Rail Traffic Rally	The plant has been operating in the area for almost 50 yrs, but went largely unnoticed by the community began a campaign to get it shut down. He says anti-nuclear activism is now an issue that belongs with the INM movement. Tentative schedule --Arrival on Victoria Island of " The Journey of Nishiyuu" Cree youth who have walked from Northern Quebec reserve. An original group of seven (7) walkers originated out of the Northern Cree Reserve, however, other walkers are suppose to be joining up with the original group as they get closer to Ottawa. Their current location is North of Maniwaki Quebec. They plan on arriving on Wednesday morning at the Kitigan Zibi Reserve in Maniwaki Quebec, at which time Cpl Russett will be meeting with the organizers. It should be noted that this "Walk" was organized and has been completed totally by the youth. Monday March 25th, 2013- is also shown as the arrival on Victoria Island of " The Journey of Nishiyuu" Cree Youth. The Walkers will be feasted and then march up to Parliament Hill for their rally returning to Victoria Island at the end of day. This portion has been sanctioned by the Algonquin Elders with the lighting of the Sacred Fire.	683		Once on Victoria Island on Sunday a feast will take place, along with some cultural teachings. They will then march up to Parliament Hill for a rally, returning to Victoria Island at the end of day. There has been talk amongst the Youth involved in the organizing committee here within the Region that the Youth Walkers will start a 2 day fast at the sunset on Monday the 25th, lasting till Wednesday the 27th, and leaving Victoria Island on Thursday the 28th to return home. This entire portion has NOT received the sanction of the Algonquin Elders at this time.		email from A Div 013-03-20 100

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-05
Time: 1200 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

Today's report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events for January 5, 2013. Due to the large volume of events planned for today, a separate report will be produced for anticipated events for the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until January 12th, and will be distributed later in the day. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

There is no report planned for January 6th; however, events will continue to be monitored and if the situation changes, this will be revisited. (U)

OVERVIEW:

Prime Minister Harper, along with Minister Duncan (Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development) has agreed to a meeting with a delegation of First Nations leaders coordinated by the Assembly of First Nations (AFN) on January 11, 2013, as a follow-up to the Crown-First Nations gathering last year. The focus of next week's meeting will be treaty relationship and aboriginal rights and economic development. (U) There seems to be a movement to organize a number of events on January 11th to coincide with the meeting between PM Harper and the FN Chiefs. (A)

Despite the announcement of the January 11th meeting, Chief Spence has indicated that she will continue her hunger strike until the meeting occurs. She has been joined by three other chiefs who have launched their own hunger strikes. The Idle No More (INM) movement has stated that there is no formal connection between their movement and the AFN, nor is there an association to Chief Spence's hunger strike. It is likely the INM movement will continue after the hunger strike ends.

INM will continue their activities until they reach their goals of Indigenous sovereignty and protection of the land and water. Once these goals are reached, they will continue to work to protect them. (U)

There are multiple events planned for January 5, 2013 across Canada. (U)

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-05
Time: 1600 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:
There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

Due to the large volume of events planned for January 5th, this report has been prepared to provide a summary of anticipated Canadian and international events for the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until January 12th. This list may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place.

There is no report planned for January 6th; however, events will continue to be monitored and if the situation changes, this will be revisited. (U)

OVERVIEW:
Prime Minister Harper, along with Minister Duncan (Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development) has agreed to a meeting with a delegation of First Nations leaders coordinated by the Assembly of First Nations (AFN) on January 11, 2013, as a follow-up to the Crown-First Nations gathering last year. The focus of next week's meeting will be treaty relationship and aboriginal rights and economic development. (U) There seems to be a movement to organize a number of events on January 11th to coincide with the meeting between PM Harper and the FN Chiefs. (A)

Despite the announcement of the January 11th meeting, Chief Spence has indicated that she will continue her hunger strike until the meeting occurs. She has been joined by three other chiefs who have launched their own hunger strikes. The Idle No More (INM) movement has stated that there is no formal connection between their movement and the AFN, nor is there an association to Chief Spence's hunger strike. It is likely the INM movement will continue after the hunger strike ends.

INM will continue their activities until they reach their goals of Indigenous sovereignty and protection of the land and water. Once these goals are reached, they will continue to work to protect them. (U)

Information received indicates a total of five (5) domestic and one (1) international event are organized for January 6, 2013 in Alberta (AB), Ontario (ON), and Texas, USA. These direct actions include a rally, flash mob dance, and a possible protest at a Port of Entry (POE) in AB; a drumming circle and a long

Date: 2013-01-07
Time: 1200 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, a list of known events being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until January 12th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

There were several peaceful protests[1] across Canada on January 5, 2013 in support of Idle No More. Some border operations and rail services were affected in various degrees[2] for brief periods of time during the day, including VIA services between Toronto-Ottawa and Toronto-Montreal

Media reports indicate the CN police are investigating the tampering of crossing signals during the blockade of rail lines east of Belleville, Ontario.

A meeting between Prime Minister Harper and Minister Duncan (Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development) and a delegation of First Nations leaders, coordinated by the Assembly of First Nations (AFN), is set for Friday, January 11, 2013. The focus of this meeting will be treaty relationship and aboriginal rights and economic development. Media reports indicate Idle No More organizers have called for a global day of action on January 11th to coincide with this meeting; however, it is unclear what impact this meeting may have on future planned protests.

Information received indicates a total of three (3) domestic events and one (1) international event are organized for January 7, 2013 in Ontario (ON), and Texas, USA. These direct actions include traffic slowdowns and a demonstration in ON, and a protest In Texas against the Keystone Pipeline. (U)

[1] The RCMP Daily Situation Report for Jan 5th reported on 39 events occurring across Canada and in the United States. The list provided was not an exhaustive list of events for that date.

[2] Depending on the location, some border crossing points experienced minimal impact on operations; others were partially affected, with one lane closed to accommodate protestors; and, others experienced brief closures during the protest events.

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-09
Time: 1200 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, a list of known events being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until January 12th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

According to recent media reports, Ontario Superior Court Justice David Brown criticized the Sarnia Police Services (SPS) and the Ontario Provincial Police (OPP) in the application of an injunction to halt a railway blockade issued by his order on January 5, 2013. Judge Brown was quoted by one media source saying, "That kind of passivity by the police leads me to doubt that a future exists in this province for the use of court injunctions in cases of public demonstrations." (U)

A meeting between Prime Minister Harper and Minister Duncan (Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development) and a delegation of First Nations leaders, coordinated by the Assembly of First Nations (AFN), is set for Friday, January 11, 2013. The focus of this meeting will be treaty relationship and aboriginal rights and economic development. Media sources are reporting that Chief Spence will not be attending Friday's meeting between PM Harper and FN chiefs since the Governor General, representing the Crown, will not be in attendance; one of Chief Spence's demands is a meeting between the Crown and the First Nations to discuss treaty issues. (U)

Media reports indicate INM organizers have called for a global day of action on January 11 to coincide with this meeting. However, it is unclear what impact this meeting may have on future planned protests as the INM founders have expressed publicly their intention to "work outside of the systems of government", including the traditional AFN structure. (U)

It is loaned to your agency/department in confidence and it is not to be reclassified, copied, reproduced, used or further disseminated, in whole or part, without the consent of the originator. It is not to be used in affidavits, court proceedings or subpoenas or for any other legal or judicial purposes. This caveat is an integral part of this document and must accompany any information extracted from it.

Information received indicates five domestic events are organized for January 9, 2013 in Manitoba (MB), New Brunswick (NB,) and Ontario (ON). These actions include a protest in MB; a march/traffic slowdown in NB; highway/railway slowdowns/blockages and drumming events in ON.

Reports indicate there are five events planned for January 10, 2013, in Alberta (AB) and ON, which include flash mobs, traffic slowdowns/blockades in AB, and a flash mob in ON . There are several events planned for January 11 and 12 in AB, British Columbia (BC), MB, NB, Nova Scotia (NS), ON, and Quebec (QC).

Between December 10, 2012 and January 9, 2013 (as of 1200 hrs EST), over 250 Aboriginal-based issues events have been identified nationally. (A)

EVENT SUMMARY (2013-01-09)

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-10
Time: 1400 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours and a list of known events being planned for January 11. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

A meeting between Prime Minister Harper and Minister Duncan (Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development) and a delegation of First Nations leaders, coordinated by the Assembly of First Nations (AFN), is set for Friday, January 11, 2013. The focus of this meeting will be treaty relationship and aboriginal rights and economic development. Media sources report that Governor General David Johnston has agreed to meet with First Nations leaders at Rideau Hall following the working meeting with PM Harper. (U)

INM organizers have called for a global day of action on January 11 to coincide with this meeting. However, it is unclear what impact this meeting may have on future planned protests as the INM founders have expressed publicly their intention to "work outside of the systems of government", including the traditional AFN structure. According to media reports, the INM grassroots movement is calling on the AFN to walk out of the meetings scheduled for January 11. (U)

Between December 10, 2012 and January 9, 2013 (as of 1200 hrs EST), over 250 Aboriginal-based issues events have been identified nationally. These events have been held on or at shopping centres, government buildings, public facilities, roads and major highways, railway routes, and ports of entry, such as bridges and ferry terminals. (A)

Information received indicates eight domestic events are organized for January 10, 2013, in Alberta (AB), British Columbia (BC), and Ontario (ON). These actions include flash mobs, traffic slowdowns/blockades in AB; an interruption of bus service in BC; and, a flash mob in ON. Reports indicate there are numerous events of various types planned for January 11, 2013 across Canada.

PURPOSE:
There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

Due to the large volume of events expected to occur today, January 11, there will be two reports produced focusing solely on today's events – one for 1400 hrs., and one for 1800 hrs, which will include events between January 12 and 16. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:
It was reported that approx. 3000 participants have arrived for the demonstration on Parliament Hill. RCMP reports that a group of 15 AFN Chiefs have arrived at the Langevin Building for the meeting with the Prime Minister. (A)

A meeting between Prime Minister Harper and a delegation of approximately 20 First Nations chiefs, expected to take place in Ottawa today, was in question this morning amid demands for the Governor General to attend. Reportedly, Chief Spence will not be attending today's meeting because the Prime Minister and the Governor General will not be in attendance at the meeting together. She has also indicated that she will continue her hunger strike. Media sources report that the Assembly of First Nations is divided between attending the meeting and boycotting it in support of Chief Spence's position that the Governor General should be in attendance. Furthermore, some Chiefs are objecting to meeting at the Prime Minister's office and requested a change of venue to the Delta Hotel in Ottawa. (U)

The meeting, if it proceeds, is set to begin at 1300 hrs with opening remarks from both PM Harper and Chief Atleo, followed by a plenary session from 1330 to 1600 to discuss the treaty relationship, aboriginal rights, and economic development. The Prime Minister is scheduled to return for a discussion (1600-1700 hrs) about the outcomes of the afternoon meeting. (U) stated that the First Nations and their supporters have the numbers to bring the Canadian economy to its knees, and that there are "warriors that are standing up now, that are willing to go that far." (U)

National Chief Atleo is calling for Chiefs to stand united and meet with the Prime Minister, suggesting a broader meeting could occur on January 24, 2013.

There are 116 domestic events scheduled to occur today, January 11, 2013, as of 1200 hrs. Between December 10, 2012 and January 11, 2013 (as of 1200 hrs EST), over 360 Aboriginal-based issues events have been identified nationally. These events have been held on or at shopping centres, government buildings, public facilities, roads and major highways, railway routes, and ports of entry, such as bridges and ferry terminals. (A)

There are numerous international events in support of the Idle No More call for a global day of action, 16 of which are detailed below.

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-11
Time: 1900 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

Due to the large volume of events expected to occur today, January 11, there will be two reports produced focusing solely on today's events – one for 1400 hrs., and one for 1900 hrs, which will include events between January 12 and 16. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

Demonstrations in support of the Idle No More (INM) movement took place in major cities across Canada. The grassroots INM movement has distanced itself from the current First Nations leadership and any of its potential actions, claiming it is ineffective in dealing with the needs of Aboriginal people. Media sources report that INM wants to escalate their activities with more marches, round dances and blockades as opposed to handing out pamphlets and doing teach-ins; however, these activities would remain non-violent. Idle No More participants are planning an "economic slowdown" next week, and intend to target the Ambassador Bridge in Windsor.

Media sources report that some 50-60 AFN Chiefs are discussing plans to launch country-wide disruptions by mid-January in support of Chief Spence.

called for protestors to block major roads and rail lines in Ontario on Wednesday, January 16, if their demands are not met. (U)

Several INM events took place on January 11th, coinciding with a meeting arranged between the Prime Minister and representatives of the AFN Chiefs. Police estimate that 3,000 people gathered on Parliament Hill for a rally/demonstration, waving flags and briefly blocking the entrance to the Prime Minister's office. The Prime Minister was in attendance for the entire meeting, which ended at 1815 hrs. (U)

While Chief Spence maintained her refusal to attend today's meeting, because the participants did not include all First Nation Chiefs or the Governor General, she has declared her intent to attend the ceremonial meeting with the Governor General at 1830 hrs at Rideau Hall. More than 100 First Nations Chiefs plan to attend the ceremonial meeting with the Governor General. (U)

It is loaned to your agency/department in confidence and it is not to be reclassified, copied, reproduced, used or further disseminated, in whole or part, without the consent of the originator. The Assembly of First Nations Chiefs remained divided Friday morning over attending the meeting with the Prime Minister. AFN National Chief Shawn Atleo along with delegates representing Nova Scotia, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Labrador, New Brunswick, P.E.I., Quebec, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Alberta, and Yukon chose to meet with the Prime Minister and federal officials. Other Chiefs, including large groups from Manitoba and Ontario, boycotted the meeting, and instead joined the protest on the Hill. (A)

As the National Chief, Atleo was elected to voice the opinion of the majority of Chiefs, and has no independent political authority. His decision to go against the majority and attend the meeting has caused dissent within the AFN and lead to criticism that the AFN has lost its representative voice. There have been calls from the Chiefs of Ontario and Manitoba for a non-confidence vote. (U)

The afternoon meeting with the Prime Minister was described by Minister John Duncan as a constructive discussion. No full agreements were reached on all of the eight demands put forward by the Chiefs; however, consensus on some issues was attained. The Prime Minister expressed a wish to carry out his duty to consult First Nations Communities. The Prime Minister and National Chief Atleo Shawn agreed to meet again within a month to continue their dialogue on comprehensive land claims. (U)

There were approx. 120 domestic events which occurred across Canada, today, January 11, 2013.

Reports indicate there are 15 events planned for January 12, 2013, in Alberta, British Columbia, Northwest Territories, Ontario, and Quebec. There are several events planned between January 13 and 16 in Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Ontario, and Saskatchewan.

(U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, a list of known events being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as list of known events being organized between January 16 and 19. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

Several events in support of the Idle No More (INM) movement took place in major cities across Canada over the weekend (Jan 12 and 13).

Dissension continues within the Aboriginal community between the Assembly of First Nations Chiefs and the INM grass roots movement, as well as between elected officials within the Assembly itself.

Some AFN Chiefs continue their plans for a national day of protest on January 16, which will include blockades of highways, rail lines, and border crossings for 24 hours.

According to the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs, the Aboriginal community has the ability to cripple Canada's economy and the warriors "… are willing to go that far."(U)

Other AFN Chiefs are supporting the INM movement. The INM organizers have stated that they are not in support of blocking roads, rails, or bridges on January 16; rather, they are calling for a World Day of Action on January 28, to coincide with the return of Canadian MPs to the House of Commons. (U)

Chief Spence continues her hunger strike despite the urges of several FN Chiefs and her supporters to end her crusade and salvage her health. Some have questioned what impact/effect her hunger strike will continue to have following both the meeting between the Prime Minister and a delegation of AFN leaders as well as her own participation at the ceremonial event with the Governor General on January 11. (U)

Two Alberta-based First Nations – the Mikisew Cree FN and the Frog Lake FN – have chosen a different approach than that of the INM movement or the AFN Chiefs. They are taking the federal government to court to challenge its ability to pass legislation, such as Bill C-45 and Bill C-38, which affects Aboriginal treaty rights without consultation with the Aboriginal communities. (U)

Media sources reported January 14, 2013 that AFN National Chief Shawn Atleo was temporarily stepping down from his position due to health reasons, on doctor's orders. (U)

Between December 10, 2012 and January 13, 2013, over 400 Aboriginal-based issues events have been identified nationally. These events have been held on or at shopping centres, government buildings, public facilities, roads and major highways, railway routes, and ports of entry, such as bridges and ferry terminals. (A)

Information received indicates there are no domestic events organized for January 14, 2013. Reports indicate there is a round dance/flash mob planned for January 15, 2013 in Peterborough, ON. There are several events planned between January 16 and 19 in Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec, and Saskatchewan.

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-15
Time: 1300 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, a list of known events being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as list of known events being organized between January 17 and 19. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

Some AFN Chiefs continue their plans for a national day of action on January 16, which will include blockades of highways, rail lines, and border crossings for 24 hours. The most ardent supporters of an economic blockade of Canada are First Nations Chiefs in Ontario, Manitoba, and the Northwest Territories. (U)

According to the media, Idle No More organizers have expressed concern with the media's portrayal of Chief Spence as the leader of the INM grassroots campaign as well as the coverage of the AFN chiefs, stating that neither source speaks for the grass roots movement. (U)

Media sources indicate organizers of INM movement continue to distance themselves from planned activities across Canada on January 16; instead, they have called for a global day of action on January 28 when the MPs return to the House of Commons. The movement supports peaceful protests to raise public awareness on the issues related to Bill C-45; however, blockades at border crossings, highways, and rail lines portray an aggressive stance and are contrary to INM's position. For example, INM organizers in Calgary have requested demonstrators to avoid tactics like roadblocks, following the shutdown of the 14th Street Bridge on January 12. Calgary Police are still determining whether charges will be laid. (U)

Between December 10, 2012 and January 15, 2013, over 400 Aboriginal-based issues events have been identified nationally. These events have been held on or at shopping centres, government buildings,

public facilities, roads and major highways, railway routes, and ports of entry, such as bridges and ferry terminals. (A)

Information received indicates there is one event – a round dance/flash mob in Peterborough, ON – planned for January 15, 2013. Reports indicate there are several events planned for January 16 in Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec, and Saskatchewan. There are numerous events planned in several provinces between January 17 and 19. (A)

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-16
Time: 1400 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

Due to the large volume of events expected to occur today, January 16, two reports will be produced concerning today's events – one for 1400 hrs., and one for 1800 hrs, which will include events planned between January 17 and 19. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

Demonstrations, traffic disruptions, as well as highway and rail blockades are occurring across Canada today, in support of the Idle No More Movement. These events are intended to cause economic disruption and raise awareness of Aboriginal issues. According to media reports, Chiefs and organizers have called for peaceful demonstrations, and will not condone violence. (U)

One of the larger demonstrations in Ontario is occurring at the Ambassador Bridge in Windsor, where up to 1000 participants are expected. This event is in support of the First Nation leadership, not a part of the INM protests, Media reports indicate that organizers will not block the bridge but instead plan to hold a peaceful march, ending in a rally with speeches and a round dance. (U) Reportedly, the Bridge Authority served an injunction forbidding protestors from blocking access to the bridge, but allowed them access to an area adjacent to the Bridge to conduct their ceremonies and speeches. (A) Protestors are expected to include members of local Unions, the CAW, and Occupy Canada. (U)

According to the media, Chief Theresa Spence has renewed her demand for the Governor General and the Prime Minister to meet with all First Nations chiefs on January 24, the first anniversary of the Crown-First Nations gathering. (U) Information suggests that Chief Spence is continuing her hunger strike, despite the efforts of her supporters and various chiefs to convince her to end it, in an effort to attract international attention. (A)

Hearings into the Enbridge Northern Gateway Project will continue across the province of British Columbia (BC) for the next few weeks. Ongoing protests against this project have merged with the Idle No More movement, with the changes to federal environmental laws arising as a common focal point for the two groups. Some BC First Nations groups travelled great distances to join these protests in Vancouver. (U)

Reports indicate there are close to 70 events planned across Canada today. police reports indicate the majority of these events are expected to be peaceful. (U)

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-16
Time: 1800 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide an update on today's events, and provide a list of known events being organized between January 17 and 19. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

A number of demonstrations, traffic disruptions, as well as highway and rail blockades, intended to cause economic disruption and raise awareness of Aboriginal issues, occurred in at least eight provinces and two territories today. All events were reported to be peaceful. (U)

Events in Ontario included protests at several international bridges in Ontario: the Ambassador Bridge in Windsor, which caused traffic backups; the International Bridge in Sault Ste. Marie; and, the Rainbow Bridge in Niagara Falls. The CN and CP railway lines were blockaded in the Tyendianga area between Belleville and Kingston in Ontario, (U) VIA rail service is still being affected as passengers are being bused around demonstrations. (A) There was also a report that four metal bars had been found on CP tracks west of Shannonville. (A) Rail traffic in Manitoba and British Columbia was also affected by blockades. Major highways in Alberta and British Columbia, as well as a bridge along a major highway in New Brunswick, were affected by the protests. (U)

Media sources indicate that an escalation of actions by First Nations Communities is possible in the near future if there is no genuine progress made between the Federal and Provincial Governments and the Indigenous Peoples of Canada. In an interview with CBC News, Chief David Harper, Grand Chief of the Manitoba Keewatinowi Okimakanak, suggested these blockades could last into the spring, and that the next step is to use the international community to put pressure on the Canadian government to resolve the issues. Chief Harper also stated that he hoped the Prime Minister and the Governor General would attend the meeting in Ottawa, to be held on January 24, to which all Chiefs have been invited for the first anniversary of the Crown-First Nations gathering. Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, a list of known events being organized for the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until January 24. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

A number of demonstrations, traffic disruptions, as well as highway and rail blockades, intended to cause economic disruption and raise awareness of Aboriginal issues, took place across Canada as part of the "National Day of Action" on January 16. Though many of yesterday's events took place under the Idle No More (INM) banner, INM organizers maintain they do not support blockades of railways and international bridges as well as economic disruption. Protestors blocked rail lines in Ontario, Manitoba, and British Columbia, resulting in delays to both passenger and freight traffic; caused traffic slowdowns on major highways in several provinces; and, impacted cross-border traffic at international bridges, such as the Ambassador Bridge in Windsor and the Rainbow Bridge in Niagara Falls.

For the most part, yesterday's protests were peaceful and without incident. However, there were a couple minor incidents in Edmonton and Whitehorse. Outside Edmonton, protestors blocking Hwy 2, the main north-south corridor in Alberta, jumped on the hood of a truck attempting to edge its way through the blockade. Eventually the driver was allowed through, and no one was injured. In Whitehorse, a driver revved his engine and swerved recklessly close to a group of marchers, turned around, and blasted the horn as he drove past the group for a second time. No one was injured, and the group continued its peaceful protest march. (U)

The INM movement continues to plan activities in the days leading up to its call for a Global Day of Action, on January 28, to coincide with the return of MPs to the House of Commons.

Information received indicates a total of eight events are planned for January 17 in Alberta (AB), British Columbia (BC), New Brunswick (NB), Nova Scotia (NS), and Ontario (ON). These direct actions include educational sessions in AB, BC, NB; a concert/rally in NS; a round dance/speeches at an event as well as a protest at a Hydro One facility in ON; and, a traffic slowdown as well as a week-long rally in BC. There is one international event reported for London, England on January 17. (U)

Reports received indicate a total of three events planned for ON and Saskatchewan (SK) for January 18. These direct actions include a highway blockade in northern ON; and, a flash mob and fundraising event in SK. (U)

There are several events planned to occur between January 18 and 24. (U)

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-18
Time: 1200 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, a list of known events being organized for the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until January 24. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

According to the Canadian Press, the Queen[1] has expressed her concern over the health of Chief Theresa Spence; however, she has declined to intervene on Chief Spence's behalf, deferring the issue to the Governor General, her personal representative in Canada, and the Prime Minister. Chief Spence continues her campaign for a meeting between all Chiefs and the Prime Minister and Governor General, despite pleas from supporters and other Chiefs to focus on her health and conclude her liquids-only diet. (U)

Information received indicates a total of four domestic events planned for Ontario (ON), Quebec (QC), and Saskatchewan (SK), and one international event in Massena, New York, USA for today, January 18. These direct actions include a highway blockade in northern ON; a drumming session in QC; a flash mob and a fundraising event in SK; and, a flash mob in Massena. (U)

Reports received indicate a total of nine events planned for January 19 in Alberta (AB), British Columbia (BC), and Manitoba (MB). These direct actions include a flash mob/round dance in AB; rallies and demonstrations in BC; and, a demonstration in MB. Currently, there are five events planned to occur between January 20 and 24. (U)

[1] This response from the Queen, dated January 7, 2013, was reportedly received by a small businessman from BC, a supporter of Chief Spence, who had taken it upon himself to correspond with Buckingham Palace. In a public statement on January 9, 2013, Chief Spence indicated that she and her supporters had sent a letter to the Queen, appealing to her to ask the Governor General to meet with the Chiefs. There is no indication in this article if Buckingham Palace has corresponded directly with Chief Spence and her supporters. (U)

These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

During an interview with Radio-Canada on Saturday January 18, Chief Theresa Spence reiterated her desire to pursue her hunger strike, despite pleas from supporters, until a "nation-to-nation" dialogue has been initiated. Chief Spence confirmed such a meeting would have to include the Prime Minister, the Governor General, as well as First Nations representatives in order to include all "historical treaties partners". According to media reports, the Assembly of First Nations (AFN) continue to request a meeting "nation-to-nation", to be held on January 24, 2013, despite AFN National Chief Shawn Atleo's sick leave. (U)

Information received indicates several events took place across Canada this past weekend (January 19 and January 20). One of these events occurred at RCMP "D" Division Headquarters in Winnipeg, Manitoba, between 1130 and 1300 hrs., as approximately 50 participants held a "spiritual ceremony" and peaceful demonstration. (A)

Reports received indicate two domestic events are currently planned for Alberta (AB) and Newfoundland & Labrador (NL) for today, January 21. These actions include a flash mob and a demonstration. (U)

Reports received indicate there is only one event planned for January 22, consisting of a public information panel in British Columbia (BC). Currently, there are six events planned to occur between January 23 and 25. (U)

OVERVIEW:

During an interview with Radio-Canada on Saturday, January 18, Chief Theresa Spence reiterated her desire to pursue her hunger strike, despite pleas from supporters, until a "nation-to-nation" dialogue has been initiated. Chief Spence confirmed such a meeting would have to include the Prime Minister, the Governor General, as well as First Nations representatives in order to include all "historical treaties partners". (U)

According to a press release by the Assembly of First Nations (AFN) issued on January 21, National Chief Shawn Atleo will return to his full duties later this week, and will meet with the Prime Minister in the near future. However, January 24 has not been officially identified as the meeting date, nor has the form of, or attendees, at such an event been determined. Media reports indicate the Prime Minister has not yet received a formal request from the AFN for a meeting, and that the next step is a one-on-one meeting with National Chief Atleo to agree on a way forward. (U)

Furthermore, according to media reports, the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs is meeting today and tomorrow (Jan 22-23) in Winnipeg, to discuss "opting out" of the AFN. Chiefs from Alberta, Northwest Territories, Ontario and Saskatchewan are also expected at that venue. (U)

Reports received indicate two events are currently planned for Ontario (ON) and British Columbia (BC) for today, January 22. These actions include an open forum and a public information panel. (U)

These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

Future discussions between the Prime Minister and First Nations leaders will consist of a one-on-one meeting with National Chief Atleo within the next week or two. This meeting will not include the General Governor as these discussions would focus on policy issues, which is the sole domain of the government, according to media reports. (U)

Chiefs from across Canada have been invited to Ottawa to attend a special meeting marking the first anniversary of the Crown-First Nations gathering; however, there is no information indicating how many will accept. The BC Assembly of First Nations is hosting a meeting of BC Chiefs in Vancouver on January 24 and 25. (U)

Supporters continue to urge Chief Spence to end her campaign, declaring that she has gained several victories. Chief Spence is reportedly in negotiations to end her hunger strike, possibly by the end of January 24. Her conditions include a commitment from leaders of the Opposition to continue to fight the omnibus budget legislation, as well as press the federal government to move forward on the action plan drafted by the AFN as a result of the meeting on January 11. According to the National Post (Jan 23), band councillors from Attawapiskat plan to ask Chief Spence to end her fast or face removal from her position as Chief. (U)

Reports received indicate no events currently planned for today, January 23. (U)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, a list of known events being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until January 27th. There will be a separate report, distributed later today, outlining the known events scheduled for January 28th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence[1] and Raymond Robinson, an elder from the Cross Lake Nation in Manitoba, officially announced the end of their hunger strikes at a press conference held on Victoria Island in Ottawa. An agreement to end Chief Spence's hunger strike was reached after negotiations with representatives of the AFN and the federal opposition who agreed to endorse a 13-point declaration, including a call for a meeting between First Nation leaders, the Prime Minister, and the Governor General. (U)

National Chief Shawn Atleo is in Vancouver to attend a meeting of BC Chiefs, and will hold a press conference, along with other AFN leaders, later today, January 24. (U)

Reports received indicate seven events currently planned for today, January 24 in Alberta (AB) and Ontario (ON), which include flash mob/round dances, traffic interruptions, an open house to discuss Bill C-45, and teach-in sessions. There are six events planned for January 25, in AB, British Columbia (BC), ON, and Quebec (QC). Currently, there are 14 events planned to occur across Canada between January 26 and January 27. (U)

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-25
Time: 1300 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement since December 10, 2012. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, a list of known events being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until January 28th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence ended her protest on Thursday, January 24, after other chiefs and federal opposition parties promised to take up her cause. The spokesman for Chief Spence vowed that the struggle would continue, despite the end her hunger strike. Similarly, New Democrat MP Romeo Saganash noted that the Prime Minister will see increasing levels of pressure as a result of the INM campaign, including events planned across the nation for Monday, January 28th. (U)

National Chief Shawn Atleo held a press conference on January 24th where he renewed his call for the federal government to continue to work with the Aboriginal Chiefs on issues like poverty, education and violence against women. He also praised the efforts of those partaking in Idle No More in raising the issues to the Canadian public. (U)

Reports received indicate that nine events are currently planned for today, January 25 in Alberta (AB) and Ontario (ON), British Columbia (BC), and Quebec (QC). Planned events include flash mobs/round dances, rallies, traffic interruptions, a youth forum and teach-in/ information sessions. There are seventeen events planned for January 26 and 27, in AB, British Columbia (BC), ON, and Quebec (QC). Currently, there are thirty-nine events planned to occur across Canada on January 28. (U)

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-28
Time: 1300 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement since December 10, 2012. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. (A)

Due to the large volume of events expected to occur today, January 28th, two reports will be produced concerning today's events – one for 1400 hrs., and one for 1700 hrs, which will include events planned up to February 2, 2013. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

Demonstrations and solidarity protests in support of Idle No More's (INM) World Day of Action will take place in at least 30 cities across Canada and in various countries, worldwide. In Canada, these protests coincide with the return of Members of Parliament (MPs) to the House of Commons, where the federal government is expected to face a renewed push to raise the prominence of Aboriginal Issues on the government's agenda. In fact, NDP MP Romeo Saganash will be introducing a private member's bill today requesting that the government ensure Canada's laws are consistent with the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. (U)

Information received has indicated that CN has requested and received province-wide injunctions as it relates to Aboriginal blockades that may occur in the provinces of British Columbia, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan. (A)

The INM movement has been receiving increased support from other activist and labour groups, such as the Quebec student movement, labour groups (such as Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE)) and Mohawk activists, which attended workshops this past weekend at Ottawa University. (A)

Currently, there are 82 domestic events planned to occur across Canada on January 28th. There are numerous international events in support of the Idle No More call for a global day of action, six of which are detailed below. (U)

NOTE: Information highlighted in green represents new information which was not previously reported.

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-28
Time: 1700 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement since December 10, 2012. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. (A)

Due to the large volume of events expected to occur today, January 28th, two reports will be produced concerning today's events – one for 1400 hrs., and one for 1700 hrs, which will include events planned up to February 2, 2013. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

A crowd of approximately 300 demonstrators gathered on Parliament Hill as part of the Idle No More's (INM) World Day of Action, to keep up the pressure on the federal government to reform its policies regarding indigenous people in Canada, and reconsider Bill C-45 and Bill C-38. Media reports indicate that NDP leader Tom Mulcair and NDP MP Romeo Saganash addressed the crowd. This morning, Conservative House Leader Peter Van Loan stated that the federal government has no plans to change the terms of environmental oversight contained in the omnibus bills, stating the bills were designed to encourage the extraction of natural resources in Canada. (U)

Approximately 90 domestic events occurred across Canada today. The updated event summary below does not contain information previously reported in this morning's Daily Situation Report. (U)

There were also numerous international events today in support of the Idle No More call for a World Day of Action, in cities such as Boston, Massachusetts, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, Houston, Texas, Anchorage, Alaska, London, England, and Paris France. (U)

There are no anticipated events scheduled for tomorrow, January 29th. (U)

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-31
Time: 1300 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement since December 10, 2012. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, a list of known events being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until February 6th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

Idle No More events will continue sporadically throughout the month of February, with another potentially large rally being planned for Ottawa towards the end of the month.

Information received indicates there are eight events planned for today, January 31st in the provinces of Alberta (AB), British Columbia (BC), Manitoba (MB), ON, and Saskatchewan (SK). These activities include rallies in AB and BC; a POWWOW and a traffic slowdown in ON; and a demonstration along a highway in SK. (U) There are two events – an information session (teach-in) in AB and a traffic slowdown in ON – organized for February 1st. (U)

There are seven events planned up to February 6th in AB, BC, and Newfoundland (NL). These activities include meetings and rallies in AB; rallies and a walk in BC; and a protest on the Trans Labrador Highway in NL. The link between the event in Labrador and the INM movement is unconfirmed. (U)

RCMP Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-17

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety.

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian events, a list of known events being organized, as well as events planned until January 24. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place.

A number of demonstrations, traffic disruptions, as well as highway and rail blockades, intended to cause economic disruption and raise awareness of Aboriginal issues, took place across Canada as part of the "National Day of Action" on January 16. Though many of yesterday's events took place under the Idle No More (INM) banner, INM organizers maintain they do not support blockades of railways and international bridges as well as economic disruption. Protestors blocked rail lines in Ontario, Manitoba, and British Columbia, resulting in delays to both passenger and freight traffic; caused traffic slowdowns on major highways in several provinces; and, impacted cross-border traffic at international bridges, such as the Ambassador Bridge in Windsor and the Rainbow Bridge in Niagara Falls. For the most part, protests on January 16 were peaceful and without incident.

The INM movement continues to plan activities in the days leading up to its call for a Global Day of Action, on January 28, to coincide with the return of MPs to the House of Commons.

A total of five events are planned for January 17 in British Columbia (BC), New Brunswick (NB), Nova Scotia (NS), and Ontario (ON). These direct actions include educational sessions in BC and NB; a concert/rally in NS; a rally in ON; and, a week-long rally in BC.

There are several events planned to occur between January 18 and 24.

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-18

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety.

According to the Canadian Press, the Queen has expressed her concern over the health of Chief Theresa Spence; however, she has declined to intervene on Chief Spence's behalf, deferring the issue to the Governor General, her personal representative in Canada, and the Prime Minister. Chief Spence continues her campaign for a meeting between all Chiefs and the Prime Minister and Governor General, despite pleas from supporters and other Chiefs to focus on her health and conclude her liquids-only diet.

These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place.

During an interview with Radio-Canada on Saturday January 18, Chief Theresa Spence reiterated her desire to pursue her hunger strike, despite pleas from supporters, until a "nation-to-nation" dialogue has been initiated. Chief Spence confirmed such a meeting would have to include the Prime Minister, the Governor General, as well as First Nations representatives in order to include all "historical treaties partners". According to media reports, the Assembly of First Nations (AFN) continue to request a meeting "nation-to-nation", to be held on January 24, 2013, despite AFN National Chief Shawn Atleo's sick leave.

These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place.

Supporters continue to urge Chief Spence to end her campaign, declaring that she has gained several victories. Chief Spence is reportedly in negotiations to end her hunger strike, possibly by the end of January 24. Her conditions include a commitment from leaders of the Opposition to continue to fight the omnibus budget legislation, as well as press the federal government to move forward on the action plan drafted by the AFN as a result of the meeting on January 11.

There were no events which occurred today, January 23.

These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place.

Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence and Raymond Robinson, an elder from the Cross Lake Nation in Manitoba, officially announced the end of their hunger strikes at a press conference held on Victoria Island in Ottawa. An agreement to end Chief Spence's hunger strike was reached after negotiations with representatives of the AFN and the federal opposition who agreed to endorse a 13-point declaration, including a call for a meeting between First Nation leaders, the Prime Minister, and the Governor General.

National Chief Shawn Atleo is in Vancouver to attend a meeting of BC Chiefs, and will hold a press conference, along with other AFN leaders, later today, January 24.

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-25

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement since December 10, 2012.

This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, a list of known events being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until January 28th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place.

Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence ended her protest on Thursday, January 24, after other chiefs and federal opposition parties promised to take up her cause. The spokesman for Chief Spence vowed that the struggle would continue, despite the end her hunger strike. Similarly, New Democrat MP Romeo Saganash noted that the Prime Minister will see increasing levels of pressure as a result of the INM campaign, including events planned across the nation for Monday, January 28th.

National Chief Shawn Atleo held a press conference on January 24th where he renewed his call for the federal government to continue to work with the Aboriginal Chiefs on issues like poverty, education and violence against women. He also praised the efforts of those partaking in Idle No More in raising the issues to the Canadian public.

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-28

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement since December 10, 2012.

A large volume of events are expected to occur for January 28. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place.

Demonstrations and solidarity protests in support of Idle No More's (INM) World Day of Action will take place in at least 30 cities across Canada and in various countries, worldwide. In Canada, these protests coincide with the return of Members of Parliament (MPs) to the House of Commons, where the federal government is expected to face a renewed push to raise the prominence of Aboriginal Issues on the government's agenda. In fact, NDP MP Romeo Saganash will be introducing a private member's bill today requesting that the government ensure Canada's laws are consistent with the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

National Aboriginal Demonstrations and Protests

Situational Awareness Report for January 28th 2013

Introduction:

This report provides situational awareness surrounding some of the issues and circumstances concerning Idle No More (INM) activities and protests planned for January 28, 2013.

The INM movement started with teach-ins, rallies and demonstrations in early December 2012 to educate Aboriginal peoples, and the rest of the Canadian citizenry, about the Conservative Government's omnibus bill. Bill C-45 introduced numerous legislative changes that would affect the environment, the Indian Act, as well as other federal legislation impacting on Aboriginal peoples. The INM grassroots movement is challenging not only the federal government policies, but political organizations such as the Assembly of First Nations as well. Since the beginning of INM activities, the INM banner has been used to organize more active protests, such as blockades of railways, highways, roadways, and international bridges, despite attempts by the INM organizers to distance themselves from a more disruptive approach.

Significant protest days occurred on January 5, 11, and 16, 2013. Protests on these days went beyond flash mobs and round dances and demonstrations, to include slowdowns and blockades (both partial and full) of ports of entry (such as ferries, international bridges), significant major highways, railways, and inter-provincial bridges. While most events since the beginning of INM activities have been peaceful, a few single events during significant protest days resulted in heightened tensions.

A meeting was held with the AFN leadership and the Prime Minister on January 11, 2013 where the issues of treaty relationships, aboriginal rights, and economic development were discussed. Following this meeting, the AFN representatives presented the Prime Minister with an eight-point action plan summarizing their interpretation of agreements reached at this meeting. Following the summit of Chiefs in British Columbia on January 24, 2013, National Chief Shawn Atleo vowed to keep pressure on the federal government to work with the AFN toward resolving issues such as poverty, education and violence against women, as well as address treaty rights, land claims and resource sharing.

INM has called for a World Day of Action on January 28, 2013 to coincide with the return of Canadian MPs to the House of Commons.

Potential areas of concern for January 28th demonstrations

Of the 39 events planned for January 28, 2013 (reported in the Daily Situation Report) approximately 36% (14 of 39) of these involve plans for rail/road disruptions. The remaining 64% (25 of 39) are reported to be protests, marches, rallies, cultural ceremonies, teach-ins and other information sessions, and flash mob/round dance activities.

No reported events are planned for locations where blockades have occurred since the beginning of January 2013 and which have the most potential to provoke reactions, either from private industry or the public. Past events include CN/CP rails across the country, major highways such as the QEII outside Edmonton, or Highway 63 to the Alberta oils sands, or international bridges.

The Enbridge hearings on the Northern Gateway Pipeline have proven to be fertile grounds for public protest, resulting in the arrest of five protestors (not part of INM) in Vancouver. INM protestors are including the hearings in Kelowna on their list of protest sites for January 28, 2013.

1) Steps taken by the private sector (such as CN/CP, oil and gas, commercial trucking) to ensure continuation of business in response to blockades on railways, highways, roadways, and bridges.

The Sarnia blockade, and the criticism of law enforcement agencies in the application of an injunction to halt a railway blockade issued by the Ontario Superior Court, may lead to additional pressure by third parties on law enforcement agencies to dismantle future blockades in a more timely fashion.

There have been several events across Canada since December 10, 2012 that have led third parties to seek judicial injunctions in order to force the dismantlement of rail/bridges blockade by Idle No More protesters. The majority of these activities were peaceful.

Potential criminal acts involving railways

Currently, there are two reported planned rail blockades for January 28, 2013: one in White River, Ontario and one on the Muskowekwan First Nation reserve in Saskatchewan. Information received indicates that protestors in White River are being proactive and seeking cooperation of CP Rail to slow trains passing through the community. The following represents activities which have occurred at previous INM events and could potentially present themselves again on January 28, 2013:

Rail blockades and court injunctions

Canadian National Rail, and to a lesser extent Canadian Pacific Rail, obtained injunctions to remove protestors from rail lines in Kitwanga, BC, Portage La Prairie, MB, Sarnia, ON, Shannonville/Kingston, ON, and Adamsville, NB. While none of these events have resulted in significant violent incidents, there exists a potential for onsite tensions as a result of serving court injunctions and the subsequent enforcement by authorities.

2) Risk of counter protest

Highway blockades have a potential for becoming flash points for aggressive actions on the part of the public against the protestors.

The following are two examples of such events which may have escalated into further aggressiveness or violence:

During the January 16th protest on the QEII highway outside of Edmonton, the major north-south corridor between Edmonton and Calgary, members of the public clashed with protestors who had blocked all three lanes of traffic. According to media reports, one vehicle drove around protestors on the median, and another attempted to force its way through the blockade, and was met with resistance from the protestors. At the same site, a counter-protestor arrived carrying a sign saying "Reserves are Canada's Spoiled Children" and argued with protestors over who owned the highway.

A blockade on January 16, 2013 of the Trans Labrador Highway prevented commercial trucks from travelling to and from Goose Bay, and barred workers and freight from reaching Muskrat Falls, a hydro-electric project in Labrador. During the protest, a driver of a commercial transport truck briefly exchanged heated words with protestors, tore up the information pamphlet he had received, and threatened to drive his truck through the group if they did not let him pass. He later apologized for the comment, and was allowed to proceed on his way.

Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement since December 10, 2012. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned events in Canada being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until February 8th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

As previously reported, on January 25, 2013 CN requested and received province-wide injunctions relating to Aboriginal blockades that may occur in three Western provinces, including Saskatchewan (SK). On January 28th, it was reported that some members of the Muskowekwan FN were served a court injunction banning them from blocking the CN rail line near Lestock, SK; as a result, approximately 10 protestors conducted an information picket on nearby highway 15 instead. (A)

Information received indicates there are two events planned for today, February 1st, in the provinces of Alberta (AB) and Ontario (ON), consisting of an information session (teach-in) and a traffic slowdown. There are five events organized for February 2nd in AB, British Columbia (BC), and Newfoundland and Labrador (NL). (U)

There are eight events planned up to February 8th in AB, BC, ON, Quebec (QC), and SK. These activities include meetings and rallies in AB, BC, ON, and QC as well as a highway and railway blockade near Lestock, SK. (U)

OVERVIEW:

In late January, CN requested and received a province-wide injunction relating to Aboriginal blockades in this province. Members of this group were served with an injunction on January 28th when they attempted to block the rail lines in this same area. (U)

The Idle No More (INM) movement continues to attract other activist groups to its cause: anti-nuclear activists, along with INM protestors, demonstrated outside a nuclear processing facility in Toronto, Ontario on February 3rd. According to one anti-nuclear activist, anti-nuclear issues now belong with the INM movement. (U)

Information received indicates there is one event planned for today, February 4th – the blockade of the CN rail at Lestock, SK. There is one event organized for February 5th – a rally and round dance in Calgary, Alberta (AB). (U)

There are 15 events planned up to Saturday, February 9th in AB, British Columbia (BC), Newfoundland and Labrador (NL), Ontario (ON), Quebec (QC), and SK. These activities include rallies, a march, and a round dance in AB; rallies and a flash mob/bone game ritual in BC; a highway protest in NL; a round dance in ON; meetings and rallies in QC; and, a demonstration in SK. Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. Since December 10th, 2012, approximately 775 events have been recorded at the national level. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned events in Canada being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until February 15th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

According to media reports, INM local protesters were excluded from the afternoon consultation meeting for the "Canada-First Nations Joint-Action Plan on Education" that took place on February 11th in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan (SK). As a result, INM founders have asked the Assembly of First Nations (AFN) National Chief Shawn Atleo to decline the acceptance of an impending "Indspire Award for Education" scheduled to be received on February 15th in Saskatoon, SK.

Reports received indicate there is only one (1) event organized for February 12th in British Columbia (BC), consisting of a rally. (U)

There are four (4) events planned for February 13th in Alberta (AB) and Ontario (ON), which would include possible blockades and information sessions.

There are 31 events planned for February 14th and February 15th. there is a new call for a national day of action on February 14th, to coincide with the Missing and Murdered Aboriginal Women Awareness Day. Events of solidarity are currently planned in AB, BC, Manitoba (MB), ON, Quebec (QC) and SK. These events include blockades, rallies, peaceful demonstrations, candlelight vigils and information sessions. (U)

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-02-13
Time: 1300 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. Since December 10th, 2012, approximately 782 events have been recorded at the national level. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned events in Canada being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until February 15th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

INM events of solidarity of the "2013 Memorial March for Missing & Murdered Women", will take place in Alberta (AB), British Columbia (BC), Manitoba (MB), Ontario (ON), Quebec (QC) and Saskatchewan (SK) on February 14th. These events include blockades, rallies, candlelight vigils and information sessions. Peaceful demonstrations are also planned at the Kingston Police Service and the Toronto Police Service headquarters. (U)

According to media reports, INM founders have called for a national day of action on February 14th. Events across the country are intended to raise public awareness of violence against women. The first "Women's Memorial March" was held on February 14, 1991 in Vancouver, BC, following the murder of an Aboriginal woman in Downtown East Vancouver. (U)

Reports received indicate there are seven (7) events organized for February 13th in AB, MB, ON and SK consisting of possible blockades and information sessions. (U)

There are 32 events planned for February 14th. (U)

There are two (2) information sessions planned for February 15th in ON and SK. (U)

RCMP Daily Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-02-18
Time: 1300 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. Since December 10th, 2012, approximately 818 events have been recorded at the national level. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned events in Canada being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until February 22th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

As previously reported, a partial blockade by Attawapiskat FN members, on the ice road leading to De Beer diamond mine in Northern Ontario, has been ongoing since February 10th, 2013. According to reports, an injunction was obtained on February 15th by the operator of the mine. Despite Chief Theresa Spence forbidding access to the community, the injunction was hand-delivered to a small group of protesters by a sheriff accompanied by OPP officers, on February 17th. According to reports, protesters warned the situation could escalate. (A)

there is a call for a national day of teach-ins on February 21st to coincide with the "National Indigenous Rights Education Day". Locations of planned events have not been announced by INM organizers. (U)

There are two (2) rallies planned for today, February 18th in Ottawa, Ontario (ON). (U)

There is only one (1) event planned for February 19th, consisting of an information session in Alberta (AB). (U)

There are currently three (3) events planned from February 20th to February 22nd, consisting of an information session in AB, a teach-in in British Columbia (BC) and a rally in Saskatchewan (SK). (U) members of the Muskowekwan FN are planning another rail/road blockade at the Watrous Sub outside Lestock, Saskatchewan (SK) which could last 24 hours. In late January, CN requested and received a province-wide injunction relating to Aboriginal blockades in this province.

These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place.

The Idle No More (INM) movement continues to attract other activist groups to its cause: anti-nuclear activists, along with INM protestors, were demonstrating outside a nuclear processing facility in Toronto, Ontario on February 3rd. According to one anti-nuclear activist, anti-nuclear issues now belong with the INM movement.

RCMP Weekly Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-03-22
Time: 1300 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, D/Comm. Doug Lang, Chief Supt. Tonia Enger, A. DG NAPS/CPS Michael Lesage, Supt. Warren Coons, Daniel Lavoie, CM Francois Mathieu, Liam Price

PURPOSE:

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. (U) These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. Since December 10th, 2012, approximately 871 events have been recorded at the national level. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported planned events in Canada being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until March 29th. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing. In addition, the RCMP has not confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW:

According to media reports, INM founders along with numerous First Nations Chiefs have announced their alliance with an organization referred to as "Defenders of the Land" (DoL). In a joint declaration published on March 18th, representatives for both organizations disclosed a new course of non-violent actions (including economic disruption and civil disobedience) which will be organized under a new banner called "Sovereignty Summer". (U)

Local events are at planning stages in BC, Alberta (AB) and MB for April, May and June 2013. According to reports, some events will be targeting resource development projects involving pipelines, tar sands, natural gas, fisheries or mines. (A)

In the short term, events coinciding with the World Water Day will be held today, March 22nd, 2013. Twelve events are reported in AB, BC, MB and Ontario (ON), consisting of rallies, teach-ins and cultural ceremonies. There are also four (4) events planned for March 23rd, consisting of teach-ins and a rally in AB, BC, ON and Saskatchewan (SK). There are three (3) events planned between March 24th and March 29th. (A)

OVERVIEW:

Events are being planned, locally, in British Columbia (BC), Alberta (AB) and Manitoba (MB) for April, May and June 2013. According to reports, some events will be targeting resource development projects involving pipelines, tar sands, natural gas, fisheries or mines. (A)

On April 5, 2013, a traffic blockade on the Trans-Labrador Highway led to eight arrests by RCMP members of the Happy Valley Goose Bay Detachment. Despite mediation attempts (between 0530 and 0830 hrs), approximately 15 protesters from the NunatuKavut community were uncooperative when asked to stop interfering with traffic near the Muskrat Falls Hydroelectric project. Former Labrador Liberal MP Todd Russell was identified by the media as the main organizer

According to media reports, this event was not sponsored by or associated with INM. (A)

Aboriginal-based issues demonstrations are being planned in AB, BC and Ontario (ON), on April 21 and April 22, the latter coinciding with International Earth Day. This environmental day of action would include peaceful actions in 170 countries to bring attention to global ecological issues. (U)

PURPOSE:

Since December 2012, there have been numerous reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support of Aboriginal-based issues, the majority of which have been organized under the "Idle No More" (INM) banner. Approximately 907 events have being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. (A)

Until April 2013, the scope of monitoring and reporting included events or issues linked to INM. The spring of 2013 has been marked by an evolution in terms of aboriginal protests whereby INM-specific events have abated and land sovereignty / environmental protests that are not necessarily associated with INM have emerged. As a result, associations of convenience have occurred between INM and other organizations. These associations blur the line between INM-sponsored events, and activities from other groups or movements. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported and planned events in Canada being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until April 26, 2013. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing

In addition, the RCMP has not confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

PURPOSE:

Since December 2012, there have been numerous reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support of Aboriginal-based issues, the majority of which have been organized under the "Idle No More" (INM) banner. Approximately 922 events have being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness as well as public and police officer safety. (A)

This report will provide a summary of reported and planned events in Canada being organized within the next 24 hours, as well as events planned until May 3, 2013. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing

In addition, the RCMP has not confirmed that these events have actually taken place. (U)

OVERVIEW OF EVENTS:

According to reports, some events in the coming months will be targeting resource development projects involving pipelines, tar sands, natural gas, fisheries or mines. (A)

June is National Aboriginal History Month in Canada, as recognized by the House of Commons in 2010. Actions are expected to occur in various provinces during that month. However, specific events have not been disclosed, with one exception: "National Aboriginal Solidarity Day" on June 21, 2013. There is a specific call for actions coinciding with this date, and it is reported that events are currently being planned for Manitoba and British Columbia. (A)

In the short term, there are three (3) events (a protest and teach-ins) reported to occur between April 26 and April 28 in Ontario and British Columbia. Reports indicate there are three (3) events planned to occur between April 29 and May 3, in British Columbia, Manitoba and Quebec consisting of a protest and teach-ins. (A)

EMERGENT ISSUES:

The following issues pose a potential for a prolonged occupation of two sites located in British Columbia and Ontario:

Unis'tot'en Action Camp, British Columbia

According to reports, the construction of "Unis'tot'en Resistance/Action Camp" along the Morice River near Smithers, British Columbia, will take place between May 6 and May 24, 2013. Since 2010, ecological and aboriginal protesters have erected this camp in opposition to tar sands and pipeline projects into the Wet'suwet'en traditional territory. Protesters associated with "Idle No More – British Columbia (INMBC)" and "Deep Green Resistance (DGR)" are expected to participate in this event. Of note, this site is already being occupied by a number of sympathizers. (A)

Springwater Provincial Park, Ontario

Anishinaabe FN members have been occupying the Springwater Provincial Park near Barrie, Ontario, since April 1, 2013. Protesters are in opposition to the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources' decision to close the park under the premise that they were not consulted, and claim that this violates their treaty rights. The number of protesters at this location is currently unknown. (A)

RCMP Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-01-16

There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" (INM) Aboriginal-based solidarity movement. These protests are being monitored for RCMP senior management situational awareness and public and police officer safety.

A large volume of events are expected for January 16. This report concerns today's events only. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing, nor is it confirmed that these events have actually taken place.

Demonstrations, traffic disruptions, as well as highway and rail blockades are occurring across Canada today, in support of the Idle No More Movement. These events are intended to cause economic disruption and raise awareness of Aboriginal issues. According to media reports, Chiefs and organizers have called for peaceful demonstrations, and will not condone violence.

One of the larger demonstrations in Ontario is occurring at the Ambassador Bridge in Windsor, where up to 1000 participants are expected. This event is in support of the First Nation leadership, not a part of the INM protests, Media reports indicate that organizers will not block the bridge but instead plan to hold a peaceful march, ending in a rally with speeches and a round dance. Reportedly, the Bridge Authority served an injunction forbidding protestors from blocking access to the bridge, but allowed them access to an area adjacent to the Bridge to conduct their ceremonies and speeches. Protestors are expected to include members of local Unions, the CAW, and Occupy Canada.

According to the media, Chief Theresa Spence has renewed her demand for the Governor General and the Prime Minister to meet with all First Nations chiefs on January 24, the first anniversary of the Crown-First Nations gathering. Information suggests that Chief Spence is continuing her hunger strike, despite the efforts of her supporters and various chiefs to convince her to end it, in an effort to attract international attention.

Hearings into the Enbridge Northern Gateway Project will continue across the province of British Columbia (BC) for the next few weeks. Ongoing protests against this project have merged with the Idle No More movement, with the changes to federal environmental laws arising as a common focal point for the two groups. Some BC First Nations groups travelled great distances to join these protests in Vancouver.

Reports indicate there are close to 70 events planned across Canada today.

RCMP Weekly Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-06-20
Time: 1500 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, A/Comm. Janice Armstrong, C/Supt. Byron Boucher, C/Supt. Warren Coons, C/Supt. Tonia Enger, Supt. Tyler Bates, Insp. Michael Lesage, Mr. Daniel Lavoie, Mr. François Mathieu, Mr. Liam Price

PURPOSE:

Since December 2012, there have been numerous reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support of Aboriginal-based issues, the majority of which have been organized under the "Idle No More" (INM) banner. (A)

This report provides a summary of reported and planned events in Canada to take place between June 21 and June 28, 2013. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing

OVERVIEW OF EVENTS:

Numerous peaceful celebration events coinciding with the "National Aboriginal Day" are being reported across Canada for tomorrow, June 21, 2013. Approximately 2,000 participants are expected to converge at 1200hrs for the "Million First Peoples March" on Parliament Hill, in Ottawa. According to reports, since the declaration of the National Aboriginal Day in 1996, no incidents of violence have been reported during these celebrations. However, traffic interruptions in the National Capital Region should be expected. (A)

The national founders of INM are currently organizing a "Grassroots Forum" to be held at the Wanuskewin Heritage Park in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, on June 29 and 30. There was also a call out on May 25, 2013, from national founders of INM to gather at and occupy symbolic locations in various cities across Canada, at least once per week, leading into the "Sovereignty Summer". No events of that nature have been reported thus far. (A)

Reports indicate there are 46 events[1] planned to occur in Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec and Saskatchewan on June 21. The vast majority of these events are expected to be peaceful gatherings consisting of cultural ceremonies. In addition, reports indicate that several protests are being planned for major cities across Canada, such as Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

There are also seven (7) events planned between June 22 and June 28 in Alberta, Newfoundland & Labrador and Ontario consisting of cultural ceremonies, rallies and a conference.

EMERGENT ISSUES:

The following issues have resulted in increased tensions and could lead to prolonged protests, potentially significant in nature.

Blockade of Enbridge Line 9 pumping station near Hamilton, Ontario

A group of approximately 80 protestors, including representatives from Six Nations of the Grand River, have shut down construction and locked the gates at the Enbridge Line 9 pumping station in Westover, just outside of Hamilton, Ontario. Workers are, however, being permitted to access the facility to conduct safety checks. Protestors have set up tents and plan to occupy the area for several days. This action is in protest to Enbridge's plans to reverse the flow in the pipeline (Line 9B), which runs from Montreal to Westover. The pipeline crosses the territories of several First Nations along its route. Protestors are concerned about the environmental impact of this project, claiming the reversal will increase the risk of spills at terminals and pumping stations. (U)

Anti-shale gas protests near Moncton, New Brunswick

In early June, SWN Resources Canada began seismic testing to determine the viability of shale gas deposits outside of Moncton, New Brunswick. Area residents, including members of the Elsipogtog First Nation, concerned about the negative effects of the hydraulic-fracturing (fracking) process on local water supplies, began protesting shortly afterward. There have been daily anti-shale gas protests on Hwy 126, near the exploration site since early June. Since June 5, there have been 21 arrests for obstruction and mischief.

According to reports, no protest activity took place today, June 20, 2013; however, 50 protestors remain on site. (A)

EMERGENT ISSUES:

The following issue poses a potential for increased tensions that could lead to a prolonged occupation of a site located in British Columbia.

Wet'suwet'en FN, British Columbia (Huckleberry Mine)
According to media reports, Chief Karen Ogen from the Wet'suwet'en FN stated that due to the lack of job opportunities, the community will attempt to stop the current expansion project by Imperial Metals Corporation at the Huckleberry copper mine. Chef Ogen declared that a forest service road passing through their territory could be the "focus of future direct action".

RCMP Weekly Situation Report – Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Date: 2013-06-14
Time: 1300 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, A/Comm. Janice Armstrong, C/Supt. Byron Boucher, C/Supt. Warren Coons, C/Supt. Tonia Enger, Supt. Tyler Bates, Insp. Michael Lesage, Mr. Daniel Lavoie, Mr. François Mathieu, Mr. Liam Price

PURPOSE:

Since December 2012, there have been numerous reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support of Aboriginal-based issues, the majority of which have been organized under the "Idle No More" (INM) banner. (A)

This report provides a summary of reported and planned events in Canada to take place between June 14 and June 21, 2013. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing

OVERVIEW OF EVENTS:

Several events coinciding with the "National Aboriginal Solidarity Day" are being planned for next Friday, June 21, in British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. The national founders of INM are currently organizing a "Grassroots Forum" to be held at the Wanuskewin Heritage Park in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, on June 29 and 30. There is also a call out from national founders of INM to engage in a gathering and occupation at least once per week in various cities across Canada, leading into the "Sovereignty Summer". (U)

Reports indicate there are ten (10) events planned to occur between June 14 and June 21 in British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Ontario, and Quebec, including rallies, protest marches/walks, cultural celebrations and a conference. Several events, some of which began weeks ago, are expected to culminate/converge at the Million First Peoples March on Parliament Hill in Ottawa on June 21. (A)

EMERGENT ISSUES:

The following issue has resulted in increased tensions and could lead to prolonged protests, potentially significant in nature.

Anti-shale gas protests near Moncton, New Brunswick

In early June, SWN Resources Canada began seismic testing to determine the viability of shale gas deposits outside of Moncton, New Brunswick. Area residents, including members of the Elsipogtog First Nation, concerned about the negative effects of the hydraulic-fracturing (fracking) process on

RCMP Weekly Situation Report – National Aboriginal Protests and Demonstrations

Date: 2013-06-28
Time: 1300 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463
Dissemination List: D/Comm. Mike Cabana, A/Comm. Janice Armstrong, C/Supt. Byron Boucher, C/Supt. Warren Coons, C/Supt. Tonia Enger, Supt. Tyler Bates, Insp. Michael Lesage, Mr. Daniel Lavoie, Mr. François Mathieu, Mr. Liam Price

PURPOSE:

Since December 2012, there have been numerous reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support of Aboriginal-based issues, the majority of which have been organized under the "Idle No More" (INM) banner. As of June 2013, events are now reported as being part of "Sovereignty Summer", which is described as a "campaign of coordinated direct actions" organized by INM and Defenders of the Land (DoL) to promote Aboriginal rights and environmental protection. (A)

This situation report will provide a summary of reported and planned events in Canada that are ongoing or are taking place up to July 5, 2013. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing

OVERVIEW OF EVENTS:

There are currently two national calls for actions on July 1 (Canada Day)
the "National Stop Harper Campaign" and "Reclaiming Traditional Territories". Organizers have stated that INM, the American Indian Movement (AIM) and the Occupy movement are collaborating to coordinate events. INM national founders are sponsoring these demonstrations. However, events are only being reported for British Columbia. (A)

A national call for support of the Elsipogtog FN, in New Brunswick, was initiated by INM and other organizations, such as left-wing and environmental activists. According to reports, prolonged protests in New Brunswick have resulted in increased tensions with law enforcement personnel. (A)

In addition, INM national founders initiated a call for action against Enbridge Line 9, following the occupation that occurred at Enbridge's North Westover facility in Ontario. It is reported that Enbridge raised concerns for more potential protest activities at the Cardinal station (located at the intersection of Hwy 401 and 416) and at the Port Hope station. (A)

Reports indicate there are 15 events planned to occur between June 28 and July 5, consisting of rallies and cultural ceremonies in Alberta, British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec. (A)

This document is the property of the RCMP. It is loaned to your agency/department in confidence and it is not to be reclassified, copied, reproduced, used or further disseminated, in whole or part, without the consent of the originator. EMERGENT ISSUES:

The following issues have resulted in increased tensions and could lead to prolonged protests, potentially significant in nature. (A)

Blockade of Enbridge Line 9 pumping station near Hamilton, Ontario

On June 26, at approximately 0700hrs, Hamilton Police Service entered the compound and proceeded to arrest 18 protestors. According to reports, the majority of demonstrators were fined with Trespassing and later released, while five (5) individuals were criminally charged with Mischief.

Anti-shale gas protests near Moncton, New Brunswick

The Elsipogtog FN and INM national founders issued a "call out" to all supporters, following a weekend of protests and arrests, to participate in actions to prevent seismic testing for shale gas deposits by SWN Resources. Protestors have been demonstrating against the shale gas industry in New Brunswick on various local highways as well as at constituency offices of federal politicians, since the beginning of June. Since June 5, 2013, 31 protestors have been arrested for mischief and/or obstruction during anti-shale gas protests. SWN Resources Canada advised that surveying and seismic testing will be halted until further notice. According to reports, protestors moved their sacred fire/camp site from Hwy 126 to a new site located at Crossman Road (intersection of Hwy 116 and Aldouane Rd.). According to media reports, Chief Aaron Sock of Elsipogtog FN recently contacted the Chairperson of the United Nations Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UN-EMRIP) in regards to "security concerns" at recent protests. The UN-EMRIP told the media that no UN observers were currently on assignment in Canada. However, local leadership has assigned individuals, referred to as "Peacekeepers", to maintain peace at the protest camp, to act as mediators with the RCMP and to compile reports on protests activities. there is no information to corroborate that INM national founders are sponsoring these demonstrations. (A)

Reports indicate there are 12 events planned to occur in Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario on June 25. These protests are in solidarity with the occupation of Enbridge's North Westover. (A)

EMERGENT ISSUES:

The following issues have resulted in increased tensions and could lead to prolonged protests, potentially significant in nature. (A)

Blockade of Enbridge Line 9 pumping station near Hamilton, Ontario

Since June 20, 2103, a group of approximately 80 protestors, including representatives from Six Nations of the Grand River, have shut down construction and locked the gates at the Enbridge Line 9 pumping station in Westover, just outside of Hamilton, Ontario. Protesters are camping on site in protest to Enbridge's plans to reverse the flow in the pipeline (Line 9B), which runs from Montreal to Westover. On June 21, 2013, an injunction "against unauthorized access to Enbridge property" was granted by Madam Justice Low of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice. this injunction was served to protestors by the Hamilton Police Service, today, June 25. In response, several demonstrators locked themselves to the gates of the facility.

According to reports, a number of altercations between the occupiers and residents of the area and Enbridge employees have also been reported. (A)

Anti-shale gas protests near Moncton, New Brunswick

The Elsipogtog FN and INM national founders issued a "call out" to all supporters, following a weekend of protests and arrests, to participate in actions to prevent seismic testing for shale gas deposits by SWN Resources. OVERVIEW OF EVENTS:

The occupation of the Enbridge Westover pumping station was dismantled by Hamilton Police Service on June 26, leading to 18 arrests. According to media reports, Enbridge did not observe any obvious signs of damage to its equipment and was able to quickly resume its operations. However, Enbridge raised concerns for more potential protest activities at the Cardinal station (located at the intersection of Hwy 401 and 416) and at the Port Hope station. (A)

According to preliminary reports, an event of unknown nature is potentially being planned by members of the Six Nations of the Grand River (SNGR) for today, June 27, at the Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada's (AANDC) regional office in Toronto. That event would be organized in opposition to the blockade dismantlement at the Westover facility. (A)

On June 21, 2013, an injunction "against unauthorized access to Enbridge property" was granted by Madam Justice Low of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice. According to reports, this injunction was served to protestors by the Hamilton Police Service on June 25. On June 26, at approximately 0700hrs, Hamilton Police Service entered the compound and proceeded to arrest 18 protestors. the majority of demonstrators were fined with Trespassing and later released, while five (5) individuals were criminally charged with Mischief.

Anti-shale gas protests near Moncton, New Brunswick

The Elsipogtog FN and INM national founders issued a "call out" to all supporters, following a weekend of protests and arrests, to participate in actions to prevent seismic testing for shale gas deposits by SWN Resources. Protestors have been demonstrating against the shale gas industry in New Brunswick on various local highways as well as at constituency offices of federal politicians, since the beginning of June. Since June 5, 2013, 31 protestors have been arrested for mischief and/or obstruction during anti-shale gas protests. According to reports, a shot-hole driller belonging to SWN Resources Canada was set on fire on June 25, in a wooded area near Bass River, New Brunswick. In addition, it was reported that several trees were cut down, intentionally blocking Route 490 near Fords Mills.

SWN Resources Canada advised that surveying and seismic testing will be halted until further notice.

- Any conference calls in the future will be event driven

Concluded events will be removed from the sit reps/map

Teleconference

Date: January 2, 2013

Monitor:

Participants:

Aboriginal Policing Bureau (APB)

RCMP – National Aboriginal Policing Services/Criminal Intelligence Analyst

PURPOSE:

- The purpose of the teleconference is to discuss planned actions in the province of Ontario over the next few days, the impact of these actions, and how best to respond to them.
- Will discuss the pending actions and possibility of blockades on Jan 5th
- Corporate communications – to ensure key messages are distributed
- Work with key external stakeholders

Agenda Items

1. Overview of Actions/Tactics to date;
2. Pending Actions;
3. Possibility of Border Blockades;

5. Information Management: Inputs, Analysis Outputs/Products
6. EOC Operations
7. ACIC - Consistent Responses
8. Key Messages for Idle No More
9. Key external stakeholders

Pending Actions

- Upcoming Events
    - Protest in Ogdensburg concluded. Included a partial blockade (but not commercial vehicles) and were distributing pamphlets
    - Sioux Lookout, not sure yet
    - Sault St. Marie/Espanola: 15 min traffic slowdowns every hour on the hour
    - Working with organizers has been successful
    - Mattagami FN planning a traffic slowdown for Jan 3 at 1200 hrs and 1600 hrs
    - Jan 5th: White River, traffic slowdown
    - Jan 7th: Nippissing FN planning an event near Hwy 17 near Christina Lane; bigger group expected
    - Jan 16th: Lake Helen FN outside Nippigon is planning some type of protest of CN railway and highway
    - Mattagami FN – event planned for Hwy 144; South Porcupine detachment
    - Kenora, boycotting stores

- January 5th – planned nationwide closure of border crossings
    - There are approximately 17 border crossings in Ontario linking Ontario to the US
    - Information is subject to change
    - Original call out came from BC
    - To confirm time of local events through organizers
    - are to be peaceful blockades

- Hwy 403/ Skyway Bridge: recent info suggests a blockade of the 403 or the Skyway bridge on Jan 5th; they are apparently taking a vote on the NET as to which location to choose
- Six Nations members are involved

Possible Border Blockades

Bridges:

- Seaway International Bridge – Cornwall
    - Talk about organizing something near Cornwall
- Blue Water Bridge – Sarnia
    - no plans to go on the actual bridge, but on Hwy 402 close to the bridge
- Peace Bridge – Fort Erie/Buffalo
    - There was a small protest 2 weeks ago and there were no issues
- International Falls Bridge – Fort Francis

Emergency Ops Centre (EOC)

- Dec 19/21 the EOC was enhanced with partners
- Monitor from GHQ EOC daily
- Enhancing EOC on Jan 5th depending on number and dynamic of events
- During enhancement in Dec, the EOC provided ongoing updates
- Briefing were every 4 hours
- EOC keeps an event log
- EOC can provide access to Geomatics
- EOC will go active at 0800 hrs on Jan 5th

Aboriginal Critical Incident Command Officers (ACIC)

- Will be having a conference call with CICs on Jan 3rd to ID critical incident commanders
- There is previous policy to rely on to determine organizational direction for CICs and to ensure a consistent approach
- Incident commanders will be assigned to all events and will evaluate on resource requirements and anticipated protests
- See what CICs are available to attend the various events
- NE region: expect traffic slowdowns and no great numbers
- Tyendinaga, Golden Lae, Akwesasne – expect events in these areas
- What is planned for public order members (POU).
    - Some operational plans may be building POU into their plans for contingency purposes, but that may not be consistent across the province
    - POU is being looked at only for availability in case they are required
    - POU is trained to keep crowds moving

Key External Stakeholders

- Transport Canada
- RCMP

Transport: Marc Labelle, TC surface intermodal

- All international bridges/tunnels, including federal railway crossings, into the US and domestic rail carriers near the border crossings
- Amtrac, CN, CP, CSX Rail, Union Pacific, TSA and US Dept of Justice
- TC have daily contact

RCMP

- Is providing situation reports but is not doing a National JIG; only compiling, no analysis

Teleconference with Transport Canada

Date: January 2, 2013
Monitors: Marc Labelle, TC and Dominique Lachard, TC

Participants:

Rail:

Omnitrax	J.D. Irving Ltd. (rail)
CP Rail	CN Rail / Chief Covey, CN
Union Pacific	VIA Rail
Irving Corp Security	Norfolk Southern Railway
CSX Corporation	NB Southern Railway
Railway Association of Canada

Bridges/Municipalities:

Ambassador Bridge Security	Windsor Detroit Tunnel
City of Windsor	Port of Windsor/Port of Authority
Blue Water Bridge	Niagara Falls Bridge Commission
Three Nations Crossing Bridge	Seaway International Bridge
Federal Bridge Corporation	Thousand Islands Bridge
Fort Francis Bridge	Sault Ste. Marie Bridge
Seaway Bridge	Thunder Bay
Peace Bridge

Govt. Agencies:

Transport Canada – various regions of Canada
Legal Services, TC
CBSA – Intelligence and enforcement
CSIS
Crown Corporation and Governance
Ministry of Transportation of Ontario (MTO)

Other:

US Dept. of Transport / TSA US Embassy

Law Enforcement:

RCMP – National Aboriginal Policing Services/Criminal Intelligence Analyst

PURPOSE:

- The purpose of the teleconference is to discuss planned action on Jan 5th at border crossings.
- This is an information-sharing forum for what we know is planned, looking at existing protests, plans and preparations for specific sites, and possible expansion to blockades and protests on Jan 5th

General information from Transport Canada

- TC is shoring up resource levels at the operations centre to accommodate the anticipated reporting on Saturday, Jan 5th
- Information will be shared with the community, with the permission of the Bridge operators
- Information will be shared within the railway industry and shared through the operations centre with other government agencies
- Report all incidents to Transport Canada's Secure line 1-866-827-3287, operating 24/7

Sarnia Update:

- protestors have been blocking CN lines for 13 days, with no movement to dismantle blockade
- Sarnia police are police of jurisdiction
- An interim injunction was issued and renewed
- Contempt of court discussions are today – CN, Sarnia PD, OPP are in court today

- Only way to remove blockade may be to enforce the injunction
- If situation flares up in Sarnia, it might affect everywhere else

Bridges:

Blue Water Bridge

- There are plans in place, especially with last week's incident
    - Traffic was diverted around protest; MTO assisted
- Planning for same thing on Saturday, Jan 5th
- Anticipate traffic blockade of traffic going to and coming from US at border crossing , but don't know exact location at this time
- Sarnia Bridge does not want protestors on their property or on the bridge
- From a planning perspective, things are going well

Peace Bridge

- Met with Niagara Regional police
- Had meeting with organizers who said no blockade was planned at the Peace Bridge
- Peace bridge allows one lane to be used for special events, like parades
- Will consider Jan 5th action, if there is any, to be a parade and allow them to use one lane to cross the bridge
- Not expecting any problems – a non-event in terms of traffic disruptions
- Signed an MOU with organizers and local Aboriginal community, and had all participants sign waivers

Sault Ste Marie Bridge

- Indicated they are not the list of proposed blockages
- Have only seen a little bit of pamphleting

Cornwall – Seaway International Bridge

- The situation is murky and fragmented, especially on the American side
- There are numerous agencies involved and therefore difficult to determine who has the lead for coordination
- There is a meeting with police agencies Jan 3rd
- If there is a protest on the Bridge proper, they would like to see all traffic diverted from that crossing
- Will be working with emergency groups, such as fire, nurses/doctors, to deal with emergency crossing on the Bridge
- Mohawk Council contacted local CBSA to confirm there will be a protest on Saturday
- Longhouse tribe in the US are organizing the event and a meeting will take place on Cornwall Island at the People's Fire Building, which was erected for these purposes
- Cornwall Police to lead incident command; not sure if Akwesasne police will be involved as incident command
- The role of the OPP is currently undefined
- Not clear what role State Troopers in New York State will be Ambassador Bridge / Windsor City, Tunnel and Port

- Operational plans are in place
- Wanted to know at what point police would intervene in protests if borders are closed

- Windsor City, Tunnel and Port are not anticipating any activity at the tunnel and have contingency plans in place in case of events

Niagara Falls Bridge Commission

- Have a meeting with various law enforcement agencies Jan 3rd
- Have contingency plans in place

Thousand Islands Bridge

- Will talk to law enforcement on regular basis

Railways:

Other Government Agencies

CBSA

- No additional information
- Preparing operational plans and media plans

Chief calls for peaceful protest
John Chilibeck and Cole Hobson Telegraph-Journal

The chief of Elsipogtog First Nation has called for peaceful and lawful protests against the shale gas industry following the arrest of three people.

Aaron Sock said in an emailed statement Thursday the protests on two days earlier this week were over seismic exploration within Mi'kmaq traditional territory, escalating tensions.

"I am requesting that any demonstrations that take place be done peacefully and lawfully," he wrote. "We must never be afraid to raise our voice to protect our rights and interests, yet we must have the resolve to do so peacefully. This is the spirit and intent of the treaties that our ancestors had the wisdom to contemplate and these values must be respected."

On Wednesday a group of roughly 100 people gathered on Highway 126 in southeastern New Brunswick between Moncton and Miramichi and blocked traffic where SWN Resources Canada was doing seismic testing. Traffic was diverted and slowed for about two hours. Three people were arrested.

The day before, protesters seized a vehicle owned by an SWN subcontractor, although authorities said that situation came to a peaceful resolution. No arrests were made.

Elsipogtog First Nation, formerly called Big Cove Band, is just east of the test area, but the 3,000 people from there consider it traditional Mi'kmaq territory.

Premier David Alward said Thursday it was important that work proceed in the controversial industry, which opponents fear could pollute the environment and drinking water sources.

"There will always be people that have concerns. Our responsibility is to be able to provide people with a level of confidence," he said, citing some of the work his Tory government had done over the last two years to ensure the industry is environmentally sound, including new regulations.

"They can have confidence we can develop our natural resources and provide jobs in New Brunswick so our young people don't have to go work out west in the same sectors that can exist here."

Green Party Leader David Coon said he supports demonstrations against the shale gas industry, as long as they are not violent. He compared the situation to civil disobedience that helped end the logging of old-growth forests in British Columbia in the 1990s and the fight for civil rights in the United States in the 1960s.

"It took a lot of courage on the part of people who showed up there to defend their communities," he said of the Elsipogtog protesters. "When people feel they are poorly served by their governments, they're going to defend the things that they love. They're trying to defend the well-being of their communities, their water, their environment and their health."

RCMP spokeswoman Cpl. Chantal Farrah said most of Wednesday's protest was peaceful, but certain demonstrators moved farther up the highway and crossed the line from legal protest to illegal activity.

"While there was no violence, some people were impeding the lawful operation of a business, when they went on the road in front of some heavy equipment doing work in that area," she said. "This is not only against the law, but very dangerous."

Farrah said many RCMP members spoke with protesters to let them know what they could and couldn't do, but a few people refused to listen and were subsequently arrested.

A man and a woman were arrested for mischief and are scheduled to appear in court at a later date, while a 16-year-old male was arrested for obstructing a police officer. All were later released.

In an emailed statement, officials with SWN Resources Canada said they "applaud Chief Aaron Sock's leadership and support his call for peaceful and law-abiding expression of views."

"We hope that people can safely and openly express themselves while allowing our work to continue in accordance with the licences and permits granted to us by government," the statement said.

"SWN Resources Canada is confident that if a commercially viable resource exists, then relationships with First Nations will be integral to achieving a goal of safe and responsible development in the province that First Nations can proudly participate in without compromising their rights, values and traditions."

SWN is doing about 210 kilometres of seismic imaging in various parts of Kent County. The majority of its program is expected to be on Crown land or Department of Transportation right of way. The work is expected to be completed within three months.

Four lines are being explored on the summer project, all in the Rogersville area north of Moncton.

Sto:lo predict violence on the Fraser if Ottawa approve treaty with rival
The federal government risks a bloody summer of discontent on the Fraser River if it ratifies a treaty with the tiny Yale First Nation, leaders of the larger Sto:lo Nation told a parliamentary committee Tuesday. A bill before the House of Commons would enact the treaty, ratified in the B.C. Legislature in 2011, and transfer roughly $13 million and almost 2,000 hectares of land to a band of about 150 people living 175 kilometres east of Vancouver, But leaders of 19 of 24 Sto:lo bands living along or near the Fraser River and its tributaries told MPs that the treaty and a fishing agreement linked to the treaty violate the rights of an estimated 10,000 on- and off-reserve Sto:lo members. "I fear the terrifying experience that's on the horizon for us," Sto:lo Nation Grand Chief Joe Hall, representing 11 Sto:lo bands, told MPs. "There has been conflict on the river, there's been bloodshed on the river. This is a serious issue. The Sto:lo have a long history of protecting their rights and title." He noted the Sto:lo have in the past blocked the two rail lines that cross its territory to Metro Vancouver. "The Sto:lo are not going to sit back." Sto:lo Tribal Council Grand Chief Doug Kelly, representing eight bands, predicted "altercations and violence." He said his members won't attack Yale members, who he and Hall insisted are part of the same Sto:lo "family." But he said his members will stand up to federal fisheries officers and RCMP who act on behalf of the Yale members. Neither Hope nor the First Nation's only two councillors, Evert Hope and Theodore Hope, were available for comment Tuesday. The federal government said the solution is for all sides to keep talking. Subject: Shale gas truck seized by 'native warriors' in N.B. (CBC, 2013-06-04 1429)

Shale gas truck seized by 'native warriors' in N.B.
Elsipogtog First Nation council opposes shale gas exploration, chief says
A shale gas exploration company's service vehicle was surrounded and seized by a group of self-described native warriors near Elsipogtog First Nation in New Brunswick on Tuesday, RCMP say.
The truck driver was confronted at a gas bar along Route 116 during the lunch hour, police said, referring to it as a peaceful incident.
RCMP would not confirm who owns the truck, but it has a Stantec logo on its doors. Stantec is a Fredericton-based engineering firm doing work for SWN Resources Canada, a major industry player in the province.
Elsipogtog Chief Aaron Sock had said earlier in the day his council does not welcome SWN's seismic testing in New Brunswick.
SWN spokeswoman Tracey Stephenson described the incident as a "security event" involving one the company's subcontractors.
"The safety of our employees and subcontractors is our top priority and while we cannot speak to the details of this security event we can confirm that people and equipment are safe," Stephenson stated in an email.
RCMP moved the truck to their detachment "to keep it safe."
John Levi, a warrior chief in the community, then parked his truck behind the Stantec truck, blocking it in.
Officers were speaking to Levi and a couple of other men, as about 20 other people milled about outside.
RCMP are monitoring the situation, which remains peaceful, Cpl. Chantal Farrah told CBC News.
"As police, we support anyone's rights to hold a peaceful and lawful demonstration, but things need to remain peaceful and lawful," Farrah said.
"That is very important and for us as a police agency. We have to balance our security operations with individuals' rights and freedoms in order to maintain public safety, peace and good order," she said.
It's unclear how long the Stantec truck will remain at the RCMP office.
Meanwhile, an aboriginal consulting firm in the province is supporting SWN Resources Canada and its seismic testing program in Kent County this summer.
Chief to Chief Consulting Group has been hired by SWN to monitor its work as it continues exploring for shale gas.
Stephen Sewell, a director of the firm and a member of the Pabineau First Nation, said employees will serve as subcontractors, using their traditional knowledge of the land to protect the water, wildlife and traditional medicines.
Sewell believes SWN Resources Canada has an undeserved bad reputation that he blames on anti-shale gas groups.

Info just received, Chief Spense has callled on her supporters to do a "Round Dance"in front of the Prime Ministers and the Governor Generals residence in Ottawa on Saturday Dec 22,2012.
There is a high probability that we may continue to see such showing of support in the coming weeks and at various locations. Round Dances, Flash Mob type of events.
No further info available at this time.

"FOR LAW ENFOR CEMENT ONLY "
Update
2012-12-21, 1800.
This will be the final Situation Report regarding this "Idle No More Rally" on Parliament Hill, Ottawa Ontario.
Even with the sever snow storm in the Region, we had over 4,000, protesters for today's event. There were a few in the crowd that were drinking, only one male was pointed out to Cpl Russett by Ottawa Police and as such had to be spoken too by Cpl Russett regarding his behavior, it was resolved without incident.
At the end of the Rally, the organizers thanked the Police (RCMP, OPP, & OPS) for all their assistance and appreciated the way the members conducted themselves.

To all our Policing Partners, thank you for your contributions and participation in this event.

This issue of unrest in the Aboriginal Community is far from over, and they will be back, no known date or time.
Respectfully,
Wayne R

2012-12-21, 0800,
Aboriginal community members have been on Victoria Island since 0530, this morning.
This will be the last update from Cpl Russett's BB, due to a severe issue with the tracking wheel. Sorry, I will provide an update at the end of the day from my office computer upon my return.
End of update

2012-12-20, 1845 hrs.
Tomorrow's schedule of events.....

Although there is nothing indicating anything other than a peaceful Rally for the 21st., all agencies should be consciou s of the fact that this Idle No More (INM), movement has seen blockades on major arteries in many of the provinces including Ontario. Nothing in the immediate National Capital Region or is there any mention of such by the INM organizers. However, the fact remains that there have been two occasions now that Occupy Ottawa has been asked to remove themselves from Chief Spense's hunger strike, Sacred Fire. There is a high probability that this group or some other activists group may in fact decide to do a blockade of some sort in the early hours of the morning, in support of the INM Rally, even though the Aboriginal Community want no part of this group for Chief Spense's Hunger strike, they have no control over the INM Rally portion. Just a word of CAUTION!!!!

0700- Special Sacred Pipe Ceremony for Chief Spense, by invite only. Cpl Russett has been invited and will be attending. The Aboriginal Experience inclosure will be off limits to all, but Elders, and Chiefs.

Cpl Russett requests that only the Police Officers (RCMP, OPP, and OPS) assigned for this event be on Victoria Island tomorrow, this request comes from Chief Spense's camp. Cpl Russett is the only one permitted to enter the enclosure for the duration of the Hunger Strike at the request of the Chief and her spokes person. This area is a Sacred area which must be protected at all times now.. There are 10 Aboriginal Peace Keepers who are working side by side with Cpl Russett on this issue.

0830- Lighting of the Sacred Fire for the Winter Solstice Ceremony
1000- Participants start arriving
1200- Ceremony begins
1330- March begins from Victoria Island to Parliament Hill.
South on Portage Bridge, East on Wellington Street, swinging up on to Parliament Hill via the Metcalfe Street Gate.
1430- Speeches begin
1600- Event ends.
According to the organizer the buses will be picking up on Wellington Street in front of P Hill.

Cpl Russett will be marching with and staying with the crowd for the duration of this event.
If able will send a short update should time permit.

Still no information to suggest anything other than peaceful rally.
End of Update.

2012-12-20, 1600
Today's Round Dance started at 1025 and finished at 1545. No issues. At the height of the dancing there were approximately 50 persons.
Four Occupy Ottawa persons were asked to leave Victoria Island this afternoon by our on site Aboriginal Peace Keepers. They left without incident. This is the second time Occupy Ottawa has been requested to leave Victoria Island this week by our site Peace Keepers.
End of update.

2012-12-20, 0730 hrs
Cpl Russett attended the ODAWA Native Friendship Center's Feast in honor of Chief Spense.

This Feast was by invite only.. 15 persons attended, Fire Keepers, Attawapiskat Council Members and some of their youth. A Pipe Ceremony was conducted along with a small Feast. Everyone has a great concern for their Chief's health.

Chief Spense is in good spirits, although feeling a little weak, she is now in her 10 day of the hunger strike (she is drinking hot water regularly). Cpl Russett checks in on her, or her Elder numerous times throughout the day.

The Idle No More (INM) Rally set for this Friday 2012-12-21, is showing signs of internal bickering over who is responsible for what..

It must remain clear that this Rally is by no means. connected to Chief Spense's hunger strike, it just happens to be occurring at the same location and time... Even some of the participants and media are confused with this issue.

It is Cpl Russett's belief that the Chiefs Hunger strike will not terminate at the conclusion of the Idle No More Rally. She is determined to hold to her words of "not eating another morsel of food" until the Prime Minister and or Governor General agree to meet with her and the other Chiefs.

With the major snow storm coming into our Region today and lasting till Saturday, this will definitely have an impact on numbers. An educated guess at this time would be that we will now probably have 1 to 1500, participants. This may change pending on the weather.

We have confirmed a full bus has departed from Regina, destination Ottawa Idle No More Rally.

We are still waiting on updates from our Policing Partners regarding approximate numbers coming in from their areas. It should be noted that a lot of Aboriginal Communities are not sharing information with the police as readily as they use too... it appears that they are now "holding their cards closer to their chest"...

We have unconfirmed information that we have approximately 40 walkers en route to Ottawa from the West, (some say Alberta). Unknown if it is in support of the Chiefs hunger strike or the INM Rally If any of our Policing Partners can confirm this it would be appreciated.

Cpl Russett is in constant communication with the organizers of the INM Rally.

Today 2012-12-20, at approximately 1000 to dusk, invite for the "Round Dance" on Parliament Hill. No idea of numbers, they have been passing out flyers to the general public....

Cpl Russett will be on site.
End of update

2012-12-19, 1715
Twelve Mohawk Women Counselors from three Mohawk Territories attended

Victoria Island at approximately 1400 hrs for a meeting with Chief Spense.
new meeting time was established for 1630 hrs.

The Twelve Mohawk Counselors wished to drop a letter for the Prime Minister and the second letter to the Governor General.

The PM's letter was dropped off at the PMO (mail drop box) and the GG's letter was left at the Prime Ministers Gate 24 Sussex. This lasted approximately 20 minutes and then everyone was clear of 24 Sussex.

With a negotiated agreement and approval from the Twelve Mohawk Counselors, the GG's letter was retrieved from the PM's gate by Cpl Russett after the media had departed and the letter dropped off to the GG's mail room.

Today at approximately 1400, there was a flash mob in the Rideau Center. Ottawa Police Service covered the event. One Aboriginal male transported to Hospital, unconfirmed report of a seizure of some sort. (No further info available)

Chief Spense is doing well, good spirits and lots of support and visitors...

This evening at the ODAWA Native Friendship Center there is a social being held in honor of Chief Spense. Cpl Russett has been invited and will be attending.

Tomorrow there will be a "Round Dance" on Parliament Hill starting at 1000. Time shown is 1000 to sundown.... there is a lot of talk regarding the round dance on Parliament Hill circulating within the Aboriginal Community. No ideas of numbers.

End of Update.

2012-12-19, 1315,
Just received the following,
"Hi Wayne,
There will be a flash mob round dance at Rideau Centre at 2pm. I am not sure where they plan to do this but it might even be on Rideau centre. Just giving you a heads up!!"
End of update.

2012-12-19, 1130 hrs.
Cpl Russett was just advised that a group of Mohawk Council Women will be meeting with Chief Spense (hunger striker) at approx 1330 today and then will be dropping off a letter to the PMO, and also will be taping a letter to the Prime Minister's residence immediately after that.
Cpl Russett will be with the group and the senario will be played out as it was for the Manitoba Grand Chief earlier this week.
Protective Policing have been advised.

It should also be noted that Chief Spense hunger strike and the Idle No More Rally are two very separate issues/ events.

Please note that there was a peaceful protest held today as part of this country wide movement.

Date: 2012-12-21
Location: City of Charlottetown, PEI in front of the provincial legislature. Not in RCMP jurisdiction

This protest was attended by approximately 45 people but was peaceful.

The RCMP was not asked to assist and no impact on service delivery nor public safety was reported.

Our District commanders are maintaining close contact with First Nations leaders. No indication of this protest being moved outside the city at this time.

We will continue to monitor and report on any issues.

Daily Situation Report - Protests: Aboriginal-based Issues

Description of the Event/description de l'événement:

Date: 2012-12-21
Time: 1200 hrs (EST)
PROS File: 2012-1617463

PURPOSE: There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" Aboriginal-based solidarity movement.
This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, and also provide a list of known events being organized within the next 24 hours.
This list may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing. (U)

OVERVIEW:
Reports indicate a total of 39 protests are being organized for December 21, 2012,
in every province except Nunavut,
Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

These direct actions include peaceful and lawful protests such as marches along roadways,
traffic slow-downs on major highways,

'flash mob dances' in public areas, as well as blockades of critical infrastructure
such as railways and major traffic routes. (U)
At this time, open source and police reports indicate the events are peaceful and without incident. (A)

FYI - report on today's events in Ottawa, ON. Overall, peaceful with a large turnout - approx 4000 persons, despite the winter storm.

Cpl. Russett advises more events may be planned - no dates. Something possibly worth considering for future planning....

Bill, I'll check out the Assembly of First Nation's (AFN) web site to see if there's any press/news releases.

ISSUE:
•First Nation communities have engaged in peaceful protests/demonstrations in Manitoba with plans for similar protests to occur in response to Bill C-45.

CURRENT STATUS :
•At present D Division has identified 21 actual or potential protest events with 6 of those events occurring in Winnipeg Police jurisdiction. The matrix utilized by D Division to track the Manitoba protests is attached as an appendix to this BN.
•The trend being noted in generated protests is that the rural events are being cancelled in favour of increasing the attendance levels at the larger events being planned for several Winnipeg venues.
•D Division continues to liaise with Winnipeg Police Service to share information/intelligence relating to the events planned for Winnipeg.

Hello partners,

This information may be of use to your group as well, or to your local detachments. Although they are calling for a national protest the group seems to be organised in Vancouver so they may achieve a better turn out in your neck-of-the-woods.

Happy Holidays,
Paul.

Subject: ND Williams Lake ' Idle No More ' 1st Nations March
Date: 2012-12-20 6:11:12 PM

Issue- First Nations from Williams Lake and surrounding area are planning a march ("Idle No More" movement) tomorrow (2012-12-21) in Williams Lake in response to the Fed Govt Bill C-45 where they will express their displeasure with the lack of consultation and eroding relationship.

Background- phoned OIC of W Lake RCMP advising at 1000 hrs on Dec 21, a planned protest/ march will take place over a 2 hr period and the group will likely shut down some main roads for the march. The event will end up at a location where all participants will have lunch. Event planned to be peaceful and the issues will surround the Fed Govt not consulting with 1st Nations in their omni-bus Bill C45.

Current Status- OIC has advised the City of Williams Lake as the event will kick off outside of City Hall. There are good relationships with all 1st Nations leadership (the City and RCMP) and the W Lake FNP section will be part of the gathering/ march only to ensure road safety.

Strategic Considerations- this is very low risk regarding threats to any one organization or agency and is politically motivated to show unity amongst 1st Nations communities across Canada.

Strategic Communications- Nil

Detachment Commander Comments- ample resources at Det level speaks to the good relationships/ trust b/t the RCMP and FN communities. The weather (forecast -5c and snow) may keep the attendees to a minimum.

Prepared by Insp. Warren Brown, OIC, Williams Lake Detachment.

Good afternoon

The Idle No More Protests across Canada originating around the implementation of Bill C-45 have gained momentum in recent weeks. Peaceful protests and freedom of expression are fundamental rights under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We do however require situational awareness of these activities at the national level in order to share this information divisionally.

We will be taking a measured approach in reporting on these activities, and will focus on monitoring events that are directly attributable to these protests. Please ensure the language used in your reporting does not unintentionally criminalize these activities or is submitted as an intelligence report.

National Aboriginal Policing Service and Criminal Intelligence will be coordinating information sharing on a National level and will not be directing enforcement action to the Divisions. If your Division has relevant information on a developing protest, please forward this information to RCMP Criminal Intelligence Carrie Ann McPherson, carrie.mcpherson@rcmp-grc.gc.ca and Insp. Mike LeSage, Michael.LeSage@rcmp-grc.gc.ca. The frequency of national bulletins will be determined as we assess need and the volume of the information collected.

National Policy regarding demonstrations or protests can be found under section 38.9 of the Operational Manual. Additionally, if a protest in your area escalates to a critical incident please notify the A. D.G. of National Aboriginal Policing, Insp. Michael LeSage.

National Aboriginal Policing is also seeking input from CROPS Officers on what additional information should be submitted and what assistance is required for your division. NAPS will also be working with NOC to streamline reporting and reduce redundancy. For Situation Awareness information a formal BN is not required however, if a related incident meets the usual criteria for a BN, forward one in the usual fashion.

Protestations Idle No More - divisionnaire / Surveillance nationale

Les manifestations Idle No More ayant lieu à travers le Canada et concernant le projet de loi C-45 ont pris de l'ampleur ces dernières semaines. Les manifestations pacifiques et la liberté d'expression sont des droits fondamentaux garantis par la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. Nous devons être tenus au courant de la connaissance de la situation de ces activités à l'échelle nationale dans le but de partager cette information avec les divisions.

Nous emploierons une approche progressive et pondérée lorsque nous communiquerons les rapports sur ces activités, et nous mettrons l'accent sur la surveillance des événements qui sont directement attribuables à ces manifestations. Nous vous prions de soumettre des rapports de connaissance de situation. Veuillez vous assurer que le langage utilisé dans votre déclaration ne criminalise pas ces activités.

Les Services nationaux de police autochtones et les Services de renseignements criminels coordonnent le partage de renseignement au niveau national et nous ne dirigerons pas l'application de la loi dans les divisions. Si votre division possède des renseignements pertinents sur une manifestation en cours, s'il vous plaît transmettre cette information à la Section des renseignements criminels a l'attention de Carrie Ann McPherson, carrie.mcpherson@rcmp-grc.gc.ca et l'insp. Mike LeSage, Michael.LeSage@rcmp-grc.gc.ca. La fréquence des bulletins nationaux sera déterminée selon le besoin et en fonction du volume de renseignements.

La politique nationale concernant les manifestations se trouve dans l'article 38.9 du Manuel des opérations. De plus, si une manifestation dans votre région dégénère à un incident critique, veuillez aviser l'Insp. Michael LeSage, le DG par intérim des Services nationaux de police autochtones.

Les Services nationaux de police autochtones souhaitent obtenir les commentaires des OREC concernant quelles informations supplémentaires seront nécessaires. Veuillez indiquer quelle assistance sera requise pour votre division. Les Services nationaux de police autochtones travailleront également avec le CNO afin de simplifier les rapports et réduire la redondance. Pour plus d'informations concernant la connaissance de la situation, une note d'information n'est pas requise. Cependant, si un incident connexe répond aux critères habituels pour une note d'information, veuillez en soumettre une en suivant les étapes habituelles.

AANDC - Emergency & Issue Management Directorate (EIMD) - Notification

Incident: Notification 1 - Protest (QC) - Listuguj Mi'gmaq Government First Nation (QC) - Full Blockade of Highway 132 Planned - Bill C-45 and Provincial Issues - 20DEC2012 - 4914323

First Nation Community Profile Summary:
The Listuguj Mi'gmaq Government First Nation (051) is located approximately 118 km southwest of Bonaventure, on the north shore of the Restigouche River with an on-reserve population of 2,066.

Description of Incident:
* On Monday, December 17, 2012, at 19h30 EST, approximately 12 members of the Listuguj Mi'gmaq Government First Nation blocked one lane of traffic on Highway 132. Listiguj police officials arranged a traffic detour so that vehicles could pass the blockade. Protesters were reportedly operating the blockade in response to Bill C-45 and for various disputes with the Government of Quebec.
* On Tuesday, December 18, 2012, AANDC QC Regional Office reported that protesters had once again blocked one lane of traffic, with traffic being allowed to pass intermittently. The Listuguj Mi'gmaq Government First Nation band council has indicated that partial highway blockades with intermittent alternating traffic passage would be maintained on Highway 132 for the immediate future.
* Following a meeting with the community between local law enforcement and local representatives, the blockade was removed on Wednesday, December 19, 2012.
* On Thursday, December 20, 2012, the community had again erected a partial blockade and announced that protesters will completely block traffic on Highway 132 starting at 8 am Friday, December 21, 2012 and ending on 8 am Saturday, December 22, 2012. In addition, traffic slowdowns are planned for the Van Horne Bridge linking New Brunswick and Quebec while protestors hand out pamphlets to motorists.

* The announcement of the complete closure of Route 132 and the slowdown in the Van Horne Bridge Friday has caused the mobilization of the Sécurité civile du Québec.

Current Actions:
* The Sûreté du Québec is on the premises and has increased resources to ensure close monitoring and security points of the blockade and the bridge.
* The municipalities of Pointe-à-la-Croix and Restigouche have prepared plans for specific intervention for their fire protection services;
* Transport Quebec is working on scenarios for bypasses should the situation become prolonged. Further, they have posted public notices regarding the upcoming blockade.
* The RCMP is monitoring the situation closely and is in contact with the Sûreté du Québec.

Future Actions:
* Detours for traffic will be arranged by the Sûreté du Québec during the planned blockade.

Assessment/Analysis:
* From 8 am Friday, December 21, 2012 until 8 am Saturday, December 22, 2012 traffic on Highway 132 will likely be completely stopped. However, bypasses, including the Van Horne Bridge to New Brunswick, will be accessible. It is anticipated that traffic on the bridge will be slower, however, authorities see no major issues if this is only for a 24 hour period.

Additional Notifications:
* Updates will be provided as new information becomes available.

Additional Products:
* Geomatics product provided for your reference.

Hi Stéphanie,

I asked around to the analysts looking after these protests in NB and apparently there is a group of individuals (unsure of size) from the Elsipogtog reserve trying to collect money to send people to the protest in Ottawa. We do not have any other specifics at this time. Also of interest, apparently the Elsipogtog school will let out their students early today at 13:00 hrs (AST) for unknown reasons.

CM Stephanie Chiasson is the primary analyst assigned to this task. I will be away for the next two weeks, but if you need anything tonight or tomorrow, you can contact her!

Have a good afternoon!

Hi it's me again,

I'm sure you are aware that tomorrow there will be demos for "Idle no more" across the country. We are aware that a bus from Regina is on it's way to participate in the demo on parliament hill tomorrow. Are you aware of any organized groups making their way from your areas to Ottawa tomorrow for this demonstration?

Thanks,

As mentioned over the past two days there has been an ongoing protest on Hwy 132, Listuguj. This will be expanded on Friday at 08h00 until Saturday 08h00 as part of an Aboriginal "National Day of Action".

During those hours, the Hwy 132 will be completely closed and traffic on the Van Horne bridge will be slowed down so each vehicle is given a pamphlet my community members on the Quebec side. 2 members during the day and 2 for night have been added to monitor and assist with any traffic control issues on the bridge. I would ask those brought in tomorrow morning by Sgt. Tremblay to meet with me at the Campbellton detachment before 08h00.

UPDATE 1:

Planned protests for 21 December 2012

Quebec

Highway 132 and Van Horne Bridge: blocking of traffic on Highway 132 starting at 8:00 EST, 21 December 2012 until 8:00 EST 22 December 2012. Traffic slowdowns are also planned for the Van Horne Bridge linking New Brunswick and Quebec. (Source AANDC)

PNR

Fort Qu'Appelle, SK: between 200 and 300 demonstrators are expected to rally between 12:00 and 14:00 CST (1300-1500 EST). They intend to block both Highway 10 and the CN Qu'appelle subdivision. Demonstrators will be closing down one lane of traffic in order to hand out pamphlets. CN Police will have two members on scene during the protest. CN transportation will run one train in the early morning and a second train later in the afternoon. Engineering will be on hand following the protest to inspect the track to ensure it is safe. (source: SIMS)

Winnipeg International Airport: A protest rally is scheduled to take place near the Winnipeg James Armstrong Richardson International Airport between 0900 and 1100 CST (1000 and 1200 EST). The event will consist of approximately 100 vehicles driving slowly through the departures area roadways, exiting and returning in a continuous loop in an effort to slow down traffic through the airport. Vehicles will not be stopping and no one will exit the vehicles. No participants will enter the terminal building. Protestors will also attend the sidewalk by the Victoria Inn which is located on Wellington Avenue just before the airport campus. Pedestrian protestors will not be present on the airport property. The Winnipeg Airports Authority will activate the Emergency Operations Centre at 0800 and will remain open for the duration of this event. Airport Security Personnel and Winnipeg Police Services will monitor the situation closely. Winnipeg Airports Authority is planning alternate routes to facilitate passenger access to the air terminal building. If carried out as per these plans, the protest may have minimal-moderate effect on Airport Operations. Transport Canada Security Inspectors will be on site to monitor this event in its entirety. (source: PNR Transportation Security).

Other rallies in PNR - these are not expected to have an impact on rail or aviation.

- Saskatoon, SK: At the Vimy Memorial Bandshell, Spadina Crescent.

- Lloydminister, SK: Lloydminister City Hall

- Regina, SK: Walk from Angus Street and 5th to Legislative building.

- Edmonton, AB: walk from Kinsmen Park to Sir Winston Churchill Square.

NOTIFICATION - THREAT/EVENT: Planned First Nations Blockades – 19 December – 23 December, 2012

Description of threat/event: A number of First Nations blockades are anticipated to take place from December 19 to December 23, 2012 in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. The only one that may have any rail implications is planned to be held in Fort Qu'Appelle, SK (Highway 10) on December 21, 2012. Specifically for today, media is reporting that a First Nations rally is expected to close portions of Highway 401 and Wellington Road in London, ON. It is also reported for today that rallies will completely block route 132 in Quebec and will also block the Van Horne Bridge between Quebec and New Brunswick.

Source of reporting: Transport Canada Surface and Intermodal Security and media

Current Transport Canada Actions: Transport Canada is in contact with Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada and will continue to monitor the situation closely.

Current Actions (other): CN has indicated that they will adjust lines to avoid service disruptions in Fort Qu'Appelle, SK.

Initial analysis/impact assessment on Canadian Transportation System: Nil.

Notification provided to: DL OTT SITCEN NOTIFICATION - IMMEDIATE INTERNAL, RCMP NOC, Public Safety GOC, DND CJOC

MISE À JOUR DE LA NOTE D'INFORMATION AU COMMISSAIRE

BILL C-45 PROTESTS/DEMONSTRATIONS, MANITOBA
UPDATED: 2012-12-20
LAST BN: 2012-12-19

ISSUE:

- First Nation communities have engaged in peaceful protests/demonstrations in Manitoba with plans for similar protests to occur in response to Bill C-45.

CURRENT STATUS :

- At present D Division has identified 21 actual or potential protest events with 6 of those events occurring in Winnipeg Police jurisdiction. The matrix utilized by D Division to track the Manitoba protests is attached as an appendix to this BN.
- The trend being noted generated protests is that the rural events are being cancelled in favour of increasing the attendance levels at the larger events being planned for several Winnipeg venues.
- D Division continues to liaise with Winnipeg Police Service to share information/intelligence relating to the events planned for Winnipeg.

"G" DIVISION – YELLOWKNIFE
BILL C 45-IDLE NO MORE PROTESTS

ISSUE:

- Information for the Commissioner of a planned "Idle No More" protest to be held in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories.

BACKGROUND:

- On 2012-12-10, a small protest (10 protestors) was held by the Dene Nation on Franklin Ave in Yellowknife. The demonstration was in protest to the Federal Government's Bill C-45.
- On 2012-12-19, a member from "G" Division' Community and Aboriginal Policing were invited to attend an information session held by the Dene Nation in Yellowknife.
- The session was held to provide information to the RCMP, media, and other community stakeholders on the planned protests/demonstrations against Bill C-45.
- During the information session it was learned there will be a number of events scheduled for 2012-12-21.
- The first event is scheduled on 2012-12-21 at 1030 hrs; as a Feed the Fire event in the community of N'Dilo, which is adjacent to the city of Yellowknife.
- A uniformed member from G Div.'s Community and Aboriginal Policing will be in attendance (as an observer) at the planned events/demonstrations.
- The Protesters will march to a number of locations in downtown Yellowknife.
- During the information session it was learned the group is considering a blockade of the newly constructed Deh Cho Bridge, which spans the Mackenzie River near Fort Providence, Northwest Territories.
- Two proposed dates for the blockade are 2012-12-21 and 2013-01-05.

CURRENT STATUS:

- Members of G Division's Community and Aboriginal Policing have met with Bill Erasmus, the Grand Chief of the Dene Nation who has indicated that this will be a peaceful protest/demonstration.
- Communication lines between the Dene Nation and G Division are open and ongoing.
- The Territorial Dept. of Justice has been made aware of this matter.
- It has not yet been confirmed that a blockade will take place, it is still in the planning stages.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:

- None at this time.

STRATEGIC COMMUNICATIONS:

- "G" Division will develop a media strategy as this matter will garner local media attention.

RECOMMENDATIONS/STRATEGIC ADVICE:

- Subject to new developments further Briefing Notes will be forwarded to your attention.

Protest Activities Planned for Friday December 21, 2012 in "J" Division Jurisdictions in support of "Ide No More"

Of Interest, Sgt Gille COTE gathered information on December 20, 2012 at 19:20 hr. It appears that the Grand Chief from Ottawa has addressed key individuals within First Nations communities across Canada to plan for the next round of protest, which are scheduled for January 5th 2013 and aiming at disrupting Ports of Entries.

Protest activities will take place on Friday December 21, 2012 in*:

Listiguj First Nation Sureté du Québec – RCMP District 9

The Chief and Council of the Listiguj First Nation have confirmed their intention to participate in a peaceful protest. There will be two (2) blockades; one (1) full blockade of HYW 132 from 08:00 hrs until 08:00 hrs Saturday, and one (1) partial blockade of one (1) traffic lane of the Interprovincial Boulevard, off the Van Horne Bridge in Quebec. They will have pamphlets to hand out. Listiguj Police will be directing traffic.

In response to the closure of a stretch of HWY 132, which travels through Listiguj, Transport Québec (MTQ) will divert traffic to NB at the Matapédia Bridge where HYW 132 intersects with HWY 11.

Tobique RCMP District 10

confirmed that a peaceful protest will take place on the Trans Canada Highway in Perth-Andover from 13:00hrs to 16:00hrs where they will block one (1) traffic lane of the highway near the 115 km exit, behind Tim Horton's. They will have pamphlets to hand out. In addition, they intend on having a peace fire located on Highway 130 to slow down traffic and hand out pamphlets.

Idle No More day of action Friday will begin in Egypt

APTN National News

While thousands are expected to converge on Ottawa Friday as the Idle No More movement turns into a national day of action one woman in Egypt plans to make it go international.

Patricia Stein, a Lakota from North Dakota, has been living in Cairo, Egypt since 2010 teaching English and art to young children and intends to demonstrate outside of the Canadian embassy.

"I can't stay there for long since the Canadian embassy is right beside the Syrian one (high security presence). But doing what I can," she said to APTN National News via Twitter.

She also has to do it before nightfall because people take to the streets on Fridays and it can be unsafe she said. With a seven hour time difference of Ottawa she will be the first to start the day of action. She intends to begin at 3 p.m., Egypt time, which would be 8 a.m. in Ottawa.

Stein, 21, has been active on the Idle No More movement through social media sites like Twitter. In fact, a map showing where all the tweets with the hashtag #idlenomore have been used indicates Stein isn't alone in Egypt.

A few have popped up outside of where she lives but she only expects one other person to join her Friday.

She wants to post two signs on the wall of the embassy, including a painting she did of an Indigenous dancer with "Idle No More" painted over it in thick black letters.

She'll be joined, however, in London, England by a group of demonstrators, as well as a couple in the United States, but it's here in Canada where most of the rallies are planned with Ottawa expected to be the largest.

They're protesting federal government legislation they say will affect treaties and their lands.

It's a grassroots movement sparked by four women in Saskatchewan that has grown to be a strong national movement. Today, more than a thousand people shutdown a portion of Hwy. 401 near London, Ont.

Busloads of people are expected to arrive in Ottawa from different parts of the country with the rally beginning at noon.

A list of speakers has been confirmed for the demonstration, including Attawapiskat First Nation Chief Theresa Spence who entered her ninth day of a hunger strike Wednesday or a spokesperson. She is demanding a meeting between Prime Minister Stephen Harper, Governor General David Johnston and First Nations leaders. She wants treaty rights to be respected.

Other scheduled speakers include Assembly of First Nations National Chief Shawn Atleo, Liberal MP Carolyn Bennett, NDP MP Charlie Angus and about a dozen others. As of Wednesday a representative from the Conservative party hadn't been confirmed.

Michael,

Update on the situation with Listuguj blockade of Hwy #132 and the Bridge linking Listuguj, Qc and Campbellton, N.B.

Earlier report :
" The MicMacs Nation in the Listuguj Reserve in the Province of Quebec (right across the Bridge from Campbellton, N.B) are planning to Block Hwy 132 and the Bridge linking Listuguj and Campbellton, N.B., on the 2012-12-21 for 24 Hours, in support of I.N.M."

Here is the information I just received from the N.C.O. i/c Rimouski RCMP Det.

Situation :
Hwy # 132, Listuguj region is blocked at 2 different locations.
The Bridge is blocked in one direction only and MicMacs distribute pamphlets at present.
They will hold the blockade for 24 Hours.
Travellers that are forced into a detour are unhappy about the blockade.
Actions :
Travellers are rerouted through a secondary route.
Response :

If there is other development I will keep you informed.

Please note that there was a peaceful protest held today as part of this country wide movement.

Date: 2012-12-21
Location: City of Charlottetown, PEI in front of the provincial legislature.
Not in RCMP jurisdiction

This protest was attended by approximately 45 people but was peaceful.

The RCMP was not asked to assist and no impact on service delivery nor public safety was reported.

Our District commanders are maintaining close contact with First Nations leaders. No indication of this protest being moved outside the city at this time.

We will continue to monitor and report on any issues.

PROS File: 2012-1617463

PURPOSE: There have been several media and social networking reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support for the "Idle No More" Aboriginal-based solidarity movement.
This report will provide a summary of reported planned Canadian and international events within the last 24 hours, and also provide a list of known events being organized within the next 24 hours.
This list may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing. (U)

OVERVIEW:
Reports indicate a total of 39 protests are being organized for December 21, 2012,
in every province except Nunavut,
Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

These direct actions include peaceful and lawful protests such as marches along roadways,
traffic slow-downs on major highways,
'flash mob dances' in public areas, as well as blockades of critical infrastructure
such as railways and major traffic routes. (U)
At this time, police reports indicate the events
are peaceful and without incident. (A)

Critical infrastructure is looking at the material from an NS standpoint. If it is not NS than it comes to us. (is that what you are referring to?)

FYI - emails below.Looks like some mis-communication occurred as I never said not to send me information. I advised the CIIT unit (Tim O'NEIL and Ted BROADHURST) not to send my name out to their Critical Infrastructure partners as the main point of contact as I was unsure how long this was going to last, and if I would be on it past today. Can you please straighten out any misunderstandings?

Thanks,

Hello C/Supt Enger and Supt Coons,

As indicated below, I am advised that Carrie McPherson of CI has indicated to CIIT that no further information is to be forwarded to her after today. Any support or guidance that you can provide on where information should be directed would be appreciated.

Pat, further to our conversation

Members of CIIT met today with Carrie McPherson of CI to arrange for the transfer of information we are receiving from the private sector in relation to the protests being organized across the country. All indications are the protests will be peaceful, will not involve criminal activity and will not pose a criminal threat to critical infrastructure.

She could not provide any other suggestions on where information should be sent.
The assignment of CI to this file was done through consultation with CCAPS--as we discussed, C/Supt Tremblay, myself and Liam Price.
Our concern is that we would like to ensure the information is appropriately shared within the RCMP but now do not know where to send it. A co-ordinator obviously needs to be identified

Good Morning:

ORR has received no updates from our contacts with POC or GOC regarding blockades for today, or tomorrow.

Apparently people from the Occupy Edmonton movement were involved in supplying coffee to the march in Edmonton yesterday, and with that in mind, Occupy Edmonton is holding their previously scheduled general assembly today, as follows:

Occupy Edmonton
General assembly
Today 14:00
Grant MacEwan University Cafeteria
104 Ave and 109 St.
Edmonton.

This is a regular scheduled meeting, but there are suggestions they will be focusing on how to assist Idle No More.

I have spoken with OCC and the KDIV MOSS and both have advised that there is currently nothing to report.

I will continue to monitor the situation throughout the afternoon and will provide supplemental updates should the need arise. I will provide an update tomorrow morning around this time, as well.

Have a great day.

Protest Activities Planned for Friday December 21, 2012
"J" Division Jurisdictions in support of "Idle No More" - 20121609536

Protest activities - Friday December 21, 2012:

Listiguj First Nation Sureté du Québec – RCMP District 9

Highway 132 has been completely blocked since 08:00hrs. Protestors are handing out flyers on the QC side of the Van Horne Bridge.

2012-12-21 @ 12:51hrs – The bridge is passable; there are 10 to 12 protestors handing out flyers. Route 132 is still blocked completely in 2 different locations.

Eel River Bar RCMP District 9

Eel River Bar Reserve near Dalhousie, NB will be protesting by handing out pamphlets and slowing down traffic on the old Highway (Main Street, Eel River Bar between Charlo and Dalhousie) between 13:00 hrs and 16:00 hrs.

2012-12-21 @ 10:56hrs - Organizers have requested RCMP presence at 13:00hrs when they begin their activities on the Main Road (Old Hwy) and this is anticipated to conclude at 16:00hrs.

Tobique RCMP District 10

Protest activities are expected to take place between 13:00hrs and 16:00hrs. It was originally anticipated they would block the westbound traffic lane of the Trans Canada Highway just south of Perth-Andover prior to Exit 115 west to hand out pamphlets, and would also be slowing traffic on Highway 130 (the old Trans Canada Highway) handing out pamphlets. Further, they will be having a peace fire on the land between the two highways.

the protest is supposed to be peaceful; however, it is possible that it could escalate.

2012-12-21 @ 07:41hrs - Some members are pushing for more aggressive means of protest. There have been rumors that protestors be blocking both sides of the highway.

2012-12-21 @ 10:15hrs - Contact was by Cpl. Millier with community members to clarify these issues.

Protest Activities Planned for Friday December 21, 2012
"J" Division Jurisdictions in support of "Idle No More" - 20121609536

2012-12-21 @ 12:21hrs - Most of the damage sustained last night on social media has been repaired. a request was made to not have members from outside the area approach residents as they prefer it be local members whom they know.

wants a one lane closure on both sides of the TCH. Cpl. Millier is meeting with the group and will suggest the protestors hand out pamphlets on Fort Tribe road (Hwy 130), at the stop sign coming off the TCH on exit #115, across the Tim Horton's in Perth, but no closure on the TCH. The peace fire is going without any issues.

2012-12-21 @ 13:56 hrs – The situation is under control in Tobique. On Route 130, along the government garage, some pamphlets are being given out.

Woodstock RCMP District 7

A peaceful protest took place and ended at 1300hrs.

Burnt Church RCMP District 8

There was a peaceful march along Route 11. There were approximately 30 participants. It was very peaceful and there were no issues. Chief Paul indicated that he was very pleased with law enforcement assistance in making the walk safe. Members were well received by the rest of the participants as well.

Elsipogtog RCMP District 5

A group of protestors intend on blocking the road completely on Highway 11 at Exit 53 (Rexton) to divert traffic to drive through the on /off ramps, where they will hand out information pamphlets. It is unknown how many protesters will be present.

2012-12-21 @ 12:51hrs – There are approximately 40 to 50 people still on site but everything is peaceful. Adults and children are present.

Eel Ground RCMP District 6

Chief Ginnish confirmed there will be a peaceful gathering of 20-30 people taking place in the parking lot of the Power Dam Facility in Eel Ground along Route 425 @ 13:30 hrs with drummers and dancing. There is no indication of any road closure.

2012-12-21 @ 10:35hrs – Information indicates there will be protestors gathering in front of Town Hall on Route 425 on FN land between 13:00hrs and 16:00hrs to hand out pamphlets.

2012-12-21 @ 13:52hrs – There are 75 to 80 people in Eel Ground at the moment in the parking lot; they are expecting a bus load from Burnt Church. It is unknown at this time whether this will take place. Reportedly they want to walk towards the 425 and turn around at Route 8.

Protest Activities that Occurred on Friday December 21, 2012 in "J" Division Jurisdictions in support of "Idle No More" - 20121609536

Protest activities - Friday December 21, 2012:

Listiguj First Nation Sureté du Québec – RCMP District 9

Highway 132 has been blocked in two (2) locations since 08:00 hrs and will remain blocked until 08:00 hrs tomorrow morning.

2012-12-21 @ 14:44 hrs: Traffic being slowed at the Van Horne bridge on the Quebec side and there are 10 to 12 protestors handing out flyers. The situation is stable and it is not expected to escalate.

2012-12-21 16:24 hrs: Demonstrations continue as previously reported with no significant changes.

Eel River Bar RCMP District 9

2012-12-21 @ 14:44 hrs: Approximately 45 community members have attended the protest location, on the old Highway (Main Street, Eel River Bar between Charlo and Dalhousie). The situation is passive and protest activities are expected to be concluded at 16:00hrs.

2012-12-21 @ 16:24 hrs: All protest activities have ended all participants have left the area.

Tobique RCMP District 10

2012-12-21 @ 15:39 hrs: The westbound traffic lane of the Trans Canada Highway is blocked, south of Perth-Andover prior to Exit 115, with a drumming circle in middle of the HWY. This change supposedly occurred following a message from First Nation Leaders in Ottawa who advised protesters to "ramp up"

Prepared by: CM Stéphanie Chiasson and CM Karen Grover protest activities. The blockade should be removed at 16:00 hrs. Approximately 50 to 60 protesters are on site. RCMP members have rerouted traffic onto the Highway 130 (the old Trans Canada Highway), where traffic has been slowed as well by protesters to hand out pamphlets.

2012-12-21 @ 15:36 hrs: One (1) westbound lane was re-opened, drummers are off the HWY and the protest will stop at 16:00 hrs.

2012-12-21 @ 16:13 hrs: All protest activities have ended.

2012-12-21 @ 16:27 hrs: No protests activities have been planned for the remainder of the day or for this up coming weekend.

2012-21-21 @ 16: 38 hrs: expressed here appreciation of the police presence and corporation to Cpl. Millier.

Elsipogtog RCMP District 5

2012-12-21 @ 15:39 hrs: Approximately 50 protesters, are blocking the road on Highway 11 at Exit 53 (Rexton) and diverting traffic to drive through the on /off ramps, where they are handing information pamphlets. The protest activities started at 08:00 hrs and are expected to stop at 16:00 hrs. Currently the situation is peaceful. However, these protest activities are expected to resume tomorrow, on Thursday December 22, 2012, and continue on until Monday December 24, 2012, between 08:00 hrs and 16:00 hrs each day.

2012-12-21 @ 16:04 hrs: Of interest, the protest received media coverage .

2012-12-21 @ 16:11 hrs: The roadblock has been dismantled. All day the protest was very peaceful. Protesters plan to resume these activities for the following three (3) days.

2012-12-21 @ 16:42 hrs: Highway 11 is open and the traffic flow is back to normal. Weather permitting protesters will be back tomorrow at 09 00 hrs at the same location and to conduct the same protest activities, as earlier today.

Protest Activities that Occurred on Friday December 21, 2012 in "J" Division Jurisdictions in support of "Idle No More" - 20121609536

Eel Ground RCMP District 6

2012-12-21 @ 15:04 hrs: The protest activities are done and everyone has departed the site. A peaceful gathering of 80 people took place in the parking lot of the Power Dam Facility along Route 425 from 13:30 hrs until 15:00 hrs.

- A press conference was held today in Elsipogtog where Chief Aaron SOCK asked for a moratorium on shale gas exploration.

- 1900hrs: they would be holding a rally on the Golf Road in Hillsborough. It is expected to be a peaceful rally.

United Nations Observers

- Here is an excerpt from Rabble's online news article Midnight confiscation of drilling equipment at New Brunswick anti-fracking protest, posted on June 25th, 2013, whereby they question and explain the United Nations observers that are presently in Elsipogtog:

  Questions about UN observers

  Chief Aaron Sock of Elsipogtog states that he contacted the UN last weekend to request UN observation, in order to maintain peace between the RCMP and locals due to recent security concerns. Two individuals identified by themselves and local leadership as UN Independent Observers have been present on camp for two days since, conducting interviews with camp members, collecting information, and last night, providing a mediating role in confrontations.

Meanwhile, a source in the office of the spokesperson for the Secretary-General of the UN confirmed to rabble.ca that there are currently no UN observers anywhere in Canada.

Despite this lack of clear verification, camp members and First Nations leadership hold that the individuals have a relationship with the UN, pointing to the RCMP's respect for the observers' role as mediators in last night's confrontation as further evidence.

Update - 11:45pm EST: Upon further discussion with local leadership and the individuals identified as 'UN Independent Observers,' it has been made clear that the term 'Independent Observer' was intended to communicate that the individuals were not directly employed by the UN. They have been appointed by local leadership to maintain a peacekeeping role in the camp, and compile a report based on their observations of the situation to be independently submitted on behalf of the community to the Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples

The titles of the individuals have been switched to 'Peacekeepers' to avoid future confusion.

Bill Brown - National Protests in Support of Occupation of Enbridge Facility

YOU ARE BLIND COPIED

FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT ONLY

Good Day

there are to be national protests in support of the occupation of Enbridge's North Westover facility to take place on 2013-06-25. http://www.cbc.ca/hamilton/news/story/2013/06/24/hamilton-line-9-protest.html

SITUATIONAL AWARENESS:

On 2013-06-20, a group of approximately 80 protesters including representatives from Six Nations occupied and forced the shut down construction at Enbridge's North Westover Pump Station, located in rural Hamilton, Ont. Protesters put their own locks on the facility, but will permit Enbridge staff to complete regular safety inspections.

Aboriginal representatives advised the pipeline is on "stolen Indigenous land and is the traditional territory of the Chonnonton people as well as of the Mississagi Anishinabec and the Onondawaga Haudenosaunee. This pipeline crosses the territories of dozens of Indigenous nations along its route, including the Six Nations of the Grand River."

Enbridge has obtained a Court Injunction. Enforcement of same is at the discretion of the Hamilton Police Service.

Enbridge Line 9

With the National Energy Board's approval of the Line 9 Reversal Phase I Project on July 27, 2012, Enbridge will proceed to reverse a section of its Line 9 between Sarnia and North Westover. Line 9 is an existing Enbridge pipeline with a current capacity of 240,000 barrels per day (bpd) that extends from Montreal, Quebec to Sarnia, Ontario and currently transports offshore crude oil in a westbound direction. Only the section of Line 9 between Sarnia and Westover will be affected by this project. The scope of the Project includes reversing the flow of the section of Line 9 from Sarnia to North Westover and modifying existing pump stations in order to allow for the eastbound transportation of incremental western Canadian crude oil, which can be sourced from a number of locations in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Initially, we expect to flow a minimum of 50,000 bpd of crude oil through this project, with a maximum capacity of 200,000 bpd. We expect that the main product to be transported will be light crude oil. The pipeline will initially carry light crude oil, but the reversed Line 9 between Sarnia and Westover, Ontario will be capable of transporting a range of crude oil products.

The Project will take place within existing Enbridge properties and easements. There is no new pipeline construction outside Enbridge-owned facilities involved in this project. Project work at Sarnia Terminal, Westover Terminal and North Westover Station includes modifications to existing equipment and the installation of a short length of pipe. The project work may result in higher than normal traffic and noise at these facilities during the project period, but these will cease upon the completion of project work.

Following is a list of proposed protest sites - please note this is a tentative list and more protest sites may be announced throughout today:

Bonjour à tous,

- Le 25 juin 2013, à 12:00 p.m., il y aura un « Press Briefing At Blockaded Westover Reversal Station ». Les actions de protestations auront lieux dans des villes à travers le Canada afin de supporter les activistes qui ont pris d'assaut une station de pompage du Nord d'Hamilton en Ontario. Cette action intitulé « Swamp Line 9 » vise à prévenir la construction de la Ligne 9 et d'empêcher le transport de sables bitumineux à travers l'Ontario et le Québec et est dans le cadre de la campagne d'Idle No More l'Été Souverein (Sovereignty Summer).Cet événement a été publié le 24 juin 2013 et est affiché sur le site officiel d'Idle No More.

- Du 28 au 30 juin 2013, le Pow Wow 2013 de Wendake aura lieu. La programmation de cet événement a été dévoilée le 21 juin 2013, à 11:00 a.m. au Café Roreke situé au 40, Rue Morissette à Loretteville, Québec.

- Du 30 juillet au 5 août 2013, le 23e festival de la Présence autochtone prendra place à Montréal. Dans le cadre de ce festival, il y aura des spectacles, des expositions, des films et de la cuisine de rue.

Soumis pour votre information.

Thank you for publishing my article as is. I realize that the length of the article was an issue but required to deal with extensive documentation of the information.

It is 8 p.m. on the evening of Sunday June 23 here in Winnipeg. Tomorrow, at 2 p.m., I will be in court facing the Attorney General of Canada, the Attorney General of Manitoba and the Canadian National Railway who want the court to put a permanent injunction on our people from "trespassing" on CN railway lines.

In January 2013, we blocked a main railway line in Manitoba. In minus 34 degree Celsius for six hours. On January 15, a day before the blockade, CN got a temporary injunction while no one was there from us to oppose the injunction and we were served that injunction about two hours before we left the railway blockade. CN wants not only a permanent injunction, they want costs, plus damages which will be millions of dollars. They want to intimidate our people. Once they get the court injunction, we will move to begin boycotts of British Columbia lumber sold in the United States. We have support amongst people in the United States.

Everything we have done is peaceful and we sent the government advance notice of the blockade. January 16, 2013 was a commitment by the Chiefs to put pressure on Canada with action. AIM Winnipeg blocked a railway line. When railway lines are blocked by covert activity, the situation will become far worse. For now, there is peace in Canada, it will not last.

Publishing the article gives many people around the world the ability to anticipate what will happen in Canada. Americans have ignored the issues in Canada for a long time. In 1989, we organized THE RUN FOR HUMAN RIGHTS, and we ran 1,000 miles from Winnipeg to Chicago to try to wake up Americans to the human rights issues in Canada. More recently, as Chiefs, we were in Washington 12 days before the first Inauguration of President Obama. We were there to ask the incoming Obama administration to do something about the environmental devastation that the sale of oil to the United States was doing to northern Alberta in the Tarsands.

Nothing has happened from the American Government. They have ignored all our efforts to get them to do something about human rights violations in Canada. The American government will condemn Iran for voicing concerns about human rights violations in Canada but the American government itself will continue to ignore those issues.

On Thursday June 27, AIM Winnipeg will hold a Press Conference and a meeting to organize our own investigation process on five murdered and missing indigenous women whom the City of Winnipeg Police and RCMP have not solved. Shaun Lamb who is charged with three murders of indigenous women in Winnipeg has stated that he has information on five other women who were killed. One of our AIM leaders has been speaking to Lamb. Winnipeg Police Officer Sutherland laughed at Lamb in an interview, refusing to listen to what Lamb is saying. Totally unprofessional, all leads and information must be investigated not ignored. Robert Picton would have been caught years earlier if Vancouver police had been more diligent. Picton would not have killed 49 women if police had done what they were supposed to. They ignored leads just like they are doing here in Winnipeg.

Thank you for publishing the article, it is my hope that other countries will question Canada and its treatment of indigenous people. I will follow up with information on the Dakota people who are facing court in September for selling cigarettes. Another group, the Cree in northern Manitoba is facing court action by HudBay who is mining in their territory without permission from the indigenous people. The Cree face a $400 million lawsuit by HudBay for the blockade done by the Cree. Meanwhile, the mining of sixty different metals and minerals continues every day in Canada, all the while, Canada refuses to pay anything to the indigenous people for those natural resources.

PURPOSE:
Since December 2012, there have been numerous reports of planned protests and potential blockades in support of Aboriginal-based issues, the majority of which have been organized under the "Idle No More" (INM) banner. (A)

According to reports, prolonged protests in New Brunswick and Ontario have resulted in increased tensions with law enforcement personnel. (A)

This situation report will provide an update of these emergent issues as well as a summary of reported and planned events in Canada that are ongoing or are taking place today, June 26, 2013. These lists may not be complete as the environment is constantly changing

OVERVIEW OF EVENTS:
The occupation of the Enbridge Westover pumping station was dismantled by Hamilton Police Service at 0700hrs this morning, June 26. Following the arrest of 18 protestors,

INM national founders initiated a call for action in support of the occupation of Enbridge's North Westover facility in Ontario. These protests were reported to be part of "Sovereignty Summer". "Sovereignty Summer" is being described as a "campaign of coordinated direct actions" organized by INM and Defenders of the Land (DoL) to promote Aboriginal rights and environmental protection. (A)

In addition, a national call for support of the Elsipogtog FN, in New Brunswick, was initiated by INM and other organizations, such as left-wing and environmental activists.

There is currently a national call for actions, between June 28 and July 1, referred to as the "National Stop Harper Campaign" According to organizers, INM, the American Indian Movement (AIM) and the Occupy movement are collaborating to coordinate events;

Reports indicate there are no events planned to occur today, June 26. (A)

EMERGENT ISSUES:

The following issues have resulted in increased tensions and could lead to prolonged protests, potentially significant in nature. (A)

Blockade of Enbridge Line 9 pumping station near Hamilton, Ontario

Since June 20, 2013, a group of protestors, including representatives from Six Nations of the Grand River, have been occupying the Enbridge Line 9 pumping station in Westover, just outside of Hamilton, Ontario. On June 21, 2013, an injunction "against unauthorized access to Enbridge property" was granted by Madam Justice Low of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice. According to reports, this injunction was served to protestors by the Hamilton Police Service, yesterday, June 25. Today, June 26, at approximately 0700hrs, Hamilton Police Service entered the compound and proceeded to arrest 18 protestors. Enbridge officials regained entry of the station at 0800hrs. the majority of demonstrators were fined with Trespassing and later released, while four (4) individuals will be criminally charged with Obstruction to a court order and Mischief. (A)

Anti-shale gas protests near Moncton, New Brunswick

The Elsipogtog FN and INM national founders issued a "call out" to all supporters, following a weekend of protests and arrests, to participate in actions to prevent seismic testing for shale gas deposits by SWN Resources. Protestors have been demonstrating against the shale gas industry in New Brunswick on various local highways as well as at constituency offices of federal politicians, since the beginning of June. Since June 5, 2013, 31 protestors have been arrested for mischief and/or obstruction during anti-shale gas protests. According to reports, a shot-hole driller belonging to SWN Resources Canada was set on fire on June 25, at approximately 0700hrs, in a wooded area near Bass River, New Brunswick. In addition, it was reported that several trees were cut down, intentionally blocking Route 490 near Fords Mills.

SWN Resources Canada advised that surveying and seismic testing will be halted until further notice. (A)

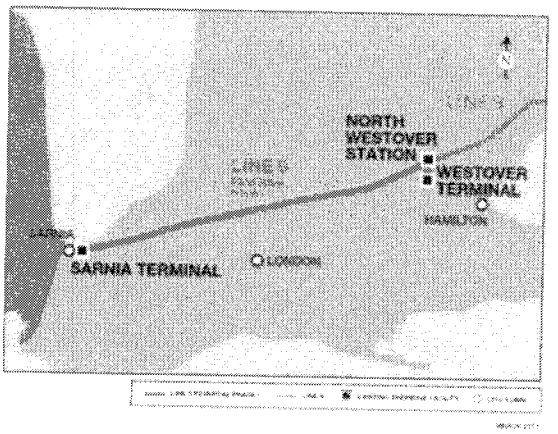
Line 9 Reversal Phase I Project Overview

ENGLISH | FRANÇAIS



Download PDF (157 KB)

With the National Energy Board's approval of the Line 9 Reversal Phase I Project on July 27, 2012, Enbridge will proceed to reverse a section of its Line 9 between Sarnia and North Westover, Ontario to accommodate a request from our customer Imperial Oil Limited for access to the Ontario market. Line 9 is an existing Enbridge pipeline with a current capacity of 240,000 barrels per day (bpd) that extends from Montreal, Quebec to Sarnia, Ontario and currently transports offshore crude oil in a westbound direction. Only the section of Line 9 between Sarnia and Westover will be affected by this project. The scope of the Project includes reversing the flow of the section of Line 9 from Sarnia to North Westover and modifying existing pump stations in order to allow for the eastbound transportation of incremental western Canadian crude oil, which can be sourced from a number of locations in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Initially, we expect to flow a minimum of 50,000 bpd of crude oil through this project, with a maximum capacity of 200,000 bpd. We expect that the main product to be transported will be light crude oil. The pipeline will initially carry light crude oil, but the reversed Line 9 between Sarnia and Westover, Ontario will be capable of transporting a range of crude oil products.

The Project will take place within existing Enbridge properties and easements. There is no new pipeline construction outside Enbridge-owned facilities involved in this project. Project work at Sarnia Terminal, Westover Terminal and North Westover Station includes modifications to existing equipment and the installation of a short length of pipe. The project work may result in higher than normal traffic and noise at these facilities during the project period, but these will cease upon the completion of project work.

By taking advantage of existing facilities, the Project will minimize potential impacts to the environment and to stakeholders. Also, reversing the flow of the pipeline from Sarnia to Westover is an economical way to utilize the existing system.

Line 9 Background

Line 9 was originally an eastbound pipeline built in the mid-1970s to secure the supply of oil in Quebec, then dependent on offshore crude. In the late 1990s, the flow was reversed to accommodate changing market conditions.

In 2008, the flow was proposed to be reversed back to its original eastbound direction as part of a multi-component project called Trailbreaker. That project was put on hold in 2009 due to lack of commercial support and is no longer being pursued by Enbridge.

Subject: CN Rail 'extremely frustrated' by Ottawa's handling of Idle No More blockade in Sarnia, documents show (National Post, 2013-04-10)

Josée,
Following our discussion, this article could be of interest (particularly bold sentences), for C/Supt Coons as well as Supt. Bates and Insp. Lesage from CAPS.
Have a great day!
Guillaume

CN Rail expressed frustration to federal government officials about the handling of a First Nations rail blockade in Sarnia late last year, while the voice of Canada's propane industry asked Public Safety Minister Vic Toews to intervene in the matter, according to emails obtained by Postmedia News.
The emails, included in hundreds of pages of documents released to Postmedia News under access to information laws, also show there was some doubt among federal bureaucrats about jurisdictional issues surrounding the CN Rail spur line.
The blockade on Aamjiwnaang First Nation was one of many actions across the country under the banner of the indigenous grassroots Idle No More movement.
It began on Dec. 21, eventually swelling to more than 100 people who said they wouldn't leave until Prime Minister Stephen Harper agreed to meet with Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence, who was in the midst of a protest liquid diet near Parliament Hill.
Two days into the blockade, CN expressed frustration at Sarnia police's handling of the peaceful protest.
"CN is extremely frustrated with the police who don't seem to be doing anything to negotiate with the first nations group," bureaucrat Tara Shannon wrote in a Dec. 23 email.
CN requested that a senior Aboriginal Affairs official "speak with the protesters and ask them to end the protest," said a Dec. 22 email from Kendra Kahnapace, a government official.
Kahnapace's email also said CN expressed worry about the blockade's economic impact. The rail line runs to several chemical and refining plants, an area known as Chemical Valley.
"These tracks carry supplies to refineries and eventually fuel to Detroit for emergency vehicles. They are also concerned with workers losing work and pay, especially during the holidays," the email said.
The federal government, however, refrained from intervening.

They are also concerned with workers losing work and pay, especially during the holidays
"Given that CN has apparently obtained an injunction, I do not believe that it would be a departmental role to intervene in the manner requested," said an email from Joanne Wilkinson on the evening of Dec. 22.
Court injunctions issued on Dec. 21 and Dec. 27 granted police the power to end the blockade at their discretion. Sarnia's mayor and police chief both said during the protest that police wouldn't interfere as long as it remained peaceful.
The emails also show that Canada's propane association wrote to Toews urging him to do something about the blockade.
"Minister Toews has received a letter from the president of the Canadian Propane Association urging the federal government to take the necessary steps to remove the CN Rail blockage in Sarnia, Ontario in an orderly and safe manner," said an email from Denis Guitor, a senior official at the emergency-response Government Operations Centre.
The email was forwarded to Aboriginal Affairs officials on Dec. 28.
The blockade ended on Jan. 2, after about two weeks, after lawyers for CN Rail launched court action against Ron Plain, a member of the Aamjiwnaang First Nation and spokesperson for the protesters, alleging that he was in contempt of an injunction to disband the protests on the railway tracks.
The documents also show there were doubts within the bureaucracy about the status of jurisdiction over the railway.
Plain told media on Dec. 26 that the rail was built illegally on the First Nations' property.
On Dec. 27, associate deputy minister Colleen Swords asked staff to clarify the status of the rail line. Officials reiterated the request the following morning.
"Apparently there is a call with the Mayor of Sarnia this morning. Would be important to have answers to the questions about the rail line and the status of the CN right of way," Gail Mitchell wrote on Dec. 28.
Another bureaucrat, Margaret Buist, responded that such information would take time to obtain.
"We will need to review historical records likely at Library and Archives to determine if the land in question is still reserve land or not," she wrote. "It is detailed research and will require some time."
Mitchell answered: "The department is saying that CN has a right of way, but that there may not be a permit to cross the land and we aren't sure about the status of the land? Further research is required. Have I got that right?"
Buist replied that research would show whether the land through which the rail passes remains reserve land or not.
Some First Nations chiefs have warned that blockades and similar actions could ramp up again under Idle No More, as the weather warms. Last month, one chief told reporters in Ottawa that "it's going to be a long, hot summer."

Hi Brittany, while we have had an IO following this, I am not sure he is well positioned to speak on it. I am not aware of any analysts who would be prepared to speak on it. The OPP may be a better choice for this topic. I have forwarded this request to Lorelei for any further commentary or ideas

Hey Heather- Just a quick question for you,

Oxford Properties reached out to me this morning to inquire if I knew of someone who could speak to domestic extremism in Canada, particularly Idle No More on their annual security conference. I don't know if we have any speakers here who would be able to cover that topic. I just thought I would follow up with you to see. Its June 5-6 at the intercontinental hotel downtown Toronto. Looking for a 45 minute presentation. It will have senior security managers from across the country.

Anyway let me know!

Thanks,
Brittany

Subject: FYI- Idle No More has cost cops $43K in OT (Winnipeg Sun, 2013-04-24)

'Small price to pay' says Terry Nelson
BY JOYANNE PURSAGA, WINNIPEG SUN
Winnipeg police have spent $43,533.67 in overtime to cover Idle No More events, according to the results of a freedom of information request.
Terry Nelson, the former chief of Roseau River First Nation, said the investment has helped keep the protests peaceful.
"It's a small price for people to pay to ensure there is no violence," said Nelson.
Nelson, who is also involved with the local chapter of the American Indian Movement, said police and First Nations organizers worked together to avoid violent clashes with potential counter-protests, resulting in a consistently peaceful movement.
"Once violence happens, it (would) be very hard to contain that," he said.
Nelson expects multiple AIM protests to address similar issues in the summer.
Idle no More protests began in December to lobby the federal government to address treaty rights and living conditions on First Nations.
Winnipeg protests continued well into February and some Manitoba actions have extended into March.
Police declined to reveal other protest spending, stating these records aren't kept. Police declined an interview request on Friday.
Frank Cormier, a University of Manitoba criminologist, said Winnipeg police has a crowd management unit and specific protocols to determine its protest response level.
"The Idle No More protests have been virtually violence-free, with no real property damage. So police would see it, I think, as a low-risk event," said Cormier.
Cormier said expected crowd size, the nature of previous protests, and intelligence about protest plans would all guide the response.
Scott Fielding, Winnipeg city council's protection committee chair, isn't sure his target to reduce overall police overtime by 10% applies in this specific case. The councillor noted protests would be tougher to staff, since they can occur with little or no notice.

For 37 years, Gary Wassaykeesic has been seeking justice for his mother, who died on a remote reserve for indigenous people in Canada.

His quest to bring the alleged killer to justice has been enlivened by Idle No More, a protest movement led by Canada's indigenous First Nations people that sprang up last autumn, and has forced politicians and the public to confront the challenges that face Canada's 1.1 million indigenous people.

Many indigenous Canadians like Wassaykeesic have been emboldened by the Idle No More movement. On March 25, a group of First Nations youth arrived in Ottawa, the capital, after walking 1,600km from a northern community to draw attention to poverty and other social problems they face. In January, protesters blocked railway lines and roads across the country, some indigenous leaders have gone on hunger strike, and statues of past Canadian leaders have been vandalised.

Wassaykeesic says Idle No More has given him direction and a sense of hope that with First Nations issues gathering public attention, his own quest to find justice for his mother's death may also gain steam.

He says being involved in a popular movement like Idle No More will help his chances of getting an official investigation into her death, and of confronting the man he believes killed her.

Canadian law enforcement and the federal government have historically turned a blind eye to crimes committed on First Nations reserves, critics say.

Historical grievances

Idle No More spread across Canada after the federal government in Ottawa introduced a bill known as C-45 last October. Activists say the proposed law threatens vast tracts of wilderness by reducing the number of federally protected waterways, among other things. The Canadian parliament passed the bill last December.

But the issues fuelling the movement go much deeper. Indigenous communities in Canada, which make up about three percent of the country's population, have long felt socially and politically excluded. Many, particularly in the vast expanses of rural Canada, experience developing-world standards of living.

Suicide rates are some of the world's highest, according to the Canadian Institute of Child Health. Statistics Canada has reported that more than half of First Nations members living on reserves have not completed high school. Drug and alcohol abuse is rife among some indigenous people, including in major cities such as Toronto.

Since last autumn, thousands of people - including many non-indigenous - have attended Idle No More demonstrations across the country. An Idle No More Facebook page has more than 100,000 supporters. Many angry and disaffected young First Nations men and women see this grassroots movement as an opportunity to highlight their social and economic plight, beyond Bill C-45's perceived threat to Canada's forests and natural beauty.

Fighting the government

First Nations communities were angered by the federal government's failure to consult them on the changes Bill C-45 brings.

"Canada did not take the time to seek input from either Canadians or First Nations on Bill C-45," says Pamela Palmater, spokesperson for Idle No More and a professor at Ryerson University's Department of Politics and Public Administration in Toronto. "In fact, it sped up the process in parliament. This is undemocratic and violates the rule of law in this country."

After demands from various Idle No More supporters and leaders, Prime Minister Stephen Harper met with leading indigenous figures - but not hunger-striking Idle No More leaders - at the height of the protest in January. Harper promised "high-level dialogue" to discuss the modernisation of treaty relationships.

At the core of the tensions is a push to exploit vast tracts of land rich in oil, gas and minerals, often putting mining and energy companies in direct competition with First Nations communities.

Though mining companies have provided jobs and services to rural settlements, and many First Nations have no qualms about their presence, resource exploitation has dramatically affected the natural environment in areas indigenous communities depend on for their livelihoods. In the last month, Canadian and American indigenous groups have vowed to block three major proposed pipelines transporting oil from Alberta in Canada south to the US.

Palmater said the bill affects all Canadians. "First Nations are opposing this bill not just because it impacts their rights, but also because we know that it impacts the future generations of both treaty partners," she said. "The question really should be whether Canadians will rise to protect their children's futures alongside First Nations."

Internal conflict

Not all First Nations support the movement, though. Part of the reason is their diversity: Over 630 bands represent around 800,000 people speaking more than 30 languages across huge areas (Inuit and Métis communities make up the remaining 300,000 indigenous population). A growing number now live in cities, and many have become disconnected from environmental concerns.

Some within Idle No More opposed talks with Prime Minister Harper without the country's governor general - the British crown's representative in Canada - also in attendance. Others wanted no meetings at all with the federal government, and some questioned the usefulness of civil disobedience itself.

One leading Idle No More figure, Chief Theresa Spence from northwest Ontario, went on a solid-foods hunger strike for 44 days last winter in protest against the bill. But her see-sawing stance on meeting government officials was criticised by some First Nations leaders. Chief Spence has also come under attack for troubling accounting practices on the impoverished reserve she heads.

"There's a good reason that aboriginals in Canada should be upset," said Mark Milke, a senior fellow at the Fraser Institute in Calgary, a right-wing think-tank, who believes it is the governance structures on reserves that damage First Nations communities. He said Idle No More protesters "have it backwards" and should be protesting their own leadership.

"In a non-native town in Canada, no mayor would be allowed to capture public funds in the ways it happens in reserves."
Milke said that through Bill C-45, the Canadian government is trying to allow First Nations communities to make their own decisions.

The movement's future is unclear. Already, there are some signs that it is petering out. Eldon Yellowhorn, chair of the First Nations Studies Department at Simon Fraser University in British Columbia, says the government is unlikely to change its stance. He predicts that come summer Idle No More will be a slogan during protests, but will cease to exist as a coherent movement. "It's very hard to maintain that momentum."

In search of justice

For Wassaykeesic, however, the Idle No More movement has served as a motivation not only to get to the bottom of his mother's death, but also to improve his life.

"How come we can't have justice? How come we can't have closure?"

- Gary Wassaykeesic, crime victim

Since childhood, Wassaykeesic, 52, has faced many difficulties such as alcohol abuse, prison time and problems holding down a job, though says he hasn't drank in 25 years.

In 2007, a $1.9bn government payout to people who suffered abuse while in residential schools for indigenous communities helped Wassaykeesic to get his life together and begin investigating his mother's death. Before this, he says he carried a sense of injustice about what happened to his mother, but never did anything about it.

The official reason for his mother's death is alcohol asphyxiation, though no post-mortem was conducted, he said.

Wassaykeesic believes she was choked and beaten to death by a man he knows, whom he thinks is still alive. Others from his reserve came forward last month to tell him they suspect the same man of abusing their own relatives during the 1970s.

Emily Hill, a lawyer at Aboriginal Legal Services of Toronto, handles Gary's case, and says progress has been slow and difficult. "The death took place many years ago. He's been working very hard to get to the bottom of things. I can't say what will happen, but he's obviously very motivated," she said.

"I've been telling everyone - we're going to deal with this one way or the other. We're going to try deal with this legally," said Wassaykeesic. "But because of all the things that have happened to me: Jail, living on the streets, addiction. How come we can't have justice? How come we can't have closure?" he says.

"I'm not the hunted no more, I'm the hunter."

Any hope of "good faith" has been destroyed by the Harper regime. And not just good faith between the federal government and the First Nations, but also between a majority of Canadians and Harper. The world needs to wake up: the Harper regime is anti-democratic, anti-environment, anti-human rights, anti-UN, militaristic, and pro-Zionist. It is beholden to the oil industry. And it is deeply, ideologically rooted in evangelical Christianity, just as the criminal Bush regime was, and just as the US. Republican Party still is.

The last person who should be solicited for quotes is someone in a right-wing think tank. They are undermining the issues of the native people. This movement is largely about the tar sands and the pipelines that are destroying the environment across North America.
Harper presides over a very corrupt government that is trampling the treaty rights of the Canadian native people because the treaty rights stand in the way of the corporatecracy. Whenever anyone has EVER talked about "modernizing" treaty rights, what they are really doing is destroying them.

Good Article, but one fundamental element is incorrect. The text says: "country's governor general - the British crown's representative in Canada". The Governor General is the representative of the CANADIAN crown in Canada! NOT THE BRITISH CROWN. Since 1763, the Crown has recognized a nation to nation relationship with Canadian First Nations. But with Canada's confederation in 1867, the Crown in question ceased to be the British Crown and instead became the CANADIAN Crown. We are a Constitutional Monarchy, and our Queen is called Elizabeth Windsor. Like a businessperson who chairs two different company boards, I understand that she is also the Queen of some other country(s), not only of Canada, but that does not change the fact that the appeal was not to the British Crown but to the Canadian Crown. This is a basic mistake that I hope the article's author will correct.

Good morning,

The draft report Christine is working on regarding the above, Christine had told me that it was to be sent within CI by Wednesday. Was that next Wednesday?

Reason asking is the Mike Lesage wanted to provide Deputy Lang something Monday as an update.

If you have an update that he can share with Deputy Lang for Monday that would be great.

Thanks

Mike

Hi Brittany, while we have had an IO following this, I am not sure he is well positioned to speak on it. I am not aware of any analysts who would be prepared to speak on it. The OPP may be a better choice for this topic. I have forwarded this request to Lorelei for any further commentary or ideas

Hey Heather- Just a quick question for you,

Oxford Properties reached out to me this morning to inquire if I knew of someone who could speak to domestic extremism in Canada, particularly Idle No More on their annual security conference. I don't know if we have any speakers here who would be able to cover that topic. I just thought I would follow up with you to see. Its June 5-6 at the intercontinental hotel downtown Toronto. Looking for a 45 minute presentation. It will have senior security managers from across the country.

Anyway let me know!

Spot Report – IDLE NO MORE

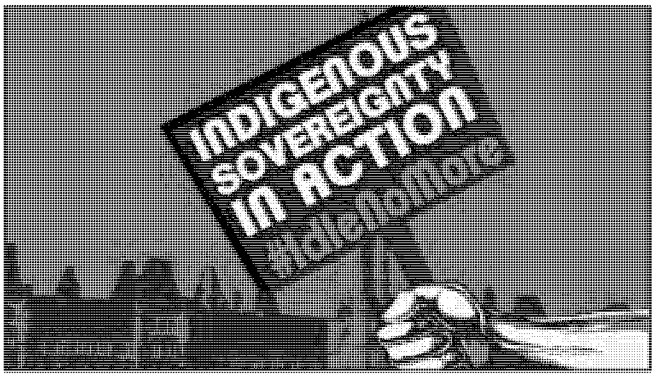
February 2013

DESCRIPTION:

Idle No More (INM) is a national movement originating among Aboriginal peoples in Canada concerned over First Nations relations with the Government of Canada and Indigenous sovereignty, rights and treaties.



Primarily a grassroots movement, it was inspired by Attawapiskat Chief Spence who held a 44-day hunger strike from December 11, 2012 to January 24, 2013. Chief Spence ended her hunger strike after other Chiefs and federal opposition parties signed a declaration addressing some of her concerns.

Peaceful, relatively brief public awareness demonstrations have occurred in shopping malls, government and public facilities, First Nations Band Offices and transportation infrastructure.

BACKGROUND:

In October 2012 the Conservative government introduced the Jobs and Growth Act, informally referred to as Bill C-45. It was passed in December 2012 and is currently awaiting approval from the Governor General. While historical First Nations' grievances fuelled the Idle No More movement, Bill C-45 was the primary catalyst for its genesis.

Attawapiskat First Nation

On January 7th the Federal Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development released an independent audit of the Attawapiskat First Nation's finances revealing a lack of accountability for the band council's expenditures of nearly $104 million in federal government funding between 2005 and 2011.

Attawapiskat Chief Spence stated the AANDC audit release served to distract from the "true issues" of the Idle No More movement, designed to discredit her.

Bill C-45 would amend existing legislation including, but not limited to, the Indian Act, Navigable Waters Protection Act and the Canadian Environmental Assessment Act. Opponents are concerned that amendments to the Indian Act may allow for easier privatization of treaty lands through a referendum vote, providing the Aboriginal Affairs minister powers to surrender reserve territory. Amendments to the Navigable Waters Protection Act will remove thousands of waterways under federal protection. First Nations and environmentalists are concerned over the substantial decrease in protected waterways and suspect current environmental protection standards may decline.

February 2013

Amendments to Canada's Environmental Assessment Act were made last year when the first omnibus bill was passed giving ministers more approval power over energy and pipeline projects. Bill C-45 makes further changes to the Act, so that only major projects will undergo environmental evaluations. First Nations and environmentalists suspect the changes to the Act are biased in favour of the resource industry.

CURRENT STATUS:

In the month of January, several dozen demonstrations, rallies, flash mobs, road blockades and information pickets occurred throughout BC. Demonstrations included three 'Idle No More National Day of Actions':

JANUARY 11th Idle No More National Day of Action

In response to calls for engagement, Prime Minister Harper agreed to meet with First Nations leaders on January 11th, 2013. Many Chiefs boycotted the meeting citing concerns over inequitable 'Nation to Nation' representation and that the Governor General would not be in attendance.

A protest occurred on Parliament Hill to coincide with the meeting with PM Harper. Several hundred protestors rallied in front of Parliament, blocking the main entrance into the Prime Minister's office.

Following the meeting, Grand Chief Matthew Coon Come and Federal Minister of Aboriginal Affairs John Duncan provided statements. Both indicated of upcoming "high level dialogue" relating to treaty process, specific land claims and duty to consult with First Nations. No scheduled dates were indicated.

The Kelowna Idle No More demonstration coincided with an anti-Enbridge event. Approximately 200 protestors gathered outside the Sandman Inn and marched on Harvey Ave, however, they did not enter the travel portion of the highway.

During the planning of both events, conflict arose resulting in the groups disassociating themselves. The INM organiser indicated that the event was peaceful and did not condone violence.

gave the Sandman representative 2 choices, 1) facilitate a smooth event or 2) have bad press on National TV.

On January 25th Enbridge announced that the Joint Review Panel hearing in Kelowna will be closed door due to public safety concerns. Only registered presenters their guest and the media were allowed into the hearing boardroom. A room was provided for the public to hear the audio broadcast in a different location. The change in format fueled anti-Enbridge protestors, citing transparency and accountability concerns.

ANALYSIS:

Grassroots First Nations remain the primary organizers of Idle No More demonstrations, some occurring without the support of their respective Chief and Council. The movement does not have one singular grievance as evidenced by the historical CN Rail issue in New Hazelton and the concerns surrounding the proposed Enbridge pipeline.

Idle No More National Day of Actions are scheduled to coincide with significant Parliamentary dates, however, local demonstrations continue to be organised infrequently throughout the province. Common locations include City Halls, Conservative MP Offices and major transportation arteries.

The Idle No More movement has succeeded to garner political and media attention and the support of environmental, labour and social groups. The movement has abated slightly, however, is expected to continue to a lesser degree than what has been observed.

Subject: Conférence à Edmonton : le mouvement Idle No More poursuit son combat (Radio-Canada, 2013-02-08)

Un événement présenté par la Faculté des études autochtones de l'Université de l'Alberta sur les enjeux d'Idle No More démontre que la lutte du mouvement est loin d'être terminée.
Environ 300 personnes ont assisté à la conférence « Understanding Idle No More » présidée par sept intervenants. L'un d'entre eux, Wab Kinew, directeur de l'inclusion des Autochtones à l'Université de Winnipeg, a voulu lancer un message d'espoir aux jeunes autochtones.
« Le défi est qu'on doit trouver des façons de donner des opportunités aux jeunes autochtones », a-t-il dit.
M. Kinew a ajouté que la vie était pleine d'embûches, mais qu'il croyait que le mouvement Idle No More pouvait aider à assurer un meilleur avenir aux prochaines générations.
Lors de la conférence, les intervenants ont aussi abordé la viabilité du mouvement et les manières de l'améliorer. Certains ont indiqué qu'Idle No More avait besoin de plus de personnalités inspirantes pour prendre davantage d'ampleur.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. -- An Idle No More organizer says she has contacted police after receiving a bizarre package containing death threats.
Lesley Belleau, who lives in Peterborough, Ont., said she learned of the threats from her sister, who received the envelope last week.
Belleau said inside the package was a letter with the words, "You are a dead piece of sh-t. A good Indian is a Dead Indian. Stay away from the SOO Lesley Belleau."
"It's pretty outrageous, really," Belleau said in a recent interview.
Also in the envelope were newspaper clippings that reference Belleau's involvement in Idle No More protests in the Sault area and a cut-out photo of Assembly of First Nations National Chief Shawn Atleo.
Belleau said the Atleo photo was defaced with lewd drawings and depictions of guns around his head.
Belleau, a native of Garden River who is studying for her PhD, said she has reported the letter to police. She said she hasn't seen the package itself, but had it described to her in detail by her sister.
The envelope, which actually went to another address before being delivered to Belleau's sister early last week, was addressed from "Red Nosen, Echo Bay." Belleau said it was post marked Jan. 4.
The Anishinabek Police detachment in Garden River could not be reached for comment.
Belleau, whose father was part of the Oka Crisis in Quebec in 1990, said this isn't the first time her family has been the target of what seems to be a racially motivated threat.

Subject: IDLE NO MORE DECLARES THE TREATIES AND INHERENT RIGHTS BREACHED AND/OR INFRINGED
(IdleNoMore.ca via Google Cache) - Feb. 11 1705

We call on the AFN National Chief, Shaun Atleo to denounce the actions of the Conservative Government and the Department of Indians Affairs, now known as Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada (AANDC). In light of the following disturbing circumstances, we also respectfully ask National Chief Shaun Atleo to decline the acceptance of his impending Indspire Award for Education which he is scheduled to accept on Friday February 15, 2013 in Saskatoon.
February 8th, 2013 (Saskatoon, Saskatchewan): A meeting was scheduled by the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada ("AANDC") at the TCU Center in Saskatoon for 'consultations' on Education. These 'consultations' stem from a joint Canada-Assembly of First Nations Action Plan on Education. The development for federal legislation on First Nations Education originates in a report entitled "National Panel on First Nation Elementary and Secondary Education" supported by the AFN. During the meeting, no one from the AFN objected to this process despite much opposition from the grassroots people. This meeting is one of several 'consultations' that will take place across the country for the development of proposed federal legislation on education. The creation of a First Nations Education Act will directly impact the Treaty term and promise to education as understood during the time of Treaty making, made by our Forefathers. The consultation process that was utilized is contrary to its own statement of "open and meaningful dialogue" and further, it contradicts the jurisprudence on the Duty to Consult.
The morning meeting was open to the public and was closed in the afternoon, which left many people confused. No reason for closed doors were given beyond, "it was a closed meeting for the afternoon". Many grassroots people felt excluded from a process that directly impacts them, their children and future generations.

Grassroots people who wanted to attend the afternoon session were met with hostility and were refused entry at the door, as they were pushed and shoved by security guards refusing to allow them into the meeting.
Idle No More declares the process illegal and contrary to the international standard of free and prior consent as set forth, which Canada is a signatory, in the "United Nations Declaration of the Rights of Indigenous People (UNDRIP)".

Furthermore, Idle No More declares the Treaties and Inherent Rights breached and/or infringed by the British Crown's successor state, Canada as their was intentional physical exclusion of the grassroots people who are directly and detrimentally impacted by this proposed "consultation process".

FYI

Media Release: On February 14, We Are Idle No More!
Idle No More is organizing events in solidarity with two important initiatives on February 14th:
Idle No More is inviting people to join in creating an inclusive Valentines and organize community events to coincide with One Billion Rising (an international campaign to stop violence against women and girls) and Have a Heart Day (an initiative to support Indigenous children). Candle light vigils, teach-ins, rallies, round dances, and other creative acts of awareness, resistance and solidarity are being encouraged.
♥ V-DAY and One Billion Rising ♥
On Valentine's Day, Idle No More is organizing in solidarity with V-Day, which is a global activist movement to end violence against women and girls. This Valentine's Day, an international event is taking place known as One Billion Rising. It is an attempt to get One Billion Men and Women to rise against violence towards women and girls. This includes solidarity work with activists demanding action on the issue of missing and murdered Indigenous women in Canada, and globally.
♥ HAVE A HEART DAY ♥
On Valentine's Day, February 14, 2013, celebrate Have a Heart Day by supporting Indigenous children to grow up safely at home, get a good education, be healthy, and proud of their cultures. Have a Heart Day is about caring Canadians working together to ensure Indigenous children have proper services that make them feel proud of who they are. Explore the Have a Heart Day website for more information, to send an e-Valentine, or to order Have a Heart Valentine's cards, posters, bookmarks, and buttons, here: www.fncaringsociety.com/have-a-heart (http://www.facebook.com/l.php?u=http%3A%2F%2Fwww.fncaringsociety.com%2Fhave-a-heart&h=wAQF7u0ZY&s=1)

Subject: Atleo to return 'this week' amid renewed call for PM meeting (CBC - 2013-01-21 1655)

Top First Nations chiefs from across the country have set aside their differences for now and signed on to a request for yet another meeting with the prime minister — all in an attempt to bring the protest by Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence to an end.
The Assembly of First Nations' executive agreed to the request in writing and sent a letter to Stephen Harper on the weekend, calling for a meeting as soon as Thursday — a day by which Shawn Atleo could well be back on the job.
Atleo took a sudden sick leave after his controversial meeting with Harper 10 days ago amidst a leadership crisis within the AFN. He issued a statement Monday saying he would be back in the saddle "later this week."
Unlike the divisive Jan. 11 meeting, this week's proposed meeting with Harper would include a broad range of chiefs as well as Gov.-Gen. David Johnston, as requested by Spence.
"The intent behind it is to try to end Chief Spence's hunger strike," said Morley Googoo, regional chief for Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.
And unlike the previous meeting, Spence's spokesman says the Cree leader is onside.
"We all need to work together," said Danny Metatawabin, adding that Spence was feeling "well, chirpy, happy" on Monday morning despite having spent the last six weeks subsisting only on fish broth and medicinal tea.PMO expects 'one-on-one' meeting
There's nothing to suggest Harper is inclined to agree to the request, despite the newfound unity among chiefs. Andrew MacDougall, a spokesman for the prime minister, said Harper would respond to the AFN's letter "in due course."
"For us, the next step is (meeting) National Chief Atleo, one-on-one, to hammer out some of the detail on the way forward," MacDougall said.
The Governor General was not included in the previous meeting because it is the government that makes policy decisions in Canada, not the Queen's representative, he added. "And that's how we're still looking at the matter."
Still, MacDougall acknowledged that there is a great deal of pressure to show concrete results that will lead to material improvements for First Nations peoples.
"We have to keep up the momentum and keep showing that there is progress that can be made."
Googoo said the best way for Harper to show goodwill and immediate progress would be to agree to the Jan. 24 meeting, which would be in addition to the meeting with Atleo to work on treaty implementation and comprehensive claims.Anniversary of Crown-First Nations gathering
Thursday is the AFN's "preferred date" for a broader meeting, he said, because it is the one-year anniversary of a major summit between chiefs, Harper and Johnston that was supposed to reinvigorate the Crown-First Nation relationship. But the AFN realizes there may be a need for some flexibility on the date since it is so soon, Googoo acknowledged.
He said he hopes that a solid commitment to such a meeting would be enough to entice Spence to end her protest.
Harper agreed to a meeting with the AFN, but his exclusion of Johnston and his setting of the meeting agenda prompted Spence and many other chiefs to orchestrate a boycott and question the leadership of Atleo, who went into the meeting despite loud protests in the streets.
In his statement on Monday, Atleo called for unity and rational discussion of internal disagreements. But he also opened the door to structural changes within the national organization, just as conflicts in the past have led to restructuring.
"Many changes were made; many more conversations remain," Atleo writes.
"Let us ensure that those conversations are conducted with respect, respectful of our traditions, respectful of each other and respectful of our different approaches to winning progress for our peoples."
But while angry chiefs have muted their criticism of Atleo for now, they still harbour concerns about his leadership.
"For Ontario, we're just trying to maintain focus on what the objectives are.... There's a concern regarding leadership but there's a process and time for that," said Ontario Regional Chief Stan Beardy, who boycotted the Jan. 11 meeting.
"The sense of urgency there is that Theresa Spence has indicated that she'll continue on with her hunger strike until such time as a meeting takes place."

Subject: Attawapiskat chief won't attend PM meeting in GG's absence - 20 minutes ago (CBC)

FYI, as it could have a significant impact for Friday.

Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence says she won't attend Friday's "working meeting" between First Nations chiefs and Prime Minister Stephen Harper, because the presence of Gov. Gen. David Johnston is "integral" and he won't be there.

"We have sent a letter to Buckingham Palace and requesting that Queen Elizabeth II send forth her representative which is the Governor General of Canada," Spence said in a release. "I will not be attending Friday's meeting with the prime minister, as the Governor General's attendance is integral when discussing inherent and treaty rights."
The key demand of Spence, who has been declining solid food since Dec.11 as a form of protest, is a meeting between the Crown and First Nations to discuss what she characterizes as "treaty issues."
The Assembly of First Nations began holding strategy and planning meetings in Ottawa Tuesday to prepare for Friday's meeting. On Wednesday and Thursday, the AFN is expected to hold ceremonies and other forums to engage its membership and consult in advance of the talks.
Also on Friday, the grassroots protest movement Idle No More announced Tuesday that it's organizing a "one-day national dialogue" with indigenous chiefs to "discuss water, land, sovereignty and treaty relationships" at Fort Qu'Appelle, Saskatchewan's Treaty 4 Governance Centre.

Subject: Charges possible following Idle No More protest in Calgary http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/calgary/story/2013/01/12/calgary-idle-no-more-saturday.html

Calgary Police are investigating whether charges will be laid following an Idle No More protest on Saturday that blocked the 14th Street bridge.

About 75 people marched seven kilometres from Nose Hill Park to the 14th Street bridge where protestors waved signs and chanted while blocking traffic for several hours. Protesters remained on the bridge until about 10:30 p.m. MT Saturday night.
Calgary police issued a press release saying the incident was peacefully resolved and the bridge was open to traffic.
Many of the demonstrators were youths, something organizers said was encouraging.
"We want our children to be healthy. We want them to be educated. We want them to participate in society as equals and this is part of the statement that they're making today and these young people here are very frustrated and they're here to demonstrate," said Alvin Manitopyes.
Another protest is planned for Wednesday afternoon.
Saturday's protest in Calgary was one of many held across the country.

Subject: FYI- Judge slams Ontario police for not breaking up Idle No More protests

National Post - 42 minutes ago

http://news.nationalpost.com/2013/01/07/judge-slams-ontario-police-for-not-breaking-up-idle-no-more-protests/

That protest ended about midnight the same night, but as Judge Brown noted dryly, "not, as it turns out, because the police had assisted in enforcing the order" he granted.
When the judge read in the media Sunday morning that the blockade had ended, he asked CN to submit an affidavit how it had happened.
As the same judge who last month watched — "shocked," he said later, at "such disrespect" — as Sarnia Police ignored his court orders to end another Idle No More blockade on a CN spur line, he was right to be skeptical.
And sure enough, what Judge Brown learned was that once the local sheriff got a copy of his order, by about 10:30 p.m. Saturday, she contacted the Ontario Provincial Police on scene.

The staff-sergeant there told her "it was too dangerous" to attempt to serve the order – on all of 15 protesters.
But, the judge said, he'd made "a time-sensitive order" precisely because the evidence showed that the railway suffered "from each hour the blockade remained in place, yet the OPP would not assist the local sheriff to ensure the order was served...
"Such an approach by the OPP was most disappointing," Judge Brown said, "because it undercut the practical effect of the injunction order.
"That kind of passivity by the police leads me to doubt that a future exists in this province for the use of court injunctions in cases of public demonstrations."

Subject: Idle No More co-founder uneasy with Chief Spence - CBC (Saskatchewan 2013-01-14 21:39)

One of the originators of the Idle No More movement says she is concerned with how Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence has taken a leadership role in the campaign. "Idle No More is the face of all indigenous people, all grassroots people," Sylvia McAdam said Monday, following a forum with university students in Regina. "It's not just the face of one. We hardly have any communications with Chief Spence."

The Idle No More campaign originated on social media, first on Facebook and later with Twitter, when Sylvia McAdam, Nina Wilson, Sheelah Mclean and Jessica Gordon expressed concern about provisions of Bill C-45, which reduce the number of federally protected waterways. "We're going to get off the couch and we're not going to be idle any more," McAdam said about the nascent idea behind the movement. "And we said, 'Why don't we just call it Idle No More?' And it just stuck."

McAdam also questioned the actions of some First Nations planning blockades at border crossings and rail lines. "I think those portray a message of aggressiveness," McAdam said. "That's not peaceful. "We have to be careful with Idle No More that we don't go into areas where we're saying, 'Save the gophers,'" she added. "There has to be a purpose behind it."
She said she is worried about the movement's core message, about protecting land and water in Canada and promoting indigenous sovereignty.
But even McAdam was not precise when it came to defining sovereignty. "We're still talking about that," she said. "We're still defining it as we go." McAdam was also adamant that neither the Assembly of First Nations, nor individual chiefs, are in charge of the Idle No More movement. "History has shown that when movements like this happen, if leadership takes over it kills the movement," she said.
McAdam said the movement is keen to have a global Idle No More rally near the end of January.

http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/calgary/story/2013/01/14/calgary-idle-no-more-latest.html
Some Idle No More organizers in Calgary are appealing to their fellow activists to avoid tactics like roadblocks.
It comes after a group of protesters effectively shut down the 14th Street bridge (http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/calgary/story/2013/01/12/calgary-idle-no-more-saturday.html) on Saturday. Mayor Naheed Nenshi says he recognizes their right to protest, but says participants need to be more respectful.
"You have to be respectful and you have to make sure you're not disrupting people's lives," Nenshi said. "Both from a legal perspective, but also as a longtime activist, that's a bad way to get community support."
Not all of those involved with the Idle No More movement were on board with the idea of shutting down traffic on the bridge.
Chantal Chagnon, an Idle No More organizer, said she was not involved in the 14th Street bridge blockade.
"As soon as the blockade happened, I personally left and I know a lot of other people did," Chagnon said.
She also said organizers need to make sure the movement remains peaceful.
"This is a grassroots movement, but we have to remain peaceful ... one person can really spoil the bunch.... You just have to keep your intentions good," Chagnon said.Wrong direction
Michael Smith, a Métis University of Calgary student, says the movement is heading in the wrong direction.
"As the protest goes on, (we're) moving farther from the ability to have constructive dialogue, not only between the prime minister and the First Nation chief at a high level, also between you and me on the street," Smith said.
Chagnon says more demonstrations are planned as protestors continue to call for the repeal of omnibus Bill C-45, which they say erodes the rights of aboriginal people.
Calgary police are still determining what, if any, charges will be laid against the protesters behind the 14th Street blockade on Saturday. Those charges could range from a city bylaw violation, traffic violation or a charge under the Criminal Code.

The focus is on grassroots voices, treaty and sovereignty;

The National Day of Solidarity & Resurgence was called for December 10th, 2012, to oppose all legislation and to build solidarity while asserting inherent rights and nationhood while protecting the lands for all people.

Bill C 45:

C-45 is a large omnibus bill implementing numerous measures, many of which activists claim weaken environmental protection laws. The First Nationspeople believe that Bill C 45 is not just about a budget, it is a direct attack on First Nations lands and on the bodies of water that they all share from across this country. In particular, laws protecting all of the country's navigable waterways were limited in scope to protect only a few waterways of practical importance for navigation. Many of the affected waterways pass through land reserved to First Nations.The Bill brings forward changes specifically to the Indian Act that will lower the threshold of community consent in the designation and surrender process of Indian Reserve Lands.

When Bill C45 was brought to the House of Commons for a vote, First Nations leaders joined the efforts against Bill C 45 and went to Parliament Hill where they were invited into the House of Commons by the New Democratic Party. However, they were refused entry. This refusal to allow First Nations leadership to respectfully enter the House of Commons triggered an even greater mobilization of First Nations people across the country.

Other legislation on its way through the legislative process that will directly affect First Nations people:

Bill C-27 First Nations Financial Transparency Act
Bill S-2 Family Homes on Reserve and Matrimonial Interests or Right Act
Bill S-6 First Nations Elections Act
Bill S-8 Safe Drinking Water for First Nations
Bill C-428 Indian Act Amendment and Replacement Act
Bill S-207 an Act to amend the Interpretation Act
Bill S-212 First Nations Self-Government Recognition Bill and the "First Nations" Private Ownership Act

First Nations people believe that all of these Bills are in direct violation of Article 18, 19 &20 of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

In reference:

Article 18:Indigenous peoples have the right to participate in decision-making in matters which would affect their rights, through representatives chosen by themselves in accordance with their own procedures, as well as to maintain and develop their own indigenous decision- making institutions.

Article 19: States shall consult and cooperate in good faith with the indigenous peoples concerned through their own representative institutions in order to obtain their free, prior and informed consent before adopting and implementing legislative or administrative measures that may affect them.

Article 20:

a) Indigenous peoples have the right to maintain and develop their political, economic and social systems or institutions, to be secure in the enjoyment of their own means of subsistence and development, and to engage freely in all their traditional and other economic activities.

b) Indigenous peoples deprived of their means of subsistence and developments are entitled to just and fair redress.

Some other Articles for Reference:

Article 35:Indigenous peoples have the right to determine the responsibilities of individuals to their communities.

Article 37:

a) Indigenous peoples have the right to the recognition, observance and enforcement of treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements concluded with States or their successors and to have States honor and respect such treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements.

b) Nothing in this Declaration may be interpreted as diminishing or eliminating the rights of indigenous peoples contained in treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements.

Article 38:States, in consultation and cooperation with indigenous peoples, shall take the appropriate measures, including legislative measures, to achieve the ends of this Declaration.

Mission:

Idle No More calls on all people to join in a revolution which honors and fulfills Indigenous sovereignty which protects the land and water.

On December 10th, Indigenous people and allies stood in solidarity across Canada to assert Indigenous sovereignty and begin the work towards sustainable, renewable development. Idle No More seeks to create solidarity and further support these goals.

Plan of Action:

Support and encourage grassroots to create their own forums to learn more about Indigenous rights and our responsibilities to our Nationhood via teach-ins, rallies and social media.
Build relationships and create understanding with allies across Canada. Take steps to contribute to building relationships with international agencies such as the UN to raise awareness to the conditions Indigenous people have been subjected to and assert our sovereignty in the international arena. Acknowledge and honor the hard work of all grassroots people who have worked, and continue to work towards these goals.

Protest up to date:

The protests started and were timed to coincide with the announcement that Chief Theresa Spence of Attawapiskat was launching a hunger strike to demand a meeting with Prime Minister Harper and the Queen on Aboriginal rights. The Assembly of First Nations then issued an open letter on December 16th, to Governor General David Johnston, calling for a meeting to discuss Spence's demands.

Members of the Sandy Bay First Nations in Manitoba blocked the Trans-Canada Highway.

Members of the Drift pile First Nations also blocked a road on December 18th.

Also onDecember 17th, the Confederacy of Treaty No. 6 First Nations issued a press release saying that they did not recognize the legality of any laws passed by the Government of Canada "including but not limited to Bill C-45, which do not fulfill their constitutionally recognized and affirmed Treaty and Aboriginal rights; as well as the Crown's legal obligations to meaningfully consult and accommodate First Nations."

The group executed their second round dance flash mob in Saskatchewan on December 20th, this time at Midtown Plaza in Saskatoon. 400 people filled the upper and lower levels of the mall for the 10 minutes long flash mob. Also on this day, organizers started gathering people around the Vimy war memorial on the Saskatoon riverbank.

At this time there is a Nation-Wide call by the movement for a peaceful blockade of all Canadian/American border crossings (along with airports) set for January 5th, 2013, in an effort to disturb the Canadian economy.

There is also a local calling (Akwesasne) for a Border Shutdown currently scheduled for January 5th, 2012, between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. The local movement are calling for it to start in the United States and then for participants to walk the bridge north to Cornwall Island. Then Canadians will join in and continue to walk the second bridge until reaching Cornwall's traffic circle where they are planning to stop and dance, thus possibly impeding traffic and shutting down the point of Entry.

Events of IDLE NO MORE January 5th, 2013 DAY OF PROTEST:

Members of different police departments and services, representing both Canada and United-States, were in attendance for the Protest scheduled to take place on January 5th, 2013commencing at 10:00 a.m.

The Cornwall Regional Task Force Unit Command Center (UCC) was made available for this event. Officers from the Akwesasne Mohawk Police Services (AMPS), New York State Patrol (NYSP), Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA), United States Customs Border Patrol (USCBP), Ontario Provincial Police (OPP), Cornwall Community Police Services (CCPS) and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) were present.

Furthermore, CBC News crews, who were positioned at the Duty Free, televised the protest.

. A group of people holding signs were observed at the People's fire waiting for the protesters to cross the south span of the Seaway International Bridge.

11:15 a.m.: Approximately 100 people gathered at the People's Fire location. This assembly did not include the 200-240 protesters who were marching from the United States. At this time, protestors had planned to march across the north span bridge to the City of Cornwall and had in their possession cameras and recording devices. CBC news crews were also on scene.

- Approximately 300 protesters and media were confirmed making their way northbound marching across the second bridge towards the City of Cornwall.

11:45 a.m.: Protesters had now made it to the center of the north span bridge.

The protestors carrying black flags and faces hidden stayed in Cornwall and were approached by police. The black flag groups were from the Montreal area. Most youths were not confrontational and seemed confused as to their contribution and/or role in the protest. They were waiting for their ride to pick them up. Flags were later identified as being part of the Black Block Movement.

At 14:12 p.m.: Cornwall & Massena International Bridges on both sides of the border have re-opened.

CONCLUSIONS / FINDINGS

In the previous weeks the Canadian federal government has indicated it will not meet the demand of a meeting with First Nations groups over environmental concerns.Following this decision, Idle No More called on all people to join in a revolution which honors and fulfills Indigenous sovereignty which protects the land and water.

Cornwall CIS with the help of our local partners (CCPS, OPP, CSIS, CBSA, USBP and CBP) monitored the movement and the blockade.

OUTLOOK / RECOMMENDATIONS

The Idle No More protest was deemed peaceful and without major incidents.

During the protest, several vehicles were allowed to access the bridge for medical and emergency purposes for members of the Mohawk community in need of medical attention within the City of Cornwall, Ontario. Therefore, a lane was kept opened by the Akwesasne Mohawk Police Services for this reason. The goal for police was to foresee and/or prevent any disruption to a purported peaceful protest and to interrupt criminal/extremist groups or lone individual(s) who may have viewed this protest as an opportunity to cause concern for public safety. I believe that the planning and communication amongst partners, organizers and the community permitted law enforcement to ensure a safe and peaceful protest.

January 21, 2013
First, let me express my sincere thanks to all of those who reached out to wish me well in the past week. Indeed, I am making good progress. I am keen to return to my full duties reinvigorated later this week.
As you know, we have reached a critical moment in our history. Recent events have helped to win our issues a higher priority among Canadians and with Canadian governments than at any time in recent years. The proud and determined voices of our peoples, their actions from coast to coast to coast have achieved this unprecedented attention.
The National Executive of the AFN and I are going to maintain this pressure on those governments, as it presents the greatest opportunity to make real progress for all of our peoples in too many years. Our demand for greater justice, fairness and political, social and economic development has never been closer to achievement.
It is important that we remain united behind these demands, the agenda adopted by our peoples in one Assembly after another. Some have been critical of that process, and critical of our decision-making structures. They are not perfect. Some reflect the colonial past we reject. They can be improved and that is a discussion we must have. Today's AFN is the creation of our Elders, building on earlier structures they knew needed reform. Tomorrow's AFN will continue that process.
As we engage in these discussions, we must ensure that dialogue does not prevent us from seizing this moment to achieve change. Our priority, our focus must remain seeking the changes we have fought for, for so long, in the lives of our peoples. Every First Nation, and every Treaty area, must make the choices that are best for them. Together we can lead the momentum to create this opportunity for all our peoples.
As you know, as we have reported in detail, we won progress in our January 11th meeting with the Government of Canada. Together, the Chiefs, leaders and Elders who joined that meeting achieved unprecedented movement on an issue essential to winning real progress on any of our issues. We won a commitment to political oversight and direction from the highest level of government – from the Prime Minister, his senior officials and those of the Privy Council Office. In addition, a mandate has been established to advance high level dialogue on fundamental matters of Treaty implementation as determined by Treaty nations, and on comprehensive claims reform. There was a frank exchange on each of the eight items presented and commitment to deliver on the promise of education that every First Nation child and parent can be proud of and action to address the appalling tragedy of our murdered and missing women.
On every one of our priorities, we will continue to press for justice, for fairness, for respect and for change as determined by First Nations. It is our responsibility to drive change for our children, grounded in our rights and culture, we must be prepared to seize every opportunity to achieve the future they deserve.
As a young leader of my community I had the privilege of learning from the wisdom of our Elders. As a leader in British Columbia, I had the honour to be counseled by Elders, from across Canada. As a leader at the national level for the past four years, I have learned from all our former leaders, from the current and former leaders of many diverse Nations. They have described the sometimes painful process of building our structures and our organizations.
At many different points, there have been periods of disagreement and discord. But, at each point, when our peoples have engaged in vigorous debate, we have also listened and respected one another. We overcame each of those challenges while respecting the autonomy of each Nation. We have always recognized that our peoples and their leaders are our decision-makers. As leaders, we come together to advocate, to fight for the achievement of the demands they have chosen.
That process always involved change. When we transformed the National Indian Brotherhood into the Assembly of First Nations, we did it during the politically charged atmosphere of the constitution talks. In December 1980, our Declaration of Nations was adopted creating the foundation for the transformation to the Assembly of First Nations.
We come together as the Assembly of First Nations, as it says in our Charter, "to respect our diversity, to practice tolerance and work together as good neighbours, to unite our strength to maintain our security, and to employ national and international machinery for the promotion of the political, economic and social advancement of our peoples."
In 2005, the AFN Renewal Commission encouraged us to look to the future and to establish the conditions that will ensure our organization is respected by all levels of Government, is rooted in our languages and cultures, is representative of the diverse Nations we serve and, most importantly, is responsive to the demands of our Nations and our peoples. Many changes were made, many more conversations remain.
Let us ensure that those conversations are conducted with respect, respectful of our traditions, respectful of each other, and respectful of our different approaches to winning progress for our peoples. With the wisdom of our Elders, and with the determination of our peoples, we can seize this moment of real opportunity. If we remain inspired and strengthened by the vision of a better day for every one of our children, we can win these victories together.
I look forward to our continued work together, to supporting and respecting one another, to serving our people...and most of all to achieving that better life for all our peoples together with you.

Background

The movement, under the banner "Idle No More" emerged from a grassroots movement that appeared less than five weeks ago in Saskatchewan. It began as an effort to educate First Nations people on the multitude of legislation being put forward by the Harper government that they feel is a direct attack on the rights of First Nations.

The organizers began by organizing "teach-ins" to inform people of impending changes that would impact First Nations people across Canada.

Since early December we have seen an influx of events being organized in support of "Idle No More" across the country. On Dec. 2, an "Idle No More" session was called in Alberta, where more than 150 people drove into Louis Bull First Nation on a Sunday to hear the presenters speak. The organizer for that event took to Twitter and Facebook to help generate awareness on the matter as the passage of Bill C-45 was imminent.

Opposition by First Nations to Bill C-45 garnered national attention when 300 First Nations Chiefs marched on Parliament Hill, and several Chiefs, attempted to enter Parliament to deliver a message to the government. This refusal to allow First Nations leadership to respectfully enter the House of Commons triggered an even greater mobilization of First Nation people across the country. (Dec 4, 2012)

Under what was called a "National Day of Action and Solidarity", First Nations and their supporters organized more than 13 nationwide rallies on Monday, December 10th, to express opposition to the legislation that the Harper Government has put forward in Bill C-45 and other bills. Nationwide, supporters came out in the thousands to support their cause. All events appeared to be peaceful; no reports of violence were located.

Chief Theresa Spense commenced a hunger strike in support of "Idle No More" on December 11, @ 0900hrs. Chief Spense is planning on spending her days on Parliament Hill and returning to Victoria Island for the evening. Three members of the Occupied Ottawa group attended to the media release held on the 10th. No issues have been noted.

Bills in Question

The following bills are what are believed to be in direct violation of Article 18, 19 & 20 of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

Bill C-45 Job and Growth Act (Omnibus bill includes Indian Act amendments regarding voting on-reserve, land surrender/designations)

Bill C-27 First Nations Financial Transparency Act

Bill S-2 Family Homes on Reserve and Matrimonial Interests or Right Act

Bill S-6 First Nations Elections Act

Bill S-8 Safe Drinking Water for First Nations

Bill C-428 Indian Act Amendment and Replacement Act This list is a list of Senate Public Bills:

Bill S-207 An Act to amend the Interpretation Act

Bill S-212 First Nations Self-Government Recognition Bill and the "First Nations" Private Ownership Act

Article 18

Indigenous peoples have the right to participate in decision-making in matters which would affect their rights, through representatives chosen by themselves in accordance with their own procedures, as well as to maintain and develop their own indigenous decision- making institutions.

Article 19

States shall consult and cooperate in good faith with the indigenous peoples concerned through their own representative institutions in order to obtain their free, prior and informed consent before adopting and implementing legislative or administrative measures that may affect them.

Article 20

1. Indigenous peoples have the right to maintain and develop their political, economic and social systems or institutions, to be secure in the enjoyment of their own means of subsistence and development, and to engage freely in all their traditional and other eco- nomic activities.

2. Indigenous peoples deprived of their means of subsistence and development is entitled to just and fair redress.

Intelligence

- The Council of Canadians is in support of the events and is encouraging Council of Canadian activists to participate in these actions. (Council of Canadians: work to protect Canadian independence by promoting progressive policies on fair trade, clean water, energy security, public health care and other issues of social and economic concern to Canadians).
- Organizers are primarily educate, recruit, mobilize and organize supporters.
- There are numerous events scheduled throughout the month of December in various locations across the country (www.idlenomore.com).
- There have been numerous web pages located regarding events scheduled for December 21, 2012. (Ottawa, Edmonton, North Battleford, Winnipeg and Lethbridge).
- Although there has been mention of many different demonstrations,
- At this time, December 21st appears to be the only day of action identified for the Ottawa Region.

A. Ottawa (ON): Participants are to gather at Victoria Island at 1200hrs for a traditional ceremony. A march to Parliament Hill will follow, speeches, presentations and entertainers will be heard. A feast will commence at 1700hrs at a venue that has yet to be determined.

Participants: 1467 going, with an additional 596 who may be attending.

B. Edmonton (AB): Organizers are still in the planning stages for the event.

Participants: 2218 going, with an additional 575 who may be attending.

- "Idle No More" is requesting that the events be a peaceful demonstration of solidarity.

Conclusion/ tactical consideration

1. Frustration levels of Aboriginal Chiefs and community members appear to have reached an all time high. The frustration is with all levels of Government for not consulting with the Chiefs and/or Community members on issues of major concerns which impact on our First Nations Communities.

2. That being said, thus far events supporting the "Idle No More" cause have been peaceful with no reports of violence located.

3. It is not unusual for groups to organize themselves at the very last minute. It is anticipated that further information regarding estimated number of participants and logistical details will become available over the next few days.

4. Participants from outside of the NCR should be expected. However, with events being held in other parts of the country, the number of participants in Ottawa could be reduced.

The Protective Investigative Unit will continue to provide updates accordingly.

BY MICHAEL WOODS, POSTMEDIA NEWS
Stephen Harper won't commit to a Jan. 24 meeting demanded by some First Nations chiefs, but he will meet soon with Assembly of First Nations National Chief Shawn Atleo.
Manitoba First Nations chiefs said Friday they want a meeting with the prime minister and the Governor General on Jan. 24 on a "nation to nation" basis, echoing the demands of Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence, who is still on a protest fast.
Many chiefs opposed Atleo's decision to meet with the prime minister Jan. 11, demanding Gov. Gen. David Johnston's presence and a bigger venue, to accommodate more chiefs. Those conditions were reiterated on Friday.
"As we said following the meeting last week, the Prime Minister will be meeting with the National Chief in the coming weeks," Harper spokesman Carl Vallée said, adding that the prime minister's office has yet to receive a request from the AFN.
The AFN is said to be in the process of writing a letter to Harper requesting the meeting, which Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs Grand Chief Derek Nepinak said needs to be "on our terms."
"We will not bow down to prescriptive and predetermined agendas. We will not bow down to the types of meetings that we've had in the past with the prime minister," said Nepinak, who was among those protesting outside the Jan. 11 meeting.

Subject: Budget 2013 could reinvigorate Idle No More movement (Vancouver Sun, 2013-03-24)

OTTAWA – Last week's federal budget has left a sour taste in the mouths of some First Nations leaders, who say it represents the status quo in the Conservatives' approach to indigenous issues, and its job training program for young Aboriginal People is paternalistic.

"The initial response is that it's not satisfactory. We're disappointed," said Roger Augustine, Assembly of First Nations Regional Chief for New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. "It wasn't a respectful budget."

Augustine has been a voice of moderation during the grassroots indigenous Idle No More movement, which grew in response to last year's Conservative omnibus budget bills. He attended a controversial Jan. 11 meeting of First Nations leaders with Prime Minister Stephen Harper in Ottawa at the height of the protests, a meeting some chiefs loudly opposed.

Augustine left that meeting feeling optimistic. But he said on Sunday that progress is "nowhere near what we talked about, and what we agreed on."

"Personally, I'm disappointed," he said. "We took a fair amount of risk going there. I'm not sure today we can say that it was worth it."

Budget 2013 is sprinkled with references to aboriginals and reiterates Harper's commitment to a high-level dialogue on treaties and comprehensive claims. It also maintains funding in areas such as aboriginal justice, family violence prevention and health services on reserves.

But critics say it does not do enough to address the root causes of poor education, housing and drinking water conditions on reserves, and lament that its centerpiece for First Nations – the $241 million First Nations Job Fund – ties income assistance funding to mandatory job training for young aboriginals on reserves.

"Funding will be accessible only to those reserve communities that choose to implement mandatory participation in training for young Income Assistance recipients," the budget says of the program.

Assembly of First Nations National Chief Shawn Atleo has suggested that that move blindsided him. He told CBC's The House that skills training funding has long been a priority for First Nations leaders, but this was a unilateral move on the government's part.

"It's not just what's delivered, but how it's delivered. The experience that First Nations have is not only unilateral imposition, but ... one where First Nations are told how the policies should be rolled out," he said. "That's a pattern of paternalism that absolutely has to be broken."

The government says the change will improve income assistance to help First Nations youth gain the skills they need to get jobs, and it's based on existing successful pilot programs.

"The improved program will help ensure that young recipients who can work have the incentives to participate in the training necessary for them to gain employment," said Jason MacDonald, a spokesman for Aboriginal Affairs Minister Bernard Valcourt.

Augustine said he's not sure what the next step is with the federal government, but indigenous peoples are growing angry and frustrated.

"I find that we're treated like strangers," he said. "We're treated like people who don't have any rights. And that, to me, is totally outrageous."

A follow-up meeting between Atleo and Harper was to occur in the weeks following Jan. 11, and was seen as a measuring stick for progress on the issues. But Augustine said on Sunday that Atleo is "very disappointed" and will no longer try to arrange a meeting with the prime minister.

Pam Palmater, the Mi'kmaq lawyer and Ryerson University professor who is a de facto spokesperson for the Idle No More movement, said the budget shows the government will continue to act unilaterally.

"I think some people didn't want to believe that. I think now, you couldn't get any more direct proof," Palmater said, adding that Canadians should expect a revival of Idle No More protests with the arrival of spring weather.

A rallying point could come as early as Monday, with the arrival on Parliament Hill of hundreds of trekkers, a group that started with six youths and an elder who left the shores of James Bay in January to make the 1,300-kilometre trek to Ottawa. The welcoming party will include Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence, who helped galvanize the Idle No More movement in December and January with her 44-day protest fast on an island near Parliament Hill.http://www.vancouversun.com/life/Budget+2013+could+reinvigorate+Idle+More+movement/8145610/story.html

A Manitoba First Nation is being sued by Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting for a series of Idle No More protests and blockades.
The company claims protestors from Mathias Colomb Cree Nation (MCCN) caused a safety risk to employees when they blocked the entrance to a mining site near Snow Lake in January and March.
Protestors claim it was the company that closed the gate. They also disagree it was a blockade.
"Actually we didn't organize blockades. We organized demonstrations where you go and exercise some of our treaty rights on our ancestral lands," said MCCN Chief Arlen Dumas.
Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting also wants an injuction against any further protests. But Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs Grand Chief Derek Nepinak said the court action will not shut down the protests.
"Absolutely not, I think it's going to pour some fuel on a fire and it's going to make things a lot warmer," he said.
He also expects more lawsuits to follow.
"You're kind of seeing the counter to many of the Idle No More initiatives that have been launched across the country. It's not just happening here in Manitoba, it's happening in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario," Nepinak said.

Sir,

Today's weekly briefings will follow accordingly.

There are two items of interest to bring to your attention. These will not be reported in the INM report as they are not directly related to the Idle No More organizers/grassroots movement. This information was received through the Idle No More generic inbox.

1- Event planned for today in Sarnia, Ontario - "Utlimate Toxic Tour of Canada's Chemical Valley"
"the Aamjiwnaang Blockade group is planning on March 15th their 'Ultimate Toxic Tour of Canada's Chemical Valley' in Sarnia. The event is scheduled to begin at 12 EDT with an opening ceremony at Rainbow Park followed by walk to Vidal Street. 121 are indicating they are going. [...] Members are indicating that actions will be peaceful

2- Unist'ot'en Protest Camp (Spring Pithouse Construction and Permaculture) in opposition to the Enbridge pipeline, in the Peace River Region, British Columbia
According to reports provided by E Division, over 77 individuals are planning to participate to the construction of an unsolicited resistance camp in British Columbia. Some attendees would be members of/in support of the Deep Green Resistance (DGR) movement. Local INM organizers have also stated there will be future joint events with the DGR. However, no national/official INM sites confirm that statement.

Subject: Idle No More: Quebec Cree on epic walk to Ottawa picking up supporters along the way

Inspired by Chief Theresa Spence's hunger strike, a small group of Cree from Hudson Bay set out two months ago to walk 1,500 kilometres to Ottawa.

On the frozen shores of Hudson's Bay in January, a small group of Great Whale Cree strapped on their mukluks, pulled on their parkas and set out on an epic and frigid journey on foot to Ottawa.

Drawing inspiration from Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence (http://www.thestar.com/opinion/editorials/2013/01/24/chief_theresa_spence_can_end_hunger_strike_with_head_high_editorial.html) during her fast more than 1,500 kilometres to the south, six youth and a 49-year-old master hunter decided they too wanted to do something to draw attention to aboriginal issues and joined the ad hoc actions of the Idle No More (http://idlenomore.ca/) movement taking place all over the country.

Almost two months after they departed Whapmagoostui-Kuujjuaraapik (http://goo.gl/maps/JDLQn), Que., in –40 C weather, the walkers have covered more than 1,000 kilometres (http://nishiyuujourney.ca/) and rallied about 100 people to join them from communities along the way.
"They're very determined," said Matthew Mukash, a spokesperson for the march, who stayed behind but keeps tabs on the walkers. "The second day, in the evening, it went down to –58 and they slept in their canvas-covered lodge. . . . They went on like that for a month."

This week, the group crossed into Algonquin territory and received a raucous welcome from locals in Lac-Simon, Que., before being treated to a feast with the whole community.

"The time to stand united is now," wrote Whapmagoostui Chief Stanley George in a letter of support. "Our youths will reinforce the traditional bonds that existed between the Cree Nation and our historical allies by restoring the traditional trade routes that linked the Cree, Algonquin, Mohawk and other First Nations."

When the march continued the next day, they were joined by several members of the community who had been training ever since they heard about the walk.

On March 25 the marchers expect to reach Parliament Hill, where New Democrat MP Romeo Saganash (Abitibi—Baie-James—Nunavik—Eeyou) will gather a welcoming party to greet them.

Op-Ed: Aboriginal issues are on the agenda

The Idle No More movement has placed the political claims of Canada's Aboriginal peoples squarely on the national political agenda.

Whatever results ultimately follow the surge of activism that is the Idle No More movement, one thing is clear: the movement has placed the political claims of Canada's Aboriginal peoples squarely on the national political agenda — and that's no small victory.
This is the great challenge for Bernard Valcourt, Canada's new Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: Political action requires attention. The concerns of Aboriginal Canadians now demand that attention.
An online poll conducted in late January by Nanos Research reveals that almost two-thirds of Canadians have heard of the movement. Among older — and typically better-informed — Canadians this figure swells to 80 per cent. Even more impressive is the level of awareness among younger Canadians. Just shy of one-half of respondents in the notoriously apathetic 18-to-29 age group reported to Nanos that they were familiar with Idle No More. This is a group of Canadians, it should be noted, for whom voting is the exception rather than the rule.
Canadians' awareness of Idle No More is remarkable by any standard, but especially when placed in the context of Canadians' typical level of attention to the concerns of Aboriginal peoples.
One barometer of the level of concern Canadians feel in regards to political issues is their response to so-called MIP — "most important problem" — questions. Used by commercial and academic survey researchers across the world, such questions allow respondents to identify for themselves, and to tell pollsters, the political problem that is top of mind for them.
For instance, the Environics Institute, as part of the long-running Focus Canada survey series, asked Canadians late last year to identify the "most important problem facing Canadians." As it was in 2011, the top-ranked issue was by far the economy (44 per cent), followed, after a great distance, by health care (nine per cent).
By this indicator, the distinctive political claims of Aboriginal peoples were, in effect, invisible. Fewer than one in 50 Canadians mentioned a concern that could be grouped under such a heading. 2012 was by no means unusual. Relying, again, on the Focus Canada surveys (see www.queensu.ca/cora), we discover that, since 1987, "Aboriginal issues" were consistently low on the list of Canadians' collective priorities. In no year did concern over Aboriginals' political claims exceed the "one-in-50 mentions" threshold.
An assertion like this deserves careful qualification. The MIP question, it must be said, is an imperfect indicator of the importance Canadians attach to issues, as it allows just one problem to be mentioned by a survey respondent.
When a single issue clearly dominates the political agenda, as the economy has in recent years, it's hardly surprising that most everyone names it as the country's most important concern, even if other political matters are on citizens' minds. So of course it is possible that Aboriginals' political claims are (or have been) important to some Canadians, even if they aren't the "most important problem" for many. But even so, other issues do show up in response to most important problem questions. For example, at the end of 2008, when a stratospheric 60 per cent of Canadians named either the economy or unemployment as their foremost concern, around five per cent of respondents named the environment. Another five per cent said health care while 2.6 per cent picked hunger and homelessness. Aboriginal issues, as a stand alone concern, just don't seem to register.

If could be that concern about Aboriginal peoples and their political claims is buried within concern expressed about other issues. The state of the economy and the health care system, after all, are "Aboriginal issues" too. Even the distinctive political claims of Aboriginals — regarding self-government, for instance — may be embedded in expressions of concern over other issues, for example, the Constitution and national unity. This is fair enough. But even in the halcyon days — for constitutional politics — of the early '90s, the public's priorities were out of step with those of the political elite of the day: just 10.8 per cent of Canadians named national unity as their top concern in the immediate wake of the collapse of the Meech Lake Accord, five points behind the top-ranked issue (environment).

Even if we assume, then, that some of the concern expressed over the Constitution/national unity in the early '90s embraced the claims of Aboriginal peoples (a plausible assumption — the standoff at Oka was the other big story in summer, 1990), Canadians' attention to these claims is notable primarily for its absence.

Not so today. Idle No More has attracted the notice of Canadians to a highly unusual, if not unprecedented, degree. This puts their claims squarely on the agenda of Valcourt.

Attention to an issue is not an unqualified blessing, as attention and opinions are different things. By a slight margin, the Nanos poll suggests Canadians' impressions of Idle No More tend toward the negative. Focusing on the balance of opinion misses the main point, however. At this very moment, the Idle No More movement is relatively well positioned, by historical standards, to define Canadian thinking about the political claims of Aboriginal peoples.

Commanding attention to one's message is the first step in political persuasion. And Canadians seem to be listening. Whether the Idle No More movement can agree on and persuasively formulate their demands is the next most important question. The responses of Prime Minister Stephen Harper and Valcourt will then be the thing to watch.

Subject: Other items of interest - Idle No More Reporting

Sir,

Since it was received in the Idle No More generic inbox, please find below two items of interest. However, they will not be reported in today's weekly briefing as it is not related to the Idle No More organizers/grassroots movement.

1- Event planned for today in Sarnia, Ontario - "Utlimate Toxic Tour of Canada's Chemical Valley"
Information was received from Imperial Oil Limited Security (Calgary). No confirmation was received by O Division or the OPP that this event will be occurring. According to third party information:
"the Aamjiwnaang Blockade group is planning on March 15th their 'Ultimate Toxic Tour of Canada's Chemical Valley' in Sarnia. The event is scheduled to begin at 12 EDT with an opening ceremony at Rainbow Park followed by walk to Vidal Street. 121 are indicating they are going. [...] Members are indicating that actions will be peaceful.

2- Unist'ot'en Protest Camp (Spring Pithouse Construction and Permaculture) in opposition to the Enbridge pipeline, in the Peace River Region, British Columbia
According to reports provided by E Division, over 77 individuals are planning to participate to the construction of a unsolicited resistance camp in the above mentioned location. According to preliminary intelligence and open-sources information, some attendees would be member of/in support of the Deep Green Resistance (DGR) movement. Some local INM organizers have also stated they will be future joint events with the DGR. However, no national/official INM sites confirms that statement.
DGR "official" website: "We are used to being labeled radicals, and sometimes, we use that term to refer to ourselves

Today's briefing (and his unclassified version) is expected to be published on the regular time frame (around 1300).

Subject: RCMP NHQ Criminal Intelligence - Idle No More

As discussed Christine,

Good morning Sir,

Please find below the requested information for

- Since December 10th, 2012, approximately 850 "Idle No More" events have been recorded at the RCMP national level. As of today, March 11th, 22 events are in planning stage until June 21st.

- Approximately 253 events would have been recorded in Ontario. Only four (4) events are in planning stage.

These numbers should be considered approximative and the RCMP has not confirmed that these events have actually taken place.

PREFACE

This year, 2013, is the 250th anniversary of the Royal Proclamation of 1763 (pictured on the cover). The Royal Proclamation is widely regarded as having been one of the cardinal steps in the relationship between Aboriginals and non-Aboriginals in British North America – what eventually became Canada.

A quarter of a millennium later it is our judgment that that relationship has often not been carried out in the hopeful and respectful spirit envisaged by the Royal Proclamation. The result has been that the status of many Aboriginal people in Canada remains a stain on the national conscience. But it is also the case that we face a new set of circumstances in Aboriginal/non-Aboriginal relations. Indigenous peoples in Canada have, as a result of decades of political, legal, and constitutional activism, acquired unprecedented power and authority. Nowhere is this truer than in the area of natural resources.

This emerging authority coincides with the rise of the demand for Canadian natural resources, a demand driven by the increasing integration of the developing world with the global economy, including the massive urbanisation of many developing countries. Their demand for natural resources to fuel their rise is creating unprecedented economic opportunities for countries like Canada that enjoy a significant natural resource endowment.

The Aboriginal Canada and the Natural Resource Economy project (of which this paper is a part) seeks to attract the attention of policy makers, Aboriginal Canadians, community leaders, opinion leaders, and others to some of the policy challenges that must be overcome if Canadians, Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal alike, are to realise the full value of the potential of the natural resource economy. This project originated in a meeting called by then CEO of the Assembly of First Nations, Richard Jock, with the Macdonald-Laurier Institute. Mr. Jock threw out a challenge to MLI to help the Aboriginal community, as well as other Canadians, to think through how to make the natural resource economy work in the interests of all. We welcome and acknowledge the tremendous support that has been forthcoming from the AFN, other Aboriginal organisations and leaders, charitable foundations, natural resource companies, and others in support of this project.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

For all the meetings, plans and requests by prime ministers and native chiefs, conditions within some First Nations communities languish. While a growing number are improving, others suffer from severe deprivation. The poorer communities often seethe with frustration.

Expectations raised by legal victories and government announcements seem to lead nowhere, or fall away. As the frustrations of unfulfilled expectations rise, anger in the communities festers, especially among young people.

The outcome? An idea that most Canadians would have seen as preposterous a year ago, but which is now very real: the possibility of a disruptive confrontation between Canada's Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal communities.

This paper examines that possibility in the context of five determinants central to an accepted 'feasibility hypothesis' developed by an Oxford researcher:

- Social fractionalization
- The 'warrior cohort'
- Economic and resources factors
- The security determinant, and
- Topography

The hypothesis suggests that feasibility, not root causes, provides the foundation for challenging civil authority. Do these factors support the likelihood of a First Nations insurgency in Canada today? If so, will it occur?

In mid-2012, these questions would have been seen as largely speculative unless one lived close to where Aboriginal protests had taken place. By January 2013, they had taken on entirely different meaning and immediacy.

Social fractionalization

Social fractionalization significantly increases the risk of social conflict. The phenomenon provides motives for an insurgency.

The fractionalization along Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal fault-lines is obvious.

Social life on many reserves is defined by poverty and its consequences. For many Aboriginal people in Canada, but especially for First Nations women and children, life on-reserve is dreary, dark and dangerous.

Over-crowded conditions and poorly constructed and maintained housing are the norm on reserves. Illicit drug use is widespread on many reserves; personal insecurity is a constant.

Left untended as they are today, these social cleavages present a growing danger to citizens in both communities and to Canada.

The warrior cohort

The young warrior cohort is here to stay. By 2017, about 42 percent of the First Nations population on the Prairies will be under the age of 30, over twice the 20 percent in the non-Aboriginal community.

Many young Aboriginal people are disadvantaged by circumstance, government policies, band mismanagement, negative leader models or parental choices. They tend to be poorly educated and unskilled.

To reduce the feasibility of an uprising in the First Nations, Canada needs educational and employment policies that immediately transform future First Nations cohorts aged 15 to 24 into productive, self-reliant people.

The challenge for Canadian and Aboriginal leaders is to rescue today's Aboriginal youth from the negative social effects of Canadian realities and the shortcomings of Indigenous governments. At the same time, they must prevent conditions from disenfranchising future generations of First Nations youth. There is no either/or choice in this situation.

Economic and resources factors

Unfortunately for Canada, the matrix of the economy, national resources and transportation is irreversibly vulnerable. It presents targets that cannot be fully protected. As Canada's economic health becomes more dependent on moving natural resources over long, difficult transportation routes, effective Aboriginal disturbances become more feasible.

And because they are feasible, it follows that strategic, co-ordinated First Nations actions against Canada's economy will occur.

The reality for Canadians and their governments is that in a prolonged dispute, Canada's transportation infrastructure would inevitably be targeted.

Nor is it necessary to disrupt an entire vital transportation system. A strong, enduring protest at a few critical bottlenecks would suffice.

Security factor

The minimal capabilities of Canada's security forces are well understood in Aboriginal communities. Native leaders also understand the reluctance in governments, in the Canadian Forces and police organizations (as demonstrated at Caledonia) to intervene in Aboriginal demonstrations, even when there are urgent and lawful reasons for doing so.

This reinforces the feasibility factor, and makes more certain future challenges to civil authority at times and places of Aboriginal leaders' choosing.

Finding the right balance between legitimate protest and armed confrontation may be difficult, but it must be found. An indispensable part the solution will be policing regimes that assure peaceful Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal people of their rights and freedoms under the law.

Policy options

There are various policy options open to both sides. The federal government, in cooperation with provincial and territorial governments as warranted, might open talks with First Nations people to discuss a new constitutional framework to govern First Nations/Canada relations.

This framework might include measures aimed at diminishing national fragmentation and disarming the warrior cohort as part of a broad national economic and social program.

The options available to Aboriginal peoples are extensive, and were powerfully presented to Canadians during the 2012-2013 protests. The fact that Canada's natural wealth flows unfairly from Aboriginal lands and peoples to non-Aboriginal Canadians is a long-standing, justifiable grievance.

Therefore, it is morally and ethically just that Indigenous peoples act in their own interests and in the interests of their future generations to correct this unfairness. It is also appropriate that First Nations leaders use, or suggest that they will use, whatever peaceful means and advantages they have to achieve this outcome.

Without reasonable shifts in both communities in the near future, a great deal might change for the worse for both First Nations people and for Canadians.

SOMMAIRE

Malgré les innombrables réunions, projets et les demandes répétées des premiers ministres et des chefs autochtones, les conditions de vie demeurent déplorables dans certaines collectivités des Premières nations. Un nombre croissant d'entre elles voient leur situation s'améliorer, mais d'autres souffrent toujours de graves privations. À l'intérieur des communautés les plus démunies, la frustration grandit.

Les espoirs suscités par les victoires juridiques et les annonces des gouvernements ne mènent nulle part ou s'évanouissent. La frustration qui résulte des attentes contrariées fait couver la colère dans les communautés, en particulier chez les jeunes.

Le résultat? Une notion que la plupart des Canadiens auraient écartée pour son apparente absurdité il y a un an est maintenant bien réelle : la possibilité d'un conflit majeur entre les collectivités autochtones et non autochtones du Canada.

Le présent article examine la possibilité de conflit en fonction de cinq déterminants à la base d'une « hypothèse de faisabilité » qui fait consensus et qui a été développée par un chercheur de l'université d'Oxford:

- La fragmentation sociale
- La « cohorte guerrière »
- Les facteurs économie et ressources
- La sécurité, et
- La topographie

L'hypothèse suppose que la faisabilité d'un conflit, et non ses motivations profondes, constitue le fondement d'une contestation de l'autorité civile. Il faut se demander si ces facteurs viennent accroître le risque d'une insurrection des Premières nations au Canada aujourd'hui. Dans l'affirmative, une insurrection se produira-t-elle?

Au milieu de l'année 2012, la plupart d'entre nous auraient considéré ces questions très hypothétiques à moins de vivre tout près des lieux où des protestations autochtones s'étaient déroulées. Mais en janvier 2013, ces questions avaient acquis une toute autre dimension et revêtaient désormais un caractère d'imminence.

La fragmentation sociale

La fragmentation sociale augmente considérablement le risque de conflits sociaux. Ce phénomène peut engendrer des griefs pouvant mener à une insurrection.

Le clivage entre les collectivités autochtones et non autochtones est déjà évident. La vie sociale dans de nombreuses réserves est marquée par la pauvreté et ses conséquences. Pour de nombreux autochtones au Canada, mais surtout pour les femmes et les enfants des Premières nations, la vie dans les réserves est morne, précaire et dangereuse.

Des logements mal construits, mal entretenus et surpeuplés sont la norme dans les réserves. Dans un grand nombre de réserves, la consommation de drogues illicites est largement répandue, tandis que la sécurité personnelle est une préoccupation constante.

Si rien n'est fait pour les faire disparaître, ces clivages sociaux présentent un danger croissant pour les citoyens des deux communautés et pour tout le pays.

La cohorte guerrière

La cohorte de jeunes guerriers va continuer de croître. Ainsi, en 2017, les moins de 30 ans représenteront environ 42 pour cent de la population des Premières nations dans les Prairies, soit deux fois le taux de 20 pour cent enregistré pour la communauté non autochtone.

De nombreux jeunes Autochtones sont défavorisés par les circonstances, les politiques gouvernementales, la mauvaise gestion des bandes, les modèles négatifs de leaders ou certains choix parentaux. Ils ont tendance à être peu instruits et insuffisamment qualifiés pour occuper un emploi.

Afin de réduire la possibilité d'un soulèvement des Premières nations, le Canada doit mettre en œuvre des politiques d'éducation et d'emploi pouvant transformer rapidement les cohortes du groupe d'âge de 15 à 24 ans de manière à les rendre productives et autonomes.

Le défi pour les dirigeants canadiens et autochtones consiste à protéger dès maintenant les jeunes Autochtones des retombées sociales négatives attribuables à la réalité canadienne et à l'impuissance des gouvernements autochtones. Ce faisant, les dirigeants doivent cependant veiller à éviter de priver de leurs droits de gouvernance les futures jeunes générations des Premières nations. Il n'y a donc qu'une seule solution à envisager.

Les facteurs économie et ressources

Malheureusement pour le Canada, son économie, ses ressources nationales et ses systèmes de transport se sont développés de telle sorte que leur vulnérabilité a atteint un point de non-retour. Les points névralgiques de l'économie du Canada ne peuvent pas tous être protégés. Celle-ci repose de façon croissante sur le transport des ressources naturelles sur des parcours dont la longueur et les obstacles sont à même de donner prise aux perturbations par les Autochtones.

C'est bien parce que ces perturbations sont réalisables, que les Premières nations mèneront des actions stratégiques et coordonnées contre l'économie canadienne.

La réalité à laquelle font face tous les Canadiens et leurs gouvernements, c'est qu'advenant un conflit prolongé, l'infrastructure de transport du Canada serait inévitablement ciblée.

Nul besoin de perturber un système de transport vital en entier, il suffit de paralyser certains goulots d'étranglement, pendant une période prolongée

Le facteur sécurité

Les communautés autochtones sont bien au fait des capacités minimales des forces de sécurité du Canada. Leurs dirigeants connaissent bien également la réticence des gouvernements, des Forces canadiennes et des services policiers (comme l'a montré l'affrontement autochtone à Caledonia) à intervenir lors des manifestations autochtones, même lorsqu'il peut être impérieux et légitime de le faire.

Cet état de fait renforce le facteur de faisabilité et rend beaucoup plus probable la contestation des autorités civiles à des moments et aux endroits que choisiront les dirigeants autochtones.

Il est difficile de trouver un juste équilibre entre protestation légitime et affrontement armé, mais il faudra y parvenir. La solution devra obligatoirement passer par des régimes de maintien de l'ordre assurant la protection garantie par les lois des droits et libertés des peuples pacifiques, autochtones et non autochtones.

Les options politiques

Diverses options politiques s'offrent aux deux parties. Le gouvernement fédéral, en collaborant au besoin avec les gouvernements provinciaux et territoriaux, pourrait entamer des négociations avec les Premières nations pour discuter d'un nouveau cadre constitutionnel destiné à gouverner les relations entre les Premières nations et le Canada.

Ce cadre pourrait inclure des mesures visant à diminuer la fragmentation au pays et désarmer la cohorte guerrière dans le cadre d'un vaste programme économique et social.

Les solutions à la disposition des peuples autochtones sont très variées et ont été largement démontrées aux Canadiens au cours des manifestations de 2012-2013. Le fait que les peuples autochtones du Canada soient dépouillés des richesses naturelles se trouvant dans leurs territoires au profit des non-Autochtones du Canada constitue une injustice de longue date et un grief tout à fait légitime.

Par conséquent, il est moralement et éthiquement juste que les peuples autochtones agissent dans leur propre intérêt et dans l'intérêt des générations qui suivront afin de corriger cette injustice. Il est également tout à fait raisonnable que les dirigeants des Premières nations utilisent ou se proposent d'utiliser tous les moyens pacifiques et avantages à leur disposition pour atteindre leur but.

Si les positions des deux communautés ne changent pas dans un proche avenir, il faut s'attendre au pire tant pour les peuples des Premières nations que pour les Canadiens.

FIRST NATIONS: OUR DISTANT PARTNERS

The social legacy of Canada's Aboriginal policies and of Aboriginal people's social choices presents to Canadians – Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal alike – a looming, self-reinforcing danger. The thousands of disadvantaged Indigenous people of the past are being reinforced by the frustrated and marginalized children of the present who will, in turn, become the ever-larger lost generation of tomorrow. That the Idle No More movement of 2012-2013 has been driven primarily by the mobilization of Aboriginal youth, many articulate and creative, others angry and disconnected, is a perfect illustration of the cumulative effect of Canada's inability to ensure full Indigenous participation in its wealth and quality of life.

The challenge for Canadian and the Aboriginal communities' formal and informal leaders is to rescue today's Aboriginal youth from the negative social effects of Canadian realities and the shortcomings of Indigenous governments and, at the same time, prevent conditions from disenfranchising future generations of First Nations youth. There is no either/or choice in this situation.

The First Nations struggled with the arrival of newcomers since the time of first contact. While the general pattern of Indigenous-newcomer interaction, defined largely by the fur trade, was collaborative, conflicts did occur. From the time that the Inuit resistance to Martin Frobisher on Baffin Island to the Beothuk clashes with English fishermen in 1612 (Friesen, 1997, pp.47-53) and the Métis-led rebellions in western Canada between 1869 and 1885, Indigenous peoples have demonstrated their frustration with uninvited intrusions into their territories. Since the early 1990s, however, events have challenged the long-term pattern of limited conflict, raising the prospect of more serious tensions in First Nations -Canadian affairs.

Since the early 1990s, events have challenged the long-term pattern of limited conflict, raising the prospect of more serious tensions in First Nations -Canadian affairs.

In July 1990 at Oka, Quebec, a municipal dispute over an Aboriginal land claim escalated into a dispute about sovereignty that led to a prolonged stand-off, the murder of a police officer, and the deployment of Canadian Forces combat units in a substantial Aid of the Civil Powers operation near the village. (Swain, 2010) Through a series of improvised three-party negotiations, these events eventually and unexpectedly changed a domestic law enforcement situation into a transformed Canadian-Indigenous reality having the characteristics of an international confrontation. (Brock, 2010)

After Oka, other disturbances over Indigenous rights occurred across the country, from armed stand-offs in the interior of British Columbia to battles over Aboriginal fishing rights in the Maritimes. The language and temperature of the Indigenous protests showed new signs of increasing anger and frustration. The more violent confrontations over land rights at Caledonia in 2006 led again to governments backing away from flagrant threats from – this time – armed native protesters. Asked why he did not enforce the law, then Commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Policy, Julian Fantino replied:

> Caledonia is not an isolated, stand-alone issue. Caledonia is connected with all these other First Nations issues not only across the province, but country-wide. Everyone's watching what goes on in Caledonia and one misstep in Caledonia will result in a flare-up right across the country of conflict and confrontation. (Blatchford, 2010, p.200)

More threats followed. In 2010, for instance, governments' plans to apply the Harmonized Sales Tax on reserves in Ontario prompted native leaders there to threaten "to shut down the country if we have to" unless the plans were rescinded. In face of these threats (and, some say, of the approaching Toronto G8/G20 meetings), "federal and provincial officials [engaged native leaders in] a frantic round of negotiations." Within a few days, the governments re-instated the extant on-reserve tax exemption. (The Globe and Mail, 16 June 2010)

In some opinion, these and other examples of the "sensitive treatment" of native protests, including some that verged on violations of the law, produced a two-tiered justice system in Canada. Whether such a system is actually the new Canada/First Nations reality, the possibility that such events have "led to an unsettling disquiet in Aboriginal-Canadian state relations" is worrying. (Brock, 2010, p.45) The escalation of Indigenous rhetoric in January 2012, driven by Idle No More assemblies and Chief Theresa Spence's prolonged protest in Ottawa, led to numerous statements from Aboriginal groups that they could and would bring the Canadian economy to its knees through blockades and roadblocks.

A fundamental restructuring of the Aboriginal-government relationship is now central to the demands of First Nations organizations, and it has been presented as the only way out of the current political impasse. Assembly of First Nations (AFN) National Chief, Shawn Atleo, told a large gathering of corporate leaders in Toronto on 23 April 2012, that the First Nations' goal is to "... live the promise of the ancestors ...and fulfill the potential of treaty, a real partnership, and the greatest that this country has yet to achieve." (AFN, Toronto, 23 April 2012)

Yet for all the meetings, plans, and requests by prime ministers and AFN chiefs, conditions within the First Nations community continue to languish.

A major component of this partnership (and a flash point for governments) is the First Nations' demand for much greater control over their lives and, specifically, the resources extracted from their traditional lands. The era of passive acceptance within the Aboriginal community of the exploitation of these resources is ending. Atleo reminded the audience that "almost every resource development activity currently operating or planned is occurring within 200 kilometres of a First Nations community and right in the middle of our traditional territories." (Ibid) And for emphasis, according to quotations published in the National Post, Atleo warned the audience that Canadians faced "an Aboriginal tsunami" that could only be avoided if they (Canadians) "smashed the status quo." (National Post, 24 April 2012.) Atleo's warnings proved prescient, as events of early 2013 demonstrated.

The National Chief of the AFN speaks "as the national representative organization of the First Nations in Canada." (Website of the AFN, "About the AFN") Nevertheless, Chief Atleo, as other national chiefs before him, generally sets the agenda for AFN-government relations and is for many Canadians the face and the voice of the First Nations community.

In reality, local First Nations leadership regimes headed by elected (under the Indian Act) or traditionally appointed chiefs reinforce the idea that Aboriginal people are independent partners in the Canadian confederacy. The chiefs provide strong, accountable administrative order in most – though by no means all – First Nations. (The Frontier Centre for Public Policy, 12 April 2012)

Regional First Nations assemblies in the provinces and territories have also developed important nation-to-nation relationships with premiers and local industries. For Example, the Manitoba Keewatinowi Okimakanak (representing 30 First Nations and 65,000 "First Nations citizens") completed independent negotiations with private industry to support its youth education initiatives in June 2012. (Media release: MKO, 12 June 2012) Other First Nations projects are being developed elsewhere in Canada under the guidance of regional First Nations councils and independent of the federal Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada (AANDC).

AFN national chiefs have sat at meetings concerned with the Canadian constitution, been invited to speak on the floor of the House of Commons and joined federal/provincial conferences. National chiefs are often invited to address meetings of influential leaders of Canada's business community and are the media's first point of contact when a major Aboriginal issue hits the headlines. In January 2012, Chief Atleo, for instance, chaired with Prime Minister Harper a grand meeting of chiefs and federal cabinet ministers to discuss Aboriginal affairs and federal policies..

Yet for all the meetings, plans, and requests by prime ministers and AFN chiefs, conditions within the First Nations community continue to languish. While a growing number of Aboriginal communities are improving, others suffer from severe socio-economic deprivation. Frustration is often present in the poorer communities. Expectations raised by legal victories and government announcements seem to lead nowhere or fall away. As the frustrations of unfulfilled expectations rises, anger in the communities – especially among young people – festers and grows.

Former National Chief of the AFN (1997-2009), Phil Fontaine, then at the pinnacle of his influence as he drove the federal government to apologize for the residential schools tragedy, declared "We have a right to be frustrated, concerned, angry – anger that's building and building." (CTV News, 15 May 2007) Other chiefs, such as often provocative and then Chief Terry Nelson, (Roseau First Nation) more ominously echoed Fontaine's warning. "There's only two ways to deal with the white man. Either you pick up the gun or you stand between him and his money." (Ibid)

On 07 December 2011, First Nations chiefs gathered at a special AFN session in Ottawa. Several of them brought their anger and offered aggressive proposals to their colleagues. Some Manitoba chiefs called for "action" against existing [oil] pipelines. Others declared "It is time to be really aggressive towards the government." Grand Chief Stan Louttit denounced Harper's government. "We are saying no to these governments who want to come to us and put us aside just like we were animals, just like nothing ... people are dying while this is going on." (APTN, 07 December 2011)

Today, some Canadians might assume that because the Parliamentary apology for the residential schools set that issue to rest and because more attention and money is being directed to some Aboriginal communities, Canada's relationship with the First Nations will be calmer.

Following that meeting and a full year before her high profile 2013 protest in Ottawa, Chief Theresa Spence of the impoverished Attawapiskat First Nation in northern Ontario, stood on Parliament Hill in a gathering of the chiefs, and warned Canada. "This is only the beginning, only the beginning. This is a warning to the government that we are going to be more aggressive; that we are going to act together." (Ibid)

Only the prime minister's sudden agreement later that day to meet with all the chiefs (rather than his earlier insistence on meeting only with a small delegation of chiefs) and the forceful intervention of Chief Atleo prevented the gathering from denouncing even more strongly their deep dissatisfaction with Aboriginal-Canadian state relations. Several Manitoba chiefs did, however, assemble on Parliament Hill again to denounce the meetings, the prime minister and Aboriginal affairs in Canada in general. (APTN, 12 December 2011)

The internal disputes in the AFN and the assertive behaviour of a number of Manitoba chiefs continued after the Ottawa meetings. In Winnipeg in June 2012, the tone and mood was still pessimistic and aggressive. On announcing his candidacy for National Chief of the AFN, Terry Nelson urged the chiefs to use the resources on their lands as the means of empowering their communities. When, he declared, the world understands that the First Nations "and not the immigrants are the real owners of all the natural resources wealth in Canada [then we] will begin to have an independent First Nations foreign policy that is not tied to Canada." (Terrance Nelson, Toronto, 17 July 2012)

Other leaders have echoed Nelson's powerful rhetoric. Their common expressions are anger and frustration boiling up from a deep sense of betrayal and unfairness. Not all the anger is expressed by individuals most Canadians dismiss as "radicals." It would be difficult to find a less radical Canadian Aboriginal leader than Justice Murray Sinclair, Chair of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Yet even he recognizes the dangers facing Canada's two communities. "One day soon instead of violence being directed at themselves by other Aboriginal people, the violence [in the First Nations community] will be directed at the general society." (Winnipeg Free Press, 11 November 2011.) Beyond the anger, however, one can hear and see a potent combination of growing confidence, assertiveness and deep despair that the native community must finally capitalize on to direct the destiny of its people for the first time since the arrival of newcomers.

Today, some Canadians might assume that because the Parliamentary apology for the residential schools set that issue to rest and because more attention and money is being directed to some Aboriginal communities, Canada's relationship with the First Nations will be calmer. But then few Canadians or their national leaders sit with First Nations people and listen to their descriptions of the frustration and anger roiling in their communities. They do not hear the determination among leaders to take charge, by whatever means, of their communities' futures. Neither do they understand how vulnerable Canada's economy is to internal disruptions. (See for example, National Post, 17 January 2013; National Post, 21 January 2013)

Destructive national insurgencies are let loose by such misapprehensions and failure to listen and to hear. Idle No More brought all these forces to the country's attention in new and dramatic ways. The prospect of wide-ranging Aboriginal uprisings is suddenly more than real although, until January 2013 at least, protests have been overwhelmingly peaceful events, focussed on combining political statements with cultural events.

In Aboriginal settlements, another image of the future has emerged. If Canadians were alert, they would have sensed, before December 2012, the gathering of Indigenous power – a form of unity not seen before – fuelled by the realization that, as Canada's natural resources industries move farther into "Indian country," the nation's economy will become increasingly vulnerable. Now, with Idle No More, few Canadians can ignore the depth and reach of Aboriginal passion, frustration and determination.

This essay addresses one possible outcome of the current controversies; an idea that most Canadians would have seen as preposterous a year ago but that is now very real. The possibility of a catastrophic confrontation between Canada's settler and Aboriginal communities, spurred not by yesterday's grievances but by the central features and consequences of our national policies, have the potential to make such an uprising feasible if not, one hopes, inevitable.

CHAPTER 1

THE FEASIBILITY HYPOTHESIS

"... where a rebellion is feasible it will occur without any special inducements in terms of motivation." COLLIER, 2009, P. 23

Introduction

Why insurrections – "violent uprisings against an authority or government" (Oxford English Dictionary, 2012) – occur is a question of immediate interest and concern to governments worldwide. The question has interested academics in many countries well before the Arab Spring of 2011, especially as civil wars, rebellions and political chaos developed in many states and regions of the world following the end of the Cold War.

In the late 1990s, scholars advanced numerous theories as to why insurrections occur and why they continue, in some instances for decades. Since 2000, these theories have been tested and examined in great detail by political, international and economic commentators. Their work has done more than produce an impressive library of learned papers and reports for governments, the United Nations, and international organizations; it has also shaped a general consensus on the causes and effects of insurrections in our times.

In 1991, as the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact crumbled, many government leaders worried that the international stability associated with the Cold War, such as it had been, would also fail. Scholars and others turned their attention from Cold War issues to ways to predict why and where insurgencies would break out in Europe and other states, particularly in Africa.

A prevailing assumption was that insurrections would erupt, with armed forces if necessary, to redress the political, economic and social circumstances of once-disadvantaged ethnic, national and regional factions. Indeed, in the early 1990s, there was reason to worry as sectarian wars erupted in the former Yugoslavia, and turmoil engulfed much of Africa. Even today, many regional conflicts resemble a type of "Clash of Civilizations" Samuel Huntington foresaw in 1993, focussed on religious-cultural conflict and occurring along what he called the "fault lines" between civilizations. (Huntington, 1996.)

Although appealing in some respects, grievances as motives (and thus the base explanation for the civil war paradigm) proved inadequate to explain the onset of civil wars and regional violence. Resource wars, occurring mainly in Africa, were seen primarily as strategic means to reach political ends. The logic seemed obvious: insurgents who captured a nation's resources would thereby deprive the existing government of its primary tax base and its means to create and maintain government services and police and military capabilities. Thus, as the government's capabilities withered, the insurgents' wealth and capabilities would increase. Sooner or later, the government would be overthrown. In many cases, the declared aim of such rebellions was to effect a fairer distribution of national wealth. Just as often, the insurgent leaders' motives were uninhibited greed – the transfer (by violent means if necessary) of national wealth and power from ruling factions to themselves.

Eventually, early in this century, some economists began to challenge the ethnic, resources, grievance and greed theories as causes for civil wars and insurgencies.

Eventually, early in this century, some economists began to challenge the ethnic, resources, grievance and greed theories as causes for civil wars and insurgencies. James Feardon, for example, argued that "the factors that explain which countries [are at] risk of civil war are not their ethnic or religious characteristics but rather the conditions that favor insurgency." (Feardon, 2003, p.1) Instead, and among other factors, he marks poverty, weak states (especially ineffective governance), political instability, rough terrain and large populations.

In 1998 and continuing through several research projects to 2009, Oxford economist, Paul Collier, and his colleagues began to note that the usual root causes or greed-and-grievance discourse aimed at predicting rebellion and civil violence was "hopelessly contaminated by advocacy."(Collier, Hoeffler, and Rohner, 2009, p.1) These theories, they argued, were confounded by the rhetoric of special interests and by charismatic leaders who "style [their] rebellion as a protest movement driven to the extreme of violence by the extremity of the conditions which 'our' people face." (Collier, April 2006, p.2) When, however, Collier and his team measured objectively hundreds of cases in widely diverse circumstances and the usual grievances therein, they found "they provide little or no explanatory power in predicting rebellions." (Ibid, p.22)

Research into the economic characteristics of civil conflicts, by contrast, provides explanatory power and pathways to policy remedies. In a particular example of this approach, Susan E. Rice and her colleagues concluded in 1996 that nations with high poverty levels – "[an] enduring robustness of low income per capita," – experience a high risk of internal conflict. The value of their research lies not in this observation but in the usefulness of its conclusion to policy: "polices that increase per capita income in the poorest countries will reduce their conflict risk." (Rice, Graff, and Lewis, 2006, p.13)

Observations from economic research illustrate the utility of the economic approach to the study of the causes and cures of civil wars. This analysis has identified factors that favour insurgencies and provided arguably practical policy suggestions aimed at avoiding and/or resolving dangerous civil conflicts.

The Feasibility Hypothesis

Collier and his colleagues constructed their work on the assumption that the study of civil conflict was "particularly well-suited to statistical analysis." (Collier, Hoeffler, Rohnert, 2009, p.1) They followed the lead of the University of Michigan, Correlates of War researchers who had amassed a comprehensive global dataset on civil wars and added new research material to it. This approach to the study of civil conflict "abstracts [the research] from any particular conflict and subjects the researcher to the discipline of statistical method." (Ibid, p.1) Most importantly, it also allows researchers to consider causes of civil conflict within a standard model across a wide range of social and political variables beyond mere greed and grievances, and across scores of national examples in particular circumstances.

The key assertion is that feasibility, and not root causes, provides the incentive to challenge civil authority.

The theory does not entirely discount motivation as having an influence on civil societies and political agendas. Rather, this comprehensive and complex research project led the team to postulate that "[I]nstead of the circumstances which generate a rebellion being distinctive in terms of motivation, they might be distinctive in the sheer financial and military feasibility of rebellion." (Ibid, p.2, emphasis added). They argue that motivation is essentially and practically indeterminate and offer the feasibility hypothesis instead.

Factors that are important for the financial and military feasibility of rebellion but are unimportant to motivation decisively increase the risk of civil war. "The feasibility hypothesis leaves the motivation of the rebel group unspecified, its initial agenda being determined by the preferences of the social entrepreneur [Mao and Castro] leading whichever organization is the first to occupy the niche."(Ibid, p.3)

The key assertion is that feasibility, and not root causes, provides the incentive to challenge civil authority. As we shall see, it follows that the prevention and/or suppression of insurgencies and rebellions requires a determined effort directed not at so-called root causes, but at the factors that make such uprisings feasible.

The Determinants

Accordingly to this research, feasibility is contingent on five major related determinants.

1. "Social fractionalization," the division of a society by ethnic and religious cleavages, significantly increases risk. In its modelling, Collier's team doubled the fractionalization in its model nation from 18 percent to 36 percent, raising the risk of conflict from 4.6 percent to 6.67 percent. (Ibid, p. 15) Social cleavages may incite armed or unarmed efforts by the minority to change its social/political circumstances. On the other hand, such demands for change might intensify the majority's resistance, including violent resistance, to any change at all.

2. The proportion of males aged 15-19 in the population is significant. "Doubling the proportion of the population in this category increases the risk of conflict from 4.6 to 19.7%." (Ibid, p.16)

3. The state's topography (mountainous or flat) produces a potentially large effect.

4. The proportion of primary commodity exports (i.e., natural resources) in GDP. This factor is particularly sensitive when it coincides with the third factor. In Collier's model, "the risk of dependence upon primary commodity exports [and thus of conflict] is at its peak when exports constitute 25% of GDP." (Ibid p.13) Two measures intensify the primary resources/GDP risk factor. First, risk increases exponentially as the distance between the sources of natural resource and economic goods and their foreign or domestic markets increases. Second, risk increases yet again where transportation systems are long and cross mountainous terrain and where alternative routes are limited or unavailable. These circumstances make defence complex and expensive (i.e., in the number of security forces required) while making offence relatively easy and inexpensive. In such circumstances, vulnerability increases for one side and feasibility increases for the other.

5. Increased certainty of a credible security guarantee makes the risk of civil war more dangerous for insurgents and thus less feasible. In Collier's research, African states where a guarantee (such as in the form of protection from a credible nation or an international organization, i.e. the United Nations) existed "faced a risk of 2.6%" compared with "a civil war risk of 8.2%" in states without such a guarantee. (Ibid, p.15)

These determinants, not mere political motives or the machinations of political leaders, make states more or less vulnerable. Vulnerability makes insurgencies more or less feasible. As Collier concludes "where a rebellion is feasible it will occur." (Ibid, p.2)

The theory's value lies in its political/policy utility: if insurgencies are to be avoided, then one or all of the determinants must be redressed in ways that reduce the state's vulnerability to insurgency. The policy therapy is disarmingly simple: "if the incidences of civil war are to be reduced ... [they] will need to be made more difficult [to instigate]." (Ibid, p.9)

This essay examines the feasibility of a First Nations uprising in Canada in the context of the five determinants central to the feasibility hypothesis. The central questions for Canadian and First Nations leaders are these: do the determinants in Canada today support the suggestion that a First Nations insurgency is feasible? If it is feasible, will it occur? In the middle of 2012, these questions would have been seen as largely speculative unless one lived close to where Aboriginal protests had taken place. By January 2013, the questions had taken on entirely different meaning and immediacy.

CHAPTER 2

THE FIRST DETERMINANT: THE FRACTIONALIZED NATION

Life in the Distant Community: 2012

For many Aboriginal people in Canada, but especially for First Nations women and children, life on-reserve is dreary, dark and dangerous. The statistics tell the a cruel tale. What Canadians should be particularly worried about is the accumulation of disabling social consequences that, year by year, separate the mainstream experiences they live from those of many Indigenous societies. If conditions were different and the country completely heartless, Canada could just wait for time to fade the aging Indigenous population and the associated socio-economic blight slowly out from the national fabric. That is not the Canadian reality.

About 615 First Nations in Canada, situated as "bands," live on some 2,720 reserves across the country. Each Nation is self-defined and more or less governed in traditional ways but subject to the Indian Act nonetheless. AANDC officials oversee in various degrees the administration of these reserves.

Approximately 700,000 individuals identify as First Nations people out of a total Canadian Aboriginal demography of 1,172,790 people that includes Métis and Inuit.[1] (The Daniels decision by the Federal Court in January 2013 raised the possibility that the Metis could become Indians for the purposes of government policy; an appeal of that decision is likely.) The Aboriginal population grew by 45 percent between 1996 and 2006 compared to 8 percent in the non-Aboriginal community over the same period. By 2017, about 42 percent of the First Nations population in the prairies will be under 30 years of age (YOA) compared to less than 20 percent in the non-Aboriginal community in Canada. (StatsCan, 91-552-x, 07 December 2011)

The distribution of First Nations people on- and off-reserve – 40 percent and 55 percent, respectively – is actually difficult to confirm. People move on and off reserves at pleasure. Some people live nearby on private land or as transients moving to work or living off-reserve. Researchers and government officials tend to accept the above split for most general work.

Social life on many reserves is defined by poverty and its consequences. More than 28 percent of on-reserve adults in 2006 were unemployed compared with 16 percent off-reserve. The off-reserve rate, in turn, was nearly twice the non-Aboriginal rate.

The key assertion is that feasibility, and not root causes, provides the incentive to challenge civil authority.

Over-crowded, poorly constructed and maintained housing is the on-reserve norm. According to Statistics Canada (2006), 11 percent of on-reserve families live in "crowded homes" defined as ten or more people living in a small dwelling. More than 40 percent of the houses on a typical reserve require major repairs, such as new roofs, doors, windows, and installation and repairs to water and sewage facilities, the means to heat buildings, and the removal of mold and other contaminates. The Statistic Canada data are dated, but as the media frenzy of 2011-2012 regarding Attawapiskat revealed, there is no reason to believe housing conditions and needs have changed on many reserves. (StatsCan, 97-558-x Ie2006001)

Illicit drug use is also widespread on many reserves. Media reports in 2012, for instance, confirm that the situation is so severe that some reserves have made declarations of emergency to draw attention their situations and request aid for their people. "In 2009, the Nashnawbe Aski Nation ... representing 49 First Nations in northern Ontario declared an emergency over its entire territory." (Postmedia News, 23 February 2012) Leaders in the Cat Lake First Nation in the same region declared an emergency in January 2012, saying it suspects that "400 of its 600 residents were hooked on Oxys [Oxycontin pain medicine]." (CBC News, 16 April 2012) Community drug epidemics bring with them violent attacks on individuals, robbery, and spousal and child abuse. (Winnipeg Free Press, 16 April 2012)

A variety of healthcare determinants, from the rates of diabetes to teenage suicides, infant mortality, and HIV, reveals similarly distressing statistics. "Across Canada, Aboriginal people account for 8 percent of HIV infections" out of a national demographic representing about 4 percent of the population. In Saskatchewan, "the HIV rate ... is more than double the national average" and "77 percent of new cases of HIV are Aboriginal people." (Op cit. Postmedia News, 23 February 2012)

The disaster migrates from the present lost generation to the future lost generation. Saskatchewan's chief medical officers emphasized that the issue in that province is "intergenerational and it's almost a family thing. And that's the real worry, because it means that the family themselves don't have hope and that they've given up on life." (Ibid)

Lives of Crime and Punishment

Violent behaviour and its consequences are remarkable features of Aboriginal life in general. Personal insecurity is a constant factor on First Nations reserves and for the large number of homeless natives, particularly women, in Canadian cities. The statistics confirm this dangerous reality.

- Violent crimes rates: Aboriginal, 319/1,000 compared to 1/1,000 in the non-Aboriginal population;
- Homicide: 8.8/100,000 compared to 1.3/100,000;
- Spousal abuse: 21 percent compared to 6 percent.
- These and other Aboriginal-on-Aboriginal crimes are visited mainly on young people: 461/1,000 for the 15-34 YOA cohort and 192/1,000 for those over 34 YOA.

Overwhelmingly in Canada, the non-Aboriginal community enforces the Criminal Code on the Aboriginal community. Incarceration rates are as remarkable as they are constant. For example, in 2007-2009 "Aboriginal adults accounted for 22% of admissions to sentenced custody, while representing 3% of the Canadian populations." (StatsCan, 85-002-x, Volume 29, No. 3, July 2009. p.5) In the same period, 17 percent of all male inmates in provincial/territorial custody were Aboriginals. More than 18 percent of female inmates were Aboriginals. (The Globe and Mail, 27 September 2012) The federal system kept pace with provincial counts. During the same period approximately 18 percent of all male prisoners and 25 percent to 30 percent of all female prisoners were Aboriginal. (Ibid, p.9; See also Winnipeg Free Press, 03 March 2011)

Personal insecurity is a constant factor on First Nations reserves and for the large number of homeless natives, particularly women, in Canadian cities.

A disproportionate number of youth entering the correctional system in Canada are Aboriginal. A 2010-2011 study reported that Aboriginal female youth comprised 34% of all female youth in the correctional system, while Aboriginal male youth made up 24% of all male youth in the correctional system. By contrast, about 6% of both male and female youth in the general population are Aboriginal. (StatsCan. SC 85-002-x 2012: updated October 2012)

The greater tragedy for these young people is that whenever they are mixed in with the older prison population they are soon recruited by Aboriginal gang member in prison. As police officials understand, "If you're not a member of a gang when you go to jail you will be when you come out. Many prisoners simply cannot survive jail life without the protection of a gang." (Yahoo News, March 15, 2010.) On release from prison most of these young people migrate into criminal gangs and other harmful (to themselves and society) anti-social situations. (MLI. Wilner, October 2010; Confidential interviews Winnipeg 2009-2010; and "the Nelson Files.")

These consequences have their own debilitating economic and social effects on individuals and First Nations communities as well as on the wider Canadians society. The disproportionate number of incarcerated Aboriginal people symbolizes the accumulated social penalties that flow from Aboriginal poverty, poor education, failed families and communities, and from closely related drug use and criminal activities on- and off-reserve. (CPAC, 12 October 2012)

In Manitoba, Aboriginals represent 15 percent of the provincial population but 71 percent of the all prisoners. In Saskatchewan, the ratio is 79 percent out of 15 percent of the provincial population. And in Alberta, the ratio is an astonishing 80 percent out of 11 percent of the people. In a recent report (2010), the federal Correctional Investigator noted that "[I]n the Prairies [Aboriginal people] comprise ... a staggering 60 percent of offenders." As well, "Aboriginal women are even more over-represented than men in the criminal justice system, representing 30 percent of women in federal prisons." This report attributes these statistics to "systemic discrimination and attitudes based on racial and cultural prejudice, as well as economic and social deprivation, substance abuse and a cycle of violence across generations." The Investigator concludes:

> Correctional Service's own statistics regarding outcomes for offenders confirm that, despite years of task force reports, internal reviews, national strategies, partnership agreements, and action plans, there has been no significant progress in improving the overall situation of Aboriginal offenders during the last 20 years." (Correctional Investigator Canada, 02 February 2010, pp.1-2. Also Winnipeg Free Press, 17 March 2011.)

Even if one assumed that the policing, legal and corrections systems are fair – and many Aboriginal peoples assert otherwise – clearly, something ethical, social and legal is amiss.

Time, however, provides no quick solution to this deformity in our society. First Nations communities are not aging, and they are not about to disappear. Rather, the opposite is the reality. The First Nations community is young and growing rapidly – at more than twice the norm in the non-Aboriginal Canadian community (StatsCan 91-552-x. 07 December 2011). As the First Nations community grows, social difficulties expand exponentially. The easy resolution of these problems – if there ever were readily available policy options and if these could ever be defined as easy – vanishes over an ever-receding horizon.

In the terms of the feasibility hypothesis, Canada/First Nations communities are "fractionalized" by "ethnic domination" and linguistic, social, and, to some extent, religious fissures that the feasibility hypothesis "concludes significantly increases risk."

In the terms of the feasibility hypothesis, Canada/First Nations communities are "fractionalized" by "ethnic domination" and linguistic, social, and, to some extent, religious fissures that the feasibility hypothesis "concludes "significantly increases risk." (Collier et al, 2009, p. 14. Also, Collier, 2006; Collier and Hoeffler, 2004; Fearon and Laitin, 2003). Indigenous people are native to the geopolitical landscape known as Canada and thus are set aside from newcomers by culture, history, language and traditions. This uniqueness is recognized in the constitutional, legal, political and other conceptual frameworks that define Canada. As well, First Nations are socially and economically fractionalized from most other people in Canada as is evident in the statistics presented in this essay.

In two respects, this fracture is the result of collective and historical social choices and not, at least conceptually, necessarily conditions imposed on the minority by the majority.

First, the physical separation of thousands of First Nations people to life on and near reserves by their own choice disconnects residents from most public and private benefits available to Canada's larger urban population, including urban First Nations people. While conceptually true, the nature of Canada's Indian policy and the administration of Aboriginal affairs over the past 100 years makes it clear that the hand of government and, therefore, the dominant society is actually an important part of the problem.

Some non-Aboriginal people and communities in the far north or in other isolated parts of Canada suffer the somewhat comparable effects. These populations and especially the younger members in them, however, are mobile and readily move to where the jobs, opportunities and social support mechanisms are available. First Nations people, including younger members, are for several reasons – including the inflexibility of the Indian Act – less eager to move away from their traditional lands, although a sizable outmigration has occurred.

Second, the fractionalization of this truly distinct society is reinforced in everyday conversations and in the statements, declarations and policy choices made by many native leaders. In their view, the very survival of the First Nations as a culture requires the reinforcement of the distinctness and the independence of the people from Canadian society and institutions. An essential component of retaining this distinction is evident in resistance within the community to any legal or social moves by governments to abolish reserves. Aboriginal leaders also resist any reforms aimed at "moving away from the Indian Act," which most chiefs believe protects their treaty rights. (See, for example, Chief George Stanley, Postmedia News, 23 January 23 2012.) Chief Atleo is even more emphatic: "We categorically reject unilateral moves and government tinkering to address singular issues. The [effort to unilaterally amend the] Indian Act marks one of the many direct attacks on our nations including efforts to silence our languages, eliminate our culture and dispossess us of our lands." (National Post, 29 October 2012)

The First Nations leaders in Canada have been explicitly campaigning for the recognition of their nations as separate political partners in a fractured Canada. Their argument is that Canadian federal and provincial governments confiscated native land, broke treaties, stole native resources and shackled the native people to the racist Indian Act.

The underlying intent of these types of claims is expressed in a variety of ways, from personal choices to opt in or out of the dominant society to community strategies for economic development in partnership with companies and governments. In other instances, the Aboriginal goal is to re-assert native sovereignty over the areas in question and then to collect returns from the land as decided by the First Nations themselves.

This drive for or restoration of native sovereignty may someday, somehow, provide a conceptual fix for First Nations and Canadian relations. As a strategy, however, it is confounded by inherent contradictions between the ideal of future First Nations sovereignty and the community's present economic and political dependency on Canada. It is complicated further by the continuing ability of Aboriginal people to win major legal decisions, all based on Canadian and British law, that demonstrate that Indigenous communities can be empowered inside Canada rather than through separation. To the degree that the sovereignist or separatist models hold sway at a local or regional level, however, they will inevitably exaggerate the internal competition – the fractionalization – of Canada.

The fractionalization along Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal fault-lines is obvious. Social fractionalization significantly increases the risk of social conflict. The phenomenon provides motives for an uprising. Moreover, it reinforces the feasibility of an insurgency by dividing Canada's population into readily identifiable camps, each with established territorial boundaries – in Canada, "Indian country" is not just a Hollywood term – whose residents often hold negative and hostile opinions of the other. Left untended as they are today, these social cleavages present a growing danger to citizens in both communities and to Canada as a sovereign nation. Fractionalization need not occur at the macro-level or between all Indigenous peoples and the rest of the country to spark a confrontation. As the Oka and Caledonia conflicts reveal, embedded regional fractures can be as dangerously destructive of national unity as a nation-wide uprising.. (Ottawa Citizen, January 25, 2013)

THE SECOND DETERMINANT: THE WARRIOR COHORT

As history and the daily news illustrate, wars, rebellions and major criminal activities rely almost exclusively on males in the 15-29 YOA range. The greater the availability of young men as recruits (willing or not), the more feasible the opportunity and the lower the costs of launching an uprising. These correlations play out in wars between nations and in the ugliness of armies composed of "child soldiers" (Dallaire, 2010).

When they checked the "robustness" of their vast data files, the Collier research team confirmed a statistical "extreme selectivity" to the size of the young male cohort in states relative to the risk of conflict. The team assumed, moreover, that this selectivity occurs because "some young men have both an absolute advantage and a taste for violence." (Collier et al, 2009, p.16)

Fewer than 24 percent of the 15-24 YOA First Nations cohort complete high school compared with the 84 percent who do so in the non-Aboriginal community.

The First Nations demography aligns well with this problematic population. The median age in this community is 25 YOA compared to 43 YOA in Canada's non-Aboriginal population. Approximately 20 percent (2006) or 157,000 people – male and female – fall into the First Nations 15-24 YOA range. Moving the statistics for males into the broader 15-34 YOA (warrior cohort) range produces several thousand more potential recruits for any active endeavour. Removing the male prejudice in describing young warriors (or "young thugs" in the criminal context) adds tens of thousands of young women to the combative force. (StatsCan, 91-552-x, 07 December 2011 and StatsCan 97-588-XIE, 09 September 2012)

Offsetting this phenomenon is the fact that young Aboriginal women are more likely to complete high school and/or college/university and thus develop more stable lives than men or women who do not. Gender differences in educational success and other socially positive attributes are, moreover, important contributing factors to the unease and unhappiness among young Aboriginal males in 2013.

With appropriate incentives and charismatic leaders, young people may be tempted to join some type of rebellious or criminal militant organization. In the heated speeches of January 2013, several First Nations leaders declared that the Warriors were ready for action. The incarceration rates described above illustrate this tendency. The central question and curiosity given the living conditions of most young people in this cohort is not: why would they join such organizations but why would they not? What have they got to lose by doing so?

These young people, especially those living on-reserve, are particularly disadvantaged by unfortunate circumstances, government policies, band mismanagement, negative leader models and parental choices from the day they are born. They tend to be poorly educated and unskilled for the needs of the modern economy. Some are young fathers or abandoned child-mothers. As teenagers, many become addicted to drugs and alcohol and become "known to the police." They are more likely than young non-Aboriginal Canadians to die young from disease, addictions or foul play.

In all jurisdictions under analysis, the Census Day [2006] incarceration rate for Aboriginal adults 20-34 YOA who were unemployed and without at least a high school diploma was higher than the rate for Aboriginal adults who were employed and had at least a high school diploma. For instance, the rate in Alberta was 46.1 per 1000 compared with 2.4 per 1000. (Op cit. StatsCan, 85-002-x. 09 July 2009, p.13).

Fewer than 24 percent of the 15-24 YOA First Nations cohort complete high school compared with the 84 percent who do so in the non-Aboriginal community. Failure to complete high school is not simply the result of failing grades, but a reflection of the fact that many First Nations youth simply decide not to attend high school, even if one were available nearby. Many explanations are offered to explain this behaviour, but most focus on the notion that many young people simply see little value in an education – an understandable response given the despair in many reserves.

The lack of education and somewhat indifferent approach of many toward paid work inevitably place large numbers of First Nations people outside the Canadian labour market. Nationally, 28 percent of the Aboriginal population was unemployed in 2006. A sizeable percentage of the younger generations is practically and permanently excluded from the national work force by the time those individuals are 20 YOA. Indeed, an appalling 40 percent of the 15-24 YOA group today is unemployed and likely unemployable.

The economic and living conditions on most reserves can be depressing and, in time, may reinforce individual failures. Employment opportunities are slim. In Ontario – home to 21 percent of Canada's First Nations people – unemployment for both genders was 14 percent and their labour participation rate was a mere 63 percent. (First Nations in Ontario, 05 September 2010).

The income gap between Aboriginals and non-Aboriginals is wide in almost every circumstance. Nationwide, income for employed Aboriginal males in 2006 was 30 percent lower than the median income for the rest of Canadians, although Aboriginal males earn about $5,000 more than Aboriginal women. First Nations residents who work off-reserve earn 34 percent less than non-Aboriginals. Non-Aboriginals working on urban reserves earn 34 percent more than the First Nations people they work beside. On rural reserves, non-Aboriginals make 88 percent more than First Nations workers. (Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, 08 April 2010, p.3. Also StatsCan, 21 June 2010)

The only exception to these general circumstances – and it is an important one – is that education, especially a university degree, changes these earning statistics positively and substantially. The fact is, however, that university achievement in the First Nations community is poor, largely because high school completion rates remain so very low.

The feasibility hypothesis acknowledges the power of grievances as motive, but recognizes their limit as determinants and predictors of insurgencies.

Doorway to Feasibility

Some might argue that this social situation explains an outburst of anger and resentment on the part of First Nations male youth, especially those living on-reserve. Others might ask: if the conditions of young Aboriginals provide a motive that ought to ignite an uprising, why has the uprising not occurred? A quick and credible answer is that it has and is occurring – as a quick head count of the Warrior Cohort inside our penal colonies will demonstrate. In any case, this dismissive question cannot be left to answer itself: no rebellion, no problem.

The situation of young males on and off reserve may not have promoted a classic insurgency today. According to Collier's hypothesis, however, it has set the stage for one. This large, young, unemployed, and most likely alienated First Nations cohort that perhaps has a taste for violence and excitement makes feasible the establishment of large criminal gangs. Criminal organizations are a threat to peace, order and good government in Canada. Incarceration statistics support this observation.

A life of poverty and few prospects for the good life enjoyed by the 'immigrants" and not available to poorly educated young Aboriginals tempts many young First Nations youths into lives of crime, most of it within the Aboriginal community. If this and future cohorts were aroused by older leaders who focus on historical grievances – stolen lands, treaties betrayed and the horrors of the residential schools – young people might be tempted to forego criminal activities and to launch armed challenges against the civil authority to "take back the land" as they did at Oka and Caledonia.

The feasibility hypothesis acknowledges the power of grievances as motive, but recognizes their limit as determinants and predictors of insurgencies. Grievances, however, could provide a pretext for a rebellion advanced in the community's interests but aimed in fact at promoting some faction's very individualistic ends. In today's circumstances in Canada, the arrival of a truly charismatic, unifying First Nations leader who seized legitimate grievances and used them as the cause to launch a rebellion that was in fact a rebellion to challenge Canada's sovereignty might be of cardinal importance and of particular danger to Canada. More ominous for the nation would be such a leader who also carried a pointed message: "Canada is vulnerable. Winning a rebellion is entirely feasible. We can smash the status quo.' Statements close to this call that echoed across Ottawa in January 2013.

Certainly, some leaders, like Terry Nelson, unsuccessful candidate for the office of national chief of the AFN in 2012, have plans. A self-described "knowledgeable radical," Nelson campaigned against Canada's assertion that non-Aboriginal Canadians justly own the country's resources. He advocates that "[the] First Nations in Canada will not simply stand by the wayside as our resource wealth is sold off by the immigrants. The immigrants' 'free ride' on our National Resources is over if I am elected chief." (Nelson statement, 17 July 2012, p.1)

Nelson explained that his plan aimed to convince his people that they can, through "peaceful but very strategic coordinated ... action," retake control of the nation's resources and thus turn themselves from serving the needs of "the immigrants" to serving the needs of the First Nations. (Nelson file, 17 July 2012, "What is the Plan! (sic)" and author's interviews with First Nations leaders, Winnipeg, June 2012)

Terry Nelson's campaign for independence and self-reliance will not disappear, as his bold attempt in October 2013 to enlist the government of Iran in his cause demonstrates. Critics who deride Nelson as a nuisance without support in the community ought to measure his influence carefully before they dismiss him entirely. According to some evidence, the Government of Canada has not dismissed him at all. At present, Nelson is most important as a representative of a value system and political approach that could ignite protests across the country.

Nelson's is not a lone voice in the wilderness. He did, after all, win several hundred votes in the AFN leadership contest. Other chiefs and leaders are as angry as Nelson and as determined to overturn the status quo. Shawn Brant, the serial Mohawk blockader of railways and Highway 401 in Ontario, for instance, described well the link between Canada's economy and its transportation infrastructure and the advantage it gives to First Nations:

> We've shown that, unified, we are capable of not just disruption, not just protest, but a willingness to use the economy as a tool in the arsenal to the fight. The government ran its infrastructure though our land ... now it serves as an incredibly powerful tool of influence that allows us now as a society to engage the government in a dialogue, a relationship based on us having the power." (Aljazeera.net, 26 June 2010, pp.1-4. Also APTN, 18 February 2012)

CHAPTER 4

THE THIRD/FOURTH DETERMINANTS: THE ECONOMY IN ACTION

"Simply put ... the strike can't go on. We need to get the trains running again."
LISA RAITT, MINISTER OF LABOUR, (VANCOUVER SUN, 28 MAY 2012)

The 2012 Canadian Pacific railway strike

In spring 2012, after weeks of negotiations broke down, the Teamsters Union called a strike against Canadian Pacific Railway (CP). The federal government followed the situation carefully and, within a week, intervened to end the strike. Labour union supporters rallied as expected, demanding that the government give negotiators time to solve the dispute. A Liberal Party member of Parliament accused the government of "shafting ... the CP workers" and castigated Cabinet for "not believing in the importance of free collective bargaining." (Vancouver Sun, May 29, 2012)

The government argued that this was no ordinary strike. Many scholars and business leaders agreed – as did, one can imagine, the hundreds of thousands of non-Teamsters Union members across Canada whose incomes depend on Canada's railway system. "In the past only a handful of commodities were transported by trains [but] today everything is moving in containers that are often sent at least partway by rail. As a result, the effects of the strike are 'much more widespread than would have been the case in the past across the economy.'" (CBC News, 28 May 2012)

Coal, grain, potash, nickel and lumber producers understand that they are captives to the efficiencies of the national rail system. Grain farmers use an estimated 1,800 rail cars a week to move their produce from the farm gate to markets. The automobile industry depends on rail to deliver parts and systems to its factories and finished vehicles to customers. The industry's just-in-time manufacturing process faced "$1.5 million an hour in lost revenue" every day the strike continued. (thestar.com, 28 May 2012) The "forest products industry – 'representing 2% of Canada's GDP' – is one of Canada's largest users of freight rail services." Forestry industry officials estimated that the strike cost the industry $22 million daily, placing severe stress on the mills, producers and "230,000 direct jobs" down the supply line. (Statement: Forest Product Association of Canada, 28 May 2012) Secondary industries and businesses that depend indirectly on this critical infrastructure were as alarmed as primary producers

Port Metro Vancouver, the main western gateway for Canadian exports to the Pacific region, quickly supported the government's back-to-work legislation. Port officials explained that "up to $100 million worth of goods arrive in Vancouver per day – about 50 percent of the goods [because of the strike] ... are being delayed or diverted via other transportation options." Port Vice President, Peter Xotta, explained to the media that as the strike pressure increases, "Vancouver is starting to lose business to other west coast ports." When customers lose confidence in the reliability of Canadian transportation systems, they begin to look elsewhere. For Vancouver, that meant its important rival, Seattle, Washington. (Op cit. Vancouver Sun, 28 May 2012)

Federal Minister of Labour, Lisa Raitt "estimated that the CP stoppage would cost Canada more than $540 million per week." (thestar.com, 23 May 2012) Even if the strike had ended abruptly, the costs were predicted to continue until CP workers were able to bring the railway back to full capacity and clear the cargo backlog. In the meantime, producers waited, ships sat idle in harbours, mills closed, businesses laid off workers, and foreign customers looked for products elsewhere.

For many Canadians, the situation was perplexing. Few citizens could imagine that all this confusion and huge cost had been caused by a pension benefit disagreement, leading to a five days strike that was eventually resolved by a simple vote in the House of Commons.

A Nightmare Imagined

Today, let Canadians imagine another situation when, sometime in the near future, the challengers are not members of a legitimate union with a simple contractual demand. Instead, they are unified Aboriginal leaders who frame their dispute with Canada as a matter of life or death for their culture. They, too, have closed down Canada's railways, not with strikes but with blockades along any of the thousands of kilometres of track that run through their territories. Then let Canadians imagine the time it would take to resolve a snarl of complex social, cultural, territorial, economic and legal issues with perhaps hundreds of First Nations at cost of $540 million per week.

> "One thing that police and the army know is that indigenous people don't have any real supply of guns. The supply of guns is controlled but what the authorities don't understand is that every one of the 633 (sic) reservations in Canada has old cars. In Winnipeg thousands of cars were being stolen every month. Our indigenous youth, who make up to 95% of the inmates in jail, are actually in criminal "training schools" learning how to steal cars. If ever there was a military showdown between Indigenous people and the Canadian army, the first target would be the railway lines and burning cars would be on every railway line in Canada.
> A covert operation involving burning cars on every railway line would almost be impossible to stop despite all the Canadian military and police being alerted to the potential. (Nelson file, "How dangerous is the situation in Canada?" March 2012, pp.1-2)

Canada's economic well-being in 2012 is at risk because it is dependent on the export of natural resources and merchandise, especially to the United States.

A burning car on a railway track is not simply a blockade, it is also a very efficient and economical weapon. A car with a full fuel tank would burn at a temperature high enough to warp the track and require extensive repairs. An attack on isolated tracks in sparely settled countryside, for example, north of Lake Superior or west of Thunder Bay to the Manitoba border, would require the deployment by rail of special repair equipment. Once deployed, other attacks on the same line might trap that equipment in the wilderness. There is little doubt that one or two effective attacks, especially ones that derailed trains, would close CP and CN traffic simply because sensible train crews would refuse to travel on insecure railways surrounded by hostile forces.

Nelson's message for non-Aboriginal Canadians is that if they find this imagined national crisis incredible, they need to know that some First Nations leaders do not.

Collier's Theory Meets Reality

Canada's economic well-being in 2012 is at risk because it is dependent on the export of natural resources and merchandise, especially to the United States. The risks of this dependency, however, do not fall neatly into Collier's model.

Civil war/internal conflict studies (focussed mainly on under-developed states) link dependence on the export of primary commodities as a risk factor for two principal reasons: first, richness in natural resources can ignite internal resource wars; and, second, governments rich in funds generated by resources sales and export duties have little need for domestic tax returns and, therefore, little incentive to respond to citizens' grievances. By Collier's definition, "the risk of dependence on primary exports is at its peak when exports constitute around 25 percent of [a state's] GDP. (Collier, 2009, p.13)

Although there is a simmering who-owns-Canada's-natural-resources contest between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal people, it does not yet define the internal national security risk facing Canada's economy. The tax shifting/government incentive pattern is an unlikely risk by any measure. Rather, when analysts apply Collier's model to Canada, they must take into account risks attributed to classic export dependence and to factors related to Canada's internal/export economic model. In other words, they must acknowledge that the risk to Canada's economy may arise from the dependence of national industries, for instance, in central and eastern Canada, on long supply chains running from the far west and the far north.

The internal/external export dependence risk to Canada's economy today and into the foreseeable future arises from the inseparable, direct dependence of this trade on Canada's critical infrastructure that transports goods to markets in Canada, the United States and overseas. This dependence on infrastructure is aggravated by the reality that many of these systems run for thousands of kilometres through some of the most difficult terrain in North America.[2] As the 2012 CP strike demonstrated, any prolonged disruption of the supply chains and the flow of goods to domestic or foreign markets immediately creates a nationwide economic crisis that is very difficult to redress.

In the Netherlands, for example, where the distances between the sources of natural resources and economic goods and their markets (foreign or domestic) are relatively short, routes are geographically uncomplicated and transportation redundancies are in place, transportation security is relatively simple. Effective attacks on such a system would be difficult – less feasible – to execute with effect. In Afghanistan, on the other hand, where transportation systems are long, cross difficult terrain, and redundancy is limited or not available, defence is complex and offence is relatively easy or more feasible. This difficulty is almost impossible for intervening forces to overcome when insurgents are "resident" and at least tolerated by the local inhabitants.

The internal/ external export dependence risk to Canada's economy today and into the foreseeable future arises from the inseparable, direct dependence of this trade on Canada's critical infrastructure that transports goods to markets in Canada, the United States and overseas.

In a situation where all or most of these negative transportation factors are present the cost for insurgents of interventions on transportation systems are small, but they are significant for the defender. In other words, the attacker would be free to attack and cause great harm to the weak system at almost any time and at any point he might choose. The defender would be obliged to disperse his forces to guard the entire system continually, adding to his overall strategic weakness.

In any internal conflict in Canada, the nation's resource economy – the flow of taxes from the sale of resources – would become the ultimate but indirect target of the attack. Canada's national critical infrastructure, its exposed rail, road, air and marine transportation systems as well as hydroelectric and pipeline systems, are the valuable targets of opportunity. It is this vulnerability that makes an attack on the Canada's resource economy feasible as Shawn Brant, Terry Nelson, and others have plainly illustrated. (Postmedia News, 4 January 2011)

The Weak Links: Critical Infrastructure Systems and Vague Policies

> "To say that Canada has its act together with respect to critical infrastructure threat, protection, and response capacity would be a stretch and somewhat misleading." (Graham, 2012, p.23)

Canada's public safety policies provide no definition for the term "critical infrastructure." Rather, in government policy statements, critical infrastructure refers to:

> ... processes, systems, facilities, technologies, networks, assets and services essential to the health, safety, security or economic well-being of Canadians and the effective functioning of government. Critical infrastructure can be stand-alone or interconnected and interdependent within and across provinces, territories and national borders. Disruptions of critical infrastructure could result in catastrophic loss of life, adverse economic effects and significant harm to public confidence. (Public Safety Canada, 08 February 2012)

This wide and loose statement provides no guidance to officials or security authorities on how to grade the value of any process or system against another or how to allocate scarce security resources among many possible critical infrastructure targets or insecurities. Apparently, at Public Safety Canada, everything is equally and always critical, meaning that everything is equally valuable and always insecure.

Federal policies imply that the critical infrastructure systems of hardware – railways, hydroelectric poles and towers, road bridges and so on – define the nation's critical infrastructure. It is this hardware that must be defended. This simple notion explicitly detaches these systems from their essential purpose – that of delivering to Canadians services essential to their well-being. (See MLI, Jason Clemens and Brian Lee Crowley, December 2011)

The reality for Canadians and their governments is that in a prolonged dispute with the Indigenous peoples, their leaders would inevitably target Canada's national transportation infrastructure

Yet even from this point of view, "Nearly a decade after the 9/11 attacks, Canada still hasn't developed a reliable strategy for protecting such critical energy infrastructure as refineries, power plants and offshore petroleum platforms, according to a new study commissioned by the [Department of National Defence]." (Postmedia News, 04 January 2011) Since Canada's entire critical infrastructure policies and procedures consist of no more than "... a combination of muddling through and ad hoc problem solving," Canadians should not expect a coherent national strategy to be delivered to Parliament anytime soon. (Graham, 2011, p.10)

It is ironic – or do Canadians simply assume that the nation is innately secure? – that the government has identified the vulnerability of Canada's critical infrastructure in unclassified documents and free-to-all websites and, in the process, advertised the vulnerability of its economy to friend and foe alike. Little wonder that Shawn Brant can brag that "... now we have the power."

The fundamental basis for a critical infrastructure policy needs to be reconceptualised. That is, policies ought to be founded on the concept that the criticality of these systems is derived not from the value of their physical structures but from the value of the cargo they carry and deliver to Canadians. The relationship is easy to illustrate. (Op cit. Clemens and Crowley, pp.15-17)

For instance, as the value (measured perhaps by demand) for a cargo carried by a transportation system declines, the real value of the system's hardware also declines and vice versa. At some point, the falling value of a transported cargo would not sustain the cost of maintaining the so-called critical infrastructure that transports it. Understanding this relationship is fundamental to any discussion about safeguarding services essential to Canada's economy and social welfare from external and/or internal security threats.

It is the relative value of a cargo and not the mere existence of roads, railways and power-lines that may attract hostile forces to target these systems. The relative value of a cargo and the relative difficulty of its defence (or from the opposite perspective, the ease with which it can be attacked) defines a cargo's vulnerability.[3]

With limited means to defend continually Canada's vast transportation and related infrastructures, assessments of the relative value and relative vulnerability of the cargoes carried by each system should determine the value of each element of critical infrastructure and thus define the deployment of scarce resources to protect them. During the 2012 CP Rail strike, Catherine Cobden, President of the Forest Products Association of Canada, declared: "A prolonged [transportation] dispute would have disastrous economic consequences for Canada's economy and its reputation as a reliable supplier [to export markets]." (Op cit. FPAC statement, 28 May 2012)

The reality for Canadians and their governments is that in a prolonged dispute with the Indigenous peoples, their leaders would inevitably target Canada's national transportation infrastructure. Not only would such actions have disastrous economic consequences for Canada and for the relationship between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal Canadians, but Canada's unavoidable responses to them by the police and/or the armed forces could have disastrous repercussions on national unity and international relations.

If Canadian politicians, military officers, police chiefs, federal intelligence and Public Safety officials find this economy/vulnerability paradigm fanciful, Canadians hope they understand that many formal and informal Aboriginal leaders do not.

The Vulnerable Infrastructure Bottlenecks

It is not necessary to disrupt or dislocate any of the vital transportation systems entirely to produce significant negative effects on Canada's economy, security and social welfare. A strong, enduring protest at a few critical points would create a crisis for governments across the nation.

It is not necessary to disrupt or dislocate any of the vital transportation systems entirely to produce significant negative effects on Canada's economy, security and social welfare.

Observant individuals can easily identify many such critical bottlenecks across Canada. They share several common characteristics:

- they are of immediate and significant value to businesses and governments;
- they concentrate valued resources or essential economic functions;
- they are located at the intersection of related transportation systems, thus allowing protesters to use their scarce resources efficiently;
- most are far from major national security resources and forces, thus complicating the deployment and maintenance of these forces;
- most are close to First Nations communities that would likely be neutral if not active supporters of insurgents and would provide safe-havens and logistical support to main participants;
- all are high profile assets the disruption of which would attract (for governments) troublesome national and international political and media attention; and
- all are vulnerable (i.e., value multiplied by the ease of disruption).

These feasibility enhancement sites include:

British Columbia: mountain and coastal road and rail systems; road and rail approaches to Pacific Ocean ports; crude oil and natural gas transmission pipelines, especially pumping stations, compressor stations and refineries; and all the transmission and distribution facilities of BC Hydro.

Alberta: crude oil and natural gas transmission pipelines, especially pumping stations, compressor stations and refineries; and coal-carrying railway systems.

Saskatchewan: crude oil and natural gas transmission pipelines, especially, pumping stations, compressor stations; railway transportation systems for natural resources; and Trans-Canada Highway intersections crossing the province.

Manitoba: The most vulnerable west-east transportation hub in Canada. Any disruption of the concentrated road and railways intersections at Winnipeg would have enormous, negative economic consequences across Canada. There are no easy or cost-effective ways around this transportation hub.

Elsewhere in the province the most important assets are the Manitoba Hydroelectric system from Nelson River generating facilities and the transmission lines running south and the hydroelectric distribution lines in the Winnipeg area.

Winnipeg has a unique vulnerability. The city's draws its entire fresh water supply from Shoal Lake in Ontario through a 156 kilometre concrete pipeline into reservoirs near the city. Shoal Lake is surrounded by land claimed by the Iskatewizaagegan First Nation. Chief Mandamin has threatened to close the system unless Manitoba pays the First Nations an annual water supply fee of $124 million. The dispute continues. (CTV Winnipeg, 07 September 2011. Also Winnipeg's Shoal Lake Aqueduct, George Siamandas, 05 April 2012; and Kenora Daily News. 05 September 2011)

Ontario: the west-east road and railway transportation convergence in the Thunder Bay area; the access roads and railways into the Thunder Bay port; the junction of the Highway 17 and Highway 11 Trans-Canada Highway systems over Lake Superior at Nipigon; the international bridge at Sault Ste. Marie; the road bridge over the Petawawa River on Highway 17 at Petawawa; the road and railway bridges over the Rideau Canal system on Highway 401 and Highway 2 near Kingston; the 400-series highways in and around Toronto; the roads into the Windsor/Ambassador Bridge border crossing; and the Welland Canal operating facilities.

Quebec: the Hydro Québec transmission lines from the James Bay generating facilities; the Hydro Québec distribution system in lower Quebec; the bridges near Montreal and Quebec City; the east-west-bound highways north and south of the St. Lawrence River; and the highway approaches to the United States.

Atlantic Provinces: roads and railways to Quebec and the United States; road and railway approaches to Halifax harbour; and the hydroelectric transmission and distribution lines from Quebec.

The Territorial North: major roads to Whitehorse and Yellowknife; airports; hydroelectric stations; pipelines; winter roads to mining camps.

CHAPTER 5

THE THIRD/FOURTH DETERMINANTS: THE NATURAL RESOURCES/SECURITY PARADOX

Canada's economic security derived from its abundant natural resources makes Canada intrinsically insecure.

Canada is rich in natural resources. The efficient exploitation of huge quantities of raw materials brings immense prosperity and economic security to the nation and to Canadians generally. The efficient exploitation of these resources is contingent on the reliable transportation of raw and processed materials over long distances through difficult terrain and along highly vulnerable infrastructure systems to Canadian manufacturers and export markets.

No matter its natural riches, if Canada is to escape the consequences of a First Nations insurgency, then – according to the feasibility hypothesis – Canadians must, among other things, make its critical transportation infrastructure less vulnerable or deal with First Nations' l leaders from a point of relative strategic weakness.

Transportation General

In 2010, the minister of Transport summarized the central importance of transportation capabilities in Canada:

> One way or another, transportation is a part of all social and economic activities [in Canada]. Transportation provides market access to natural resources, agricultural products, and manufactured good in the same way that it provides support to service industries. It also overcomes the challenges posed by topography and geography – linking communities and reducing the effects of distance that separates people from each other. These essential roles reflect transportation's intertwined and interdependent relationships with the economic engines and social fabric of our society." ("Transportation in Canada 2010," 08 June 2011 p.4)

The minister's report for 2011 underscored again the critical importance of the transportation sector to Canada's economic security. ("Transportation in Canada 2011," 13 July 2011)

All four transportation infrastructure systems – road, rail, air and marine – are crucial to the maintenance and sustainment of Canada's economy. Each system is composed of specific structures – bridges, tunnels, airports, waterways and various communication and controlling systems, among other essential components – that are vulnerable to interference.

"The transportation industry remains a significant force in the Canadian economy representing (in 2010) 4.7% of Canada's GDP." (StatsCan, 11-402-x, March 2012, p.1) The contribution of the transportation industry (including warehousing) is not limited to the movement of goods and resources alone. These systems make considerable economic contributions to Canada's GDP by facilitating the movement of resources – minerals, forest products, grains and finished products – from production sites to markets in Canada and the United States and to/from coastal ports. The value and the contributions to GDP of these industries would vanish without the transportation capabilities that move these products.

The transportation sector is also a major national employer, employing in 2010, more than 670,650 individuals in all its various operations across Canada. Moreover, "all levels of government combined collected $16.5 billion in permits, fees, fuel taxes and other revenues from transport users in 2009-2010." During the same period, "direct federal subsidies, grants, and contributions [to transportation infrastructure and other support] rose to $2.6 billion." (Transportation in Canada 2010, p.7)

No matter its natural riches, if Canada is to escape the consequences of a First Nations insurgency, then – according to the feasibility hypothesis – Canadians must, among other things, make its critical transportation infrastructure less vulnerable or deal with First Nations' leaders from a point of relative strategic weakness.

Road and rail transportation are especially important to Canada's vital Canada-United States export/import economy. Trucking, for instance, "accounted for 58 percent of the value of trade with the United States in 2010 followed by rail at 17 percent ... and air and marine at 5 percent each." (Ibid, p.5) Not surprisingly, Canada's manufacturing hub, Ontario, accounts for more than 30 percent of national transportation activity, followed by Quebec at 19 percent, and British Columbia at 15 percent. (Ibid, p.6)

A key vulnerability in this export/import network is the concentration of its critical transportation lifelines in a relatively close area funnelled through six congested gateways mostly in eastern Canada.

For example, 75 percent (by value) of Canada-United States trade is carried by trucks through six border crossings: Windsor/Ambassador Bridge, Fort Erie/Niagara Falls, and Sarnia, Ontario. The remainder passes through Lacolle, Quebec; Emerson, Manitoba; and the Pacific Highway in British Columbia. In 2010, "an estimated 10.5 million two-way truck movements [crossed] these border points." (Ibid, p.5)

More than 800,000 long- and short-haul trucks use Canada's extensive 1,045,000 kilometre national road transportation system. In 2010, this truck fleet, "the largest component of transportation GDP," contributed $17.1 billion to the Canadian economy. The importance of the National Highway System is underscored by the fact that, in 2009-2010, governments invested more than $4.6 billion in its maintenance and improvement. (Ibid, p.16)

Obviously, any prolonged interference along these routes would greatly disrupt Canada/United States trade. Thus, for any group wanting to harm Canada's economy, these high-value, easily disabled routes present tempting soft targets.

Rail Transportation

Rail carriers in Canada operate approximately 68,000 kilometres of track. The vast majority (84.6 percent) of these "owned and leased" lines are controlled by Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railways. As well, the entire national railway infrastructure includes 36 short-line and regional railways or 22 percent of the nation's total kilometres of track. (StatsCan, "Rail in Canada", 52-216-X, 2011.)

In 2010, all railways freight workloads "... totalled 239.2 billion RTM [Revenue-Ton-Mile]" and produced a revenue of $9.6 billion. (Railways Association of Canada, 2011 "Rail Trends," p.2) Although these revenues are significant, the true value of Canada's railway freight systems lies in its role as the indispensable economic enabler, linking national producers to domestic and foreign buyers. The statistics for 2009 present a typical annual profile.

Top Ten Commodities	Tonnage (2009)
Coal	34,508,536
Mixed loads or unidentified freight	22,224,278
Wheat	22,124,215
Iron ores and concentrates	21,954,804
Colza seed (canola)	8,354,166
Other basic chemicals	8,131,266
Wood pulp	7,640,835
Lumber	7,189,808
Potash	6,839,159
Other cereal grains	5,849,546
Total	140,182,952

(StatsCan. Ibid, 52-216-x, Table 12)4

Much of this traffic flows from Canada into the United States, but a large percent of it also moves east and west on two main lines over Lake Superior and through the Winnipeg bottleneck. Every route, including those in the Montreal-Windsor corridor, is vulnerable to blockade and intentional damage. The isolated northern Ontario-Kenora-Winnipeg routes are particularly vulnerable and pass through the homelands of several large First Nations communities.

Air Transportation

Air transportation infrastructure is an important element in Canada's overall transportation infrastructure. In 2009-2010, the government spent $1.2 billion on the construction, maintenance and operation of air transportation. In 2010, Canada's major airlines carried more than 45 million passengers. In the same period, air cargo "reached nearly one million tonnes valued at $100 billion. (Transport Canada 2010: An Overview, "Air Transport," p.20)

Canada's airline infrastructure is composed of airfields, airports, air navigation networks, dedicated communications facilities and enormous maintenance, aircraft handling and ground transportation assets. Its derived value is measured in the direct revenue it produces for airlines and governments, and also in the multiplying value it (and other transportation assets) provides to Canada's industries, businesses and distant communities.

This infrastructure and the value it provides are vulnerable to disruptions caused by nature, accidents and criminal agents. Malicious disruptions of air traffic, such as interference with communications systems and passenger- and freight-handling processes are nuisances but rarely disable the entire system. Active interference with flights or moving aircraft on runways and taxiways is very dangerous, and would result in swift action by the police and security personnel stationed at all airports. Even small, non-violent protests that attempt to gain access to an active airfield would almost immediately be declared in violation of the Canada's Emergencies Act, which would result in a vigorous police response. Protestors have many softer infrastructure targets they could engage more easily and with greater effect. Therefore, air transport infrastructure will likely remain a low threat in Canada.

A key vulnerability in this export/ import network is the concentration of its critical transportation lifelines in a relatively close area funneled through six congested gateways mostly in eastern Canada.

Marine Transportation

Canadian marine transportation carried 355 million tonnes via domestic, trans-border and international traffic in 2009. Canada's 17 port authorities handled more that 50 percent of this traffic, and generated $390 million in operating revenue that year. The St. Lawrence Seaway handled some 35 million tonnes of cargo, and produced $55.2 million in revenues, also in 2009. Almost $46 million were spent on the Seaway system that year for "asset renewal." (Transport Canada, 2010)

Canadian and United States Great Lakes-Seaway ports handled 322.1 million tonnes of cargo in 2010. The main value of the marine infrastructure to Canada, especially for the St. Lawrence Seaway, is its utility as an alternative or supporting transportation system for road and rail operations on the west-east transportation corridor.

In 2010, the Thunder Bay Port Authority managed 368 ships and 6,862,467 tonnes of cargo. The main cargoes were grain (5,219, 784 tonnes), coal (1,062,891 tonnes) and potash (313, 952 tonnes). Thunder Bay's marine activities produced 1,808 jobs in Ontario, of which 881 were directly generated by cargo and vessel activities. The $60.6 million of regional purchases made by businesses supplying the port authority supported more than 500 indirect jobs. Moreover, the firms directly dependent on the cargo handled by the Port of Thunder Bay terminal generated $369.1 million in business revenue. (Thunder Bay Port Authority, 02 November 2011)

Although it would be difficult to interfere directly and effectively with terminal operations in Thunder Bay or elsewhere in the St. Lawrence Seaway system, disruptions to road and rail transportations systems leading to the ports would effectively close these vital, weather-sensitive, seasonal operations. Any prolonged stoppage of operations at Thunder Bay would produce serious disruptions along the entire Seaway system and to economic activities throughout north-western Ontario and across the prairie heartlands. (The Economic Impacts of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway System, 18 October 2011, p.9)

Energy Transportation Systems

It would be difficult to live in Canada, let alone develop a major industrial economy in its territory, if Canada were not a major producer of energy resources. The exploitation of these resources for national and international markets, however, depends on a vast, multifaceted energy transportation network running throughout Canada from west to east and from north to south.

In some places, these networks have been (and will be) constructed across, over and under some of the most difficult terrain in North America. Every system is more or less vulnerable to interference from nature, technical failures and hostile organizations in locations that are very difficult to access or survey.

Canada's sources of energy vary significantly. In 2009, fossil fuels (crude oil, natural gas and coal) accounted for 82.7 percent of national energy production; hydroelectricity, wood, and tides, wind and solar sources for 11.4 percent; and nuclear facilities for 5.9 percent. In the same period, the energy sector (production industries, electricity transformation and transportation) accounted for 6.7 percent of Canada's GDP at $80.2 billion. Capital investment in the energy-related sector represented 20.1 percent of all capital investment in Canada in 2009. In all its aspects, the energy sector employed more than 300,000 Canadian workers and accounted for 21.6 percent of the nation's merchandise export trade.

Oil and Natural Gas Pipelines

Any prolonged stoppage of operations at Thunder Bay would produce serious disruptions along the entire Seaway system and to economic activities throughout north-western Ontario and across the prairie heartlands.

By some estimates, Canada is the world's third-largest producer and exporter of natural gas. Its crude oil reserves are "second only to [those in] Saudi Arabia." Although these riches are significant drivers of Canadian industry and social well-being, the big business is in energy exports. According to Natural Resources Canada, 97 percent of the nation's energy production, including about two-thirds of its crude oil, is exported, mainly to the United States. (Natural Resources Canada, "Pipeline Infrastructure," 2009) An enormous 700,000 kilometre network of pipelines as well as railways, trucks and ships move crude oil and natural gas from wellheads mostly in western Canada to refineries and onward to markets in Canada, the United States and Mexico.

Unlike electric energy transmission lines, crude oil and natural gas pipeline are relatively secure from harm once they are properly placed in the ground. Each pipeline, however, requires pump and compressor stations to push product through it. These above-ground stations are susceptible to damage and interference. Other supporting parts to the crude oil and natural gas system might also be vulnerable to interference and accidental damage, including crude oil refineries, natural gas processing plants and storage facilities for both products. (Cutting Edge News, 10 November 2008; Reuters, 08 October 2008; CBC News, 19 November 2011)

The federal government acknowledged the vulnerability of the nation's pipeline infrastructure in 2012 after a series of non-Aboriginal attacks on western pipelines, when it established a special RCMP-led "counter-terrorist unit ... to help protect the energy industry from attacks by extremists." According to RCMP Assistant Commissioner, Gilles Michaud, the Alberta-based unit, similar to others already functioning in Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia, is a response to "an increasing threat to the [energy industry's] infrastructure." (National Post, Tuesday, 07 June 2012, FP.1)

These and other such events and their consequences for the trucking industry clearly illustrate the notion that the criticality of critical infrastructure resides in the value of the products they carry, not merely in the structures themselves.

Hydroelectric Infrastructure

Canadian hydroelectric facilities generated 60.4 percent of the total electric power used in Canada in 2009. There are four principal hydroelectric systems of waterways, generating plants, and transmissions lines – Hydro Québec, Hydro One (Ontario), Manitoba Hydro and BC Hydro. Each system makes substantial direct contributions to provincial and national economies by supplying energy to manufacturing, transportation, residential, commercial and agricultural sectors of the economy. Hydroelectric energy is also an important export commodity earning $2.4 billion in revenue through exports to the United States in 2009.

Transmission and distribution lines are critical infrastructure in each system.[5] As the Great Ice Storm of 1998 in eastern Ontario and west Quebec made dramatically obvious, these lines are fragile and exposed to many natural and technical threats. In circumstances where damage is widespread, recovery is difficult, expensive and slow.

Safeguarding these transmission systems even from simple natural events is complicated by the great distances between generating facilities and consumers, which are often separated by rugged terrain. Hydro Québec maintains 145,542 kilometres of transmission and distribution lines. (Hydro Québec, 2010); Ontario Hydro, 152,451 kilometres (Hydro One, "Quick Facts," 04 January 2012; Manitoba Hydro, 86,700 kilometres (Manitoba Hydro, 2012); and BC Hydro 73,000 kilometres ("BC Hydro50," 2012).

All of these provinces are building or planning to build new transmission systems to serve increasing demands from private and public users. The derived value of the energy carried by these systems, their fragility and vulnerability to easily executed interference and the near impossibility of protecting them from harm makes them obvious targets for any group intent on harming Canada's economy. Most of these planned systems, like the Manitoba Hydro project planned to run east of Lake Winnipeg, travel through lands owned, claimed and/or occupied by First Nations.

According to Natural Resources Canada, 97 percent of the nation's energy production, including about two-thirds of its crude oil, is exported, mainly to the United States.

CHAPTER 6

THE FIFTH DETERMINANT: THE SECURITY GUARANTEE

Collier's team introduced the "security guarantee" – a concept they had not considered in their earlier studies – into their 2009 analysis. The factor suggests that risks of conflict are minimized where a legitimate government is under the assured protection of a credible protectorate. The duration of any rebellion, should one occur, is also reduced. The team's comparative models situated the de facto French guarantee in former French colonies in Africa (1965-1998) against the withdrawal of this assurance in 1998 and against the British decision to withdraw completely its security from its former African colonies soon after they were granted independence in the early 1960s.

The researchers concluded that when the French guarantee was in place, "French colonies had a risk of civil war that was a third of that which would otherwise have been predicted." They attributed this result to several factors: the sound traditions of administration established by France during the colonial years; the relatively peaceful legacy in these societies established during that period; and especially to the presence of French military bases in the former colonies ready to intervene in case of trouble. The opposite effect unfolded in the abandoned British colonies almost immediately after British forces departed, as it did also in Côte d'Ivoire in 1998 "when the French government decided to allow the [coup] to stand despite being in a position to reverse it." (Collier, 2009, p.15)

Collier's research in this area is much too narrow and tentative to be transferred unconditionally to Canada/First Nations situation. Nevertheless, given the history of First Nations/Canadian civil conflicts and threat of more, it is reasonable that the maintenance of a credible (in the minds of First Nations leaders) security guarantee near major First Nations communities is critically important to maintaining stability in those communities and in the provinces. As well, governments today should understand from specific evidence derived from Canadian incidents that where a credible security guarantee at the scene of a confrontation is not available, that confrontation will almost surely escalate.

The factor suggests that risks of conflict are minimized where a legitimate government is under the assured protection of a credible protectorate.

Finally, experience tells us (at Oka in 1990, for example) that when the media present disruptive events widely and dramatically, outside agitators will be draw into the melee. The leadership of the protest will become disordered, and negotiations will become chaotic. In such situations, the availability of competently managed security forces is key to controlling immediate events and establishing circumstances in which negotiations can proceed.

In the case of Oka, combat units of the Canadian Forces were deployed at the request of the Quebec government to take command of the situation. The balanced, restrained conduct of the soldiers, and especially their commander's unequivocal message to the protesters that he would re-establish order with deadly force if necessary, convinced the warriors to yield. More or less peaceful negotiations resumed almost immediately afterwards. (Winegard, 2008; Swain, 2010; and Brock, 2012)

At Ipperwash, Ontario, in September 1995 a similar peaceful protest erupted into confused violence between the poorly commanded Ontario Provincial Police (OPP) and irritated First Nations demonstrators. The aggressive stance of the police, apparently encouraged by provincial politicians, significantly complicated events and harmed efforts to settle the immediate crisis peacefully. (Ontario, 31 May 2007) In the confusion, one Aboriginal person, Dudley George, was killed by the police. Formerly peaceful relations between Aboriginals and non-Aboriginals broke down and ignited spontaneous, hostile demonstrations elsewhere in the province.

After Ipperwash and before the provincial inquiry was completed in 2007, the OPP developed the Framework for Police Preparedness for Aboriginal Critical Incidents. (2005). "The framework emphasizes avoiding critical incidents by building [beforehand] trust with the First Nations." (Brock, 2010, p.31) Officers were trained as interveners in local disputes in the hope that they could defuse incidents before they exploded. They were also sent out to develop routine contacts with First Nations leaders. These efforts proved to be a major factor in stabilizing the confrontation at Caledonia and in other minor police/native disturbances in Ontario. (Brock, pp.31-32)

The Caledonia confrontation began in 2005 and, in some respects, is still active in 2013. Although many of the incidents there and responses to them by Aboriginals, non-Aboriginals and the police were similar to those at Oka and Ipperwash, by 2005, the OPP had learned a great deal from these protests and applied this experience at Caledonia. Nevertheless, some local citizens complained that police attempts to build trust with the First Nations in the midst of the occupation at Caledonia or at barricades on public highways and railways in the community compromised the rights and the security of non-Aboriginals. Subsequently, skirmishes broke out between the non-Aboriginal residents and the police. (Blatchford, 2010, pp.124-127)

These police-in-the-middle conflicts demonstrate the dilemmas facing security forces. When they make compromises to one group in an attempt to maintain order, they risk enraging the other group thus making the situation worse. Commissioner of the OPP, Julian Fantino, at Caledonia for example, explained that he acted on the premise that a misstep on the part of his officers against the native protestors would have led to "[a native] flare-up right across the country." Therefore, to deter this greater threat as he saw it Fantino took no direct action against the native activists. (Op cit. Blatchford, 2010, p.200)

The police at Caledonia had few options other than peacekeeping tactics to defuse the situation; that is, unless Canadians were prepared for the possibility that more aggressive measures might have led to wider disruptive, violent confrontations. The police at the scene and their political masters were not prepared to take such a chance.

Finding the right balance between legitimate protest and armed confrontation may be difficult, but find it we must. An important – indispensable – aspect of the solution will be the continuing development of policing regimes (with military support in the background) that credibly assure peaceful Canadians and peaceful Aboriginal people that a security guarantee is in place to underwrite their rights and freedoms under the law. (Media Co-op, 7 June 2011)

Finding the right balance between legitimate protest and armed confrontation may be difficult, but find it we must.

On the other hand, should the peacekeeping security guarantee fail, Canadians and Aboriginal people must be confident that the government has the appropriate forces to enforce stability and lawful order when and if necessary. These measures allow for legitimate protests and provide deterrents to unlawful acts. Without such assurances, insurgency becomes more feasible, and its destructive occurrence is the more likely outcome.

A Law Meant to Protect the State from the People?

Canada's federal security guarantee is defined by The Emergencies Act: "an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof." (Canada: The Emergencies Act, 1985) The Act gives the federal government the authority "... to deal with emergencies on any property, territory or area in respect of which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction." (EA, Section 2.2). It also gives the government the right to restrict travel, control public utilities and services (EA, Section 19.1 a & c) and to impose fines or prison sentences on citizens contravening its provisions (EA, section 19.1e).

The Act defines a national emergency as:

> an urgent and critical situation of a temporary nature that:
> (a) seriously endangers the lives, health or safety of Canadians and is of such proportions or nature as to exceed the capacity or authority of a province to deal with it, or
> (b) seriously threatens the ability of the Government of Canada to preserve the sovereignty, security and territorial integrity of Canada and that cannot be effectively dealt with under any other law of Canada. (EA, Section 3)

The government also has at hand The National Defence Act and its provisions for providing military forces "in aid of the civil power" to control "a riot or disturbance of the peace, beyond the powers of the civil authorities to supress, prevent, or deal with" (Queen's Regulations and Orders, Chap.23. 275, R.S.C. 1985). The Act and regulations permit, under specific circumstances and conditions, "the calling out of the Canadian Forces" by provincial attorneys general or their equivalent. Units called out (at the discretion of the chief of the defence staff) may act as constables but they would perform their duties in accordance with the Act and under the command of Canadian Forces officers.

Several underlying assumptions condition requests to call out the Canadian Forces in aid of the civil power:

> the civil authorities and their police (federal, provincial or otherwise) are unable to maintain peace and public order with their usual methods and equipment;
> the situation may require the use of military tactics and weapons;
> military force, including deadly force, will be employed continually and with as much severity as is necessary to restore good order and respect for the law.

The deployment of the Canadian Forces on operations directed at Canadian citizens, therefore, is complex and can result in death and injury to citizens and soldiers.

Political decisions to use the provisions of The Emergencies Act or The National Defence Act are types of last-chance decisions. They should never be used as part of a bluff. However, political leaders need to understand that the use of the state's power might not be decisive, especially in the short-term. Indeed, such acts might impair negotiations and peacemaking in the short and long term. In the worst outcome, and particularly in the context of dealing with Aboriginal protesters, the use of armed force by governments in a particular situation in one part of Canada might inflame Aboriginal communities in many other parts of the country. Early in the Oka crisis, officials and military officers were highly sensitive to this threat, and took unusual steps to pre-empt nationwide supporting escalation in other communities. (Swain, 2010, pp.100-101)

The development of a credible security guarantee is a key element in any strategy aimed at negating the feasibility of an insurgency in Canada.

The lessons from the last 25 years of Canadian-First Nations relations are threefold. First, attempts to use the full force of the law to impose a settlement of a protest/rebellion against a particular law may be a poor approach to resolving a civil dispute. Second, armed security operations by governments against their citizens seldom bring about reason, reconciliation, peace, order and good governance in the long term. Third, politicians who are eager to use the Canadian Forces to supress internal law and order conflicts are surprised to discover that military commanders are not as blasé as they are in using soldiers against citizens.

The development of a credible security guarantee is a key element in any strategy aimed at negating the feasibility of an insurgency in Canada. Canadians and First Nations people must be convinced – before any confrontation begins – that the government, supported by its security establishment, will prevail. Aggressive Aboriginal leaders should assume that Canada's security forces will always establish order "the hard way or the harder way," to paraphrase Shawn Atleo.

The Security Guarantee 2012: Manitoba as an Example

Measuring the full size of Canada's federal, provincial and municipal police establishments and their effectiveness in the context of a First Nations national security rebellion is beyond the scope of this essay. By examining a portion of Canada's preparedness, however, it is possible to develop an appreciation of just how far Canada is generally from providing citizens and Aboriginal people with a credible security guarantee in anticipation or in the event of an "apprehended First Nations insurrection."

As noted above, Manitoba is particularly critical to Canada's interprovincial transportation network and also particularly vulnerable. The province is offered here as a proxy for the vulnerability of the country as a whole.

Manitoba is a vast, sparsely populated territory, home to 63 First Nations, including 20 of the largest bands in Canada. The total First Nations numbers some 141,000 people, of whom approximately 84,000 under-30 YOA fit well into the warrior cadre. (ANAC: Manitoba, 05 August 2012) Winnipeg is Canada's transnational transportation hub; the centre of a concentration of road, rail and pipeline critical infrastructure systems. Any operational interference of this centre, even for only a few days, would greatly damage Canada's economy and potentially throw the country into political chaos.

Even if a mere ten percent (14,000) of Manitoba's First Nations people joined an aggressive protest, they would overwhelm the 52 small RCMP detachments scattered across the province. The Winnipeg City police force is not trained or equipped to reinforce the RCMP outside the city and is unlikely to be released by city politicians for such duties in a civil emergency. The general conclusion, therefore, is that there is no immediately available (defined as operationally deployable within 24 hours of the declaration of a civil emergency) security forces to prevent a significant disruption of economic activities in Manitoba or to contain such an event once it was launched. The Canadian Forces certainly have some locally stationed capacity in Manitoba that might "aid the powers," but this force is not large and the technical and legal procedures necessary to call out the Canadian Forces would limit its immediate availability.

Thus, Manitoba cannot provide a credible security guarantee in the event of even a modest, more or less peaceful and prolonged First Nations protest. Certainly, no force could counter a coordinated, armed disruption of the Manitoba transportation hub without mobilizing outside resources. As one specialist familiar with the situation observed, "The reality is that the security of Manitoba now and in the future is whatever the First Nations allow it to be." (Confidential interview, June, Winnipeg, 2012)

In Canada in 2013, the security guarantee is the barometer of the insurgency feasibility factor; as the guarantee drifts lower, the feasibility of a confrontation climbs higher.

In the event of a public order emergency in Manitoba, RCMP and military forces from other jurisdictions could be deployed to reinforce police units in Manitoba. Depending on the situation, this tactic might suffice. The logistical complexity of doing so would be daunting, especially over a long period. A more serious factor might negate the idea entirely.

Moving sufficient forces to Manitoba, for instance, to remove blockades on the road and rail system into the province, would deplete the security guarantee in the areas from which these forces were drawn. Assuming that aggressive action against First Nations in Manitoba would escalate the crisis and ignite hostile action elsewhere, politicians outside Manitoba would at least hesitate before volunteering their police forces for duties far from home.

Unfortunately, from a national perspective, Manitoba's non-security guarantee is not unique to the keystone province. In Canada in 2013, the security guarantee is the barometer of the insurgency feasibility factor; as the guarantee drifts lower, the feasibility of a confrontation climbs higher.

CHAPTER 7

THE FIVE DETERMINANTS AND THE POSSIBILITIES FOR CHANGE

"An implication of the feasibility hypothesis is that if the incidence of civil war is to be reduced, which seems appropriate given its appalling consequences, it will need to be made more difficult."
(COLLIER, 2009, P.24)

The Fractionalized Nation

This uncertain situation could deteriorate rapidly if the First Nations built a coordinated and effective political federation from the geographically and politically scattered chiefs and bands.

There is a growing understanding within the First Nations community that it does have, as Shawn Brant declared in 2010, "an incredibly powerful tool of influence" based on its treaty rights and sovereignty and occupation of lands vital to Canada's economy. (Op cit. Brant, 2010) Missing is a coordinated action plan to give effect to this realization at a regional or national level.

Nevertheless, any opportunity for Canada to resolve "the fractionalization determinant" may have already slipped away, as the influence of the First Nations community and the power of the idea of native autonomy and sovereignty grow. The federal government may no longer be in a position to lead and control an initiative to more fully integrate the First Nations into the Canadian mosaic because prominent native leaders believe they have the legal and moral right to operate independently of the national government.

Shawn Atleo's central notion, as he made plain in his address in Toronto in April 2012, is that Canada and the First Nations are partners. As of January 2013, there is no record of any Canadian politician contesting this idea. Rather, prime ministers' statements and policy initiatives – Paul Martin at Kelowna and Stephen Harper in the resident schools apology, for example – reinforce the notion that First Nations people (and the Métis and Inuit by inference) are distinct societies within Canada.[6] There is, however, no consensus about the meaning of such a partnership and no shared understanding of the consequences of this concept, except among a few radical Aboriginal leaders who define it as separation. (Chief Theresa Spencer's CBC News, 23 January 2013; Nelson Files, February 2113))

This uncertain situation could deteriorate rapidly if the First Nations built a coordinated and effective political federation from the geographically and politically scattered chiefs and bands. In such a case, Canadians governments may well find themselves as but one entity in a constitutionally fractured society of a federal government, ten provinces, three territories and one unified First Nations assembly.

Is there time and opportunity to act? No-one knows. The events of winter 2012-2013 suggest that the window is much shorter than previously thought. Canadians know or ought to know that our fractionalized nation will not heal itself spontaneously. The fractures can only grow wider and more evident as First Nations' leaders begin to understand the true strength of their situation and non-aboriginal Canadians react against it.

The Warrior Cohort

The young warrior cohort is here to stay. And it is growing. To reduce the feasibility of an uprising in the First Nations, Canada needs educational and employment policies that immediately transform the next and all future First Nations cohorts of 15-24 YOA into productive, self-reliant people. These policies should be introduced not because it is the right thing to do but because research demonstrates that young people with a high school diploma and a job are very much less likely to become criminal or political security risks. Without the prospect of sustained jobs, few will attend school. Without effective schooling, few will find jobs. This reform must be administered as a unified education and jobs policy. One approach without the assurance of the other will not do.

According to some Aboriginal leaders, the impasse is that Canadian education is just another trick to assimilate young people into the dominant culture. It runs counter to the partnership concept because assimilation will eventually eliminate the numerically and economically inferior partner. Many thoughtful Canadians might concede the point but also see ways to combine traditional and modern curricula to benefit both cultures.

Even if this education-and-jobs mission were carried forward rapidly, the authorities would also need to solve the problems presented by the existing dysfunctional cohorts of poorly educated, barely employable members of the Indigenous communities living on- and off-reserve. Unfortunately, the literature presents few workable ways of reaching backwards and eliminating this distressing social situation.

If Canadian leaders on both sides (or all four sides if we include the three Aboriginal communities) do not find comprehensive strategies to redress the circumstances of the nearly 350,000 Aboriginal youth, then thousands will continue to drift into irretrievable poverty, weak relationships, drug addition, sickness, criminal associations, prisons and early deaths. As Justice Sinclair warned in November 2011, the problem may have already passed the tipping-point beyond which there is no credible policy that would rectify this profile of Aboriginal youth (Winnipeg Free Press, 11 November 2011).

To reduce the feasibility of an uprising in the First Nations, Canada needs educational and employment policies that immediately transform the next and all future First Nations cohorts of 15-24 YOA into productive, self-reliant people.

Even a program to greatly increase the number of Aboriginal youth who attend university or advanced technical training off-reserve raises a worrying paradox. Once they are qualified and have experienced the advantages of life off-reserve, these people tend not to return to their homes. This trend would not surprise non-Aboriginal families whose educated children elect to live in large modern communities rather than on the family farm or in small fishing villages. The dilemma for First Nations leaders is that, as these potential leaders and role models forsake their communities, they leave behind a proportionally larger group of poorly educated, disadvantaged youth. The educational advancement of the few actually increases the disadvantages of the many, potentially to the detriment of the whole community.

The Economic and Resources Determinants

Canada's economy is substantially dependant on the export of primary commodities; and the export of these commodities is absolutely dependent on Canada's transportation networks. These networks all pass through long, nearly impossible-to-defend terrain occupied by First Nations. They are, therefore, inescapably vulnerable to disruptions and sabotage.

No practical alternative system could adequately replace these transportation networks. Anyone who has considered the importance of Canada's critical infrastructure to the nation's welfare understands this fact of national life. First Nations leaders certainly do, and they have used it to their advantage in discussions with governments, for instance, in the First Nations 2010 HST/GST disagreements with the Ontario government and during the preparations for the 2010 Olympic Winter Games in British Columbia. The federal government is worried about the vulnerability of national infrastructure as well, and displayed its concern by setting up the counter-terrorist unit referred to above. (National Post, 07 June 2012)

Making an insurgency less likely by making it less feasible is a logical, indeed, urgent national security objective. Unfortunately for Canada, the interwoven economic/national resources/transportation matrix is irreversibly vulnerable as it presents targets that cannot be fully protected. No politician, military officer or academic has any credible suggestion as to how to mitigate this vulnerability, let alone address it in full. As Canada's economic health becomes ever more dependent on moving natural resources over long, difficult transportation routes, effective Aboriginal disturbances become more feasible. And because they are feasible, it follows that strategic, coordinated First Nations actions against Canada's economy will occur.

Some suggest hopefully that First Nations/resource industry partnerships "could be the key to progress in ending the plight of First Nations people in Canada." (Ottawa Citizen, 19 July 2012) Both sides have much to gain through collaboration. However, significant uncertainties might derail these possibilities. Chief among them are defining who owns the resources in question and how the revenues will be shared.

At a deeper level, the fundamental issue is not about encouraging fair cooperation in the resource sector but about discovering who is sovereign in Canada.

Some Canadians take for granted the assertion that Canada owns the nation's land and, therefore, the nation's resources. From this perspective, the Canada/First Nations contest over resources is to insure that resource industries negotiate fairly with First Nations when they profit from mining and other activities on First Nations reserves. On the other hand, some First Nations leaders declare that they own all the resources on all the land in Canada and especially so where land claims have not been settled. Other less radical leaders claim only the resources on their land covered by treaty. In both cases, First Nations people are more stridently declaring their rights to profit from Canada's rich resource industries.

These First Nations claims have led to successful mutually beneficial arrangements between First Nations and some industries. Canadians might well praise the new cooperative atmosphere. Much of it, however, may be due to Supreme Court decisions favourable to Indigenous peoples, more assertive Aboriginal leaders, and implicit acknowledgement of the resource industries' vulnerability. At a deeper level, the fundamental issue is not about encouraging fair cooperation in the resource sector but about discovering who is sovereign in Canada.

The Security Determinant

In the early spring 2012, the Canadian government announced major cuts to most branches of the public service, including sharp reductions to the national defence budget and the RCMP. How these reductions will play out in allocating funds to military personnel and police forces is not yet clear. What is apparent, however, is that these military and national police capabilities are unlikely to expand in the near future.

At best, the national security guarantee will be no better in the near future than it is now; based more on history and behavioural patterns than a realistic threat assessment. In other words, it will be a very thin guarantee indeed. To make this weakness less critical and reduce the feasibility of Indigenous disturbances would require a considerable increase in security forces, particularly in locally employed police officers. While the federal government could create a rapidly deployable mobile force, it would soon become obvious that it was aimed at Aboriginal communities. That suspicion might provoke an angry Indigenous response, creating the very situation that the security reinforcement was meant to deter. In any case, such a force could not sustain operations across the nation for very long.

The minimal capabilities of Canada's central security forces are well understood in Aboriginal communities. Leaders there also understand the reluctance in governments, in the senior ranks of the Canadian Forces and police organizations (as demonstrated at Caledonia) to intervene in Aboriginal demonstrations even when there are urgent and lawful reasons for doing so. These facts and the assumptions that flow from them also reinforce the feasibility factor, and make more certain future challenges to the civil authority at times and places of Aboriginal leaders' choosing.

CHAPTER 8

THE NEW REALITY: RECOGNITION OF ABORIGINAL AUTONOMY

"The path forward for positive change, is based on the implementation of inherent and treaty rights and the affirmation of our government-to-government, nation-to-nation relationship. The path forward must mean an end to unilateral decisions by governments. The path forward is fully respecting First Nations' rights and supporting First Nations' approaches."
(ATLEO, 04 OCTOBER 2012. EMPHASIS ADDED)

The prevailing concept in the decades-long, federal government-directed negotiation process with First Nations is grievance-centred reconciliation: that is, a process from the federal government's point of view aimed at eliminating First Nations' grievances as motives for civil disturbances and leading, inevitably, to a changed First Nations status in Canada and a lasting peace.

Over the years, First Nations people have demanded that Canada acknowledge their communities' justified complaints – dissatisfactions or grievances based on (inter alia) violations of treaty rights and acts of Parliament, genocidal abuse, unresolved lands claims, unfair treatment and exploitation of natural resources. The Canadian governments' usual responses have been to contest these complaints in court, enter into prolonged negotiations, pay compensation, show signs of contrition or reject them as unjustified.

Most non-Aboriginal Canadians assume that the First Nations community, singularly or collectively, seeks simple redress of grievances and complaints, and that Canadian politicians and their negotiators are motivated by their desire to close long-standing disputes in ways that would allow Canada to settle finally its relationship with First Nations and move on.

At times, First Nations' complaints and grievances led to sporadic hostilities and armed conflict with Canada. In almost every case, the communities and their leaders gained little from these actions. At other times, they suffered greatly. Nevertheless, until recently, the popular assumption on both sides has been that the fair settlement of grievances would end years of legal confrontations and periodic violence. With no grievances, there would be no confrontations. This assumption is changing or has already changed.

The Canadian vision – such as one exists – is of a final national settlement that would see, perhaps somewhere "beyond the Indian Act" (Flanagan, Alcantara, and Le Dressay, 2010), all Indigenous people assume a new legal status as Canadian citizens within a sovereign Canada. On the Indigenous side, the vision – and there is an emerging if not quite universal one – sees Indigenous peoples become or remain one of several treaty-based or land-based sovereign entities within Canada. It is a model somewhat reminiscent of the rhetoric of Quebec separatists, where sovereignty association calls for political independence and an ongoing economic relationship with Canada. A First Nations model might encompass an ongoing, but modified, political relationship and a much stronger, fairer economic engagement with Canadians and Canada.

Somewhere along this road, perhaps as late as the Caledonia dispute, the dynamics of the internal/international, Aboriginal/Canada relationship changed significantly. At the heart of this transformation is the unilateral, Indigenous redefinition of grievances across a much broader and deeper horizon – a type of pre-first contact revisionist narrative. In this circumstance, every post-first contract settlement or historic reality is open to challenge or entirely invalidated by present day Aboriginal leaders.

When the National Chief of the AFN speaks of "smashing the status quo" and of "partnership," he is not talking about a new relationship built on extant concepts and prejudices. Shawn Atleo, who is a moderate and conciliatory voice among a very divergent Aboriginal leadership, is asserting Aboriginal sovereignty: "To fully transform the current relationship, we first need to move beyond the federal structures that have been established to exclusively foster dependence and manage ongoing First Nations poverty." (Atleo, National Post, 29 October 2012)

The social/demographic and territorial circumstances of the First Nations and Canada's economic vulnerabilities make a challenge to Canadian sovereignty not only feasible but almost inevitable.

Most informed Canadians might consider absurd the construction of a substantial Indigenous autonomy as the foundation for future First Nations/Canada relationships. That is, of course, until they examine without prejudice whether Atloe's notion of "government-to-government" relations is based on firm ground. Then, Canadians might ask whether the country unwittingly created conditions that make a First Nations challenge to Canada's sovereignty – a "smashing of the status quo" – feasible or even inevitable. (See Bland, Ottawa Citizen, 26 January 2013; Spence, CBC.ca/News, 23 January 2013; and an opposing view, "Letters," Ottawa Citizen, 28 January 2013)

The social/demographic and territorial circumstances of the First Nations and Canada's economic vulnerabilities make a challenge to Canadian sovereignty not only feasible but almost inevitable.(APTN National News, 10 January 2013) The grievance-reconciliation conceptual framework does not provide a predictable or sure path to reconciliation. It does not, for instance, explain or define which grievances and in what order of priority are the most urgent. Consequently, the process does not provide any predictable or credible map to reconciliation. Indeed, as circumstances and economic and political awareness in the First Nations community change, old grievances evolve and new ones appear.

Maintaining Canada's present approach to Aboriginal policy focussed on redressing grievances is not simply wrongheaded, it is irrelevant. Conversely, there is no indication that Indigenous autonomy would end legal challenges, political battles and demands for greater financial support from the Government of Canada. Indeed, Canada's decision to sign the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, initially described as a symbolic act by Indigenous leaders, added demands to the already-lengthy Canadian Aboriginal list.

If Canada is to maintain control of its sovereignty, then the feasibility of a First Nations challenge, armed or unarmed, will need to be reduced. How might the federal government accomplish this? And how might First Nations leaders take advantage of their situation and enhance the feasibility of challenging Canadian sovereignty, collectively or in economically significant regions in Canada, if they decide to do so?

Diminishing the Feasibility Factor: Federal Policy Options

The federal government, in cooperation (as warranted) with provincial and territorial governments, might open a conversation with First Nations people to discuss a new constitutional l framework to govern First Nations/Canada relations. This framework might include measures aimed at diminishing national fragmentation and disarming the warrior cohort as part of a broad national economic and social program. Such a comprehensive, national, multi-purpose program might include in outline:

- Massive (à la the post-war U.S. Marshall Plan for European reconstruction) educational, medical, community infrastructure and governance programs for on-reserve people to bring conditions in First Nations communities into line with (or at least substantially closer to) the non-Aboriginal norms in Canada. In return, the First Nations might collectively agree to surrender absolute sovereignty under terms negotiated between the federal a unified Aboriginal congress. This agreement would formally acknowledge some form of sovereignty, if not Indigenous autonomy and authority in Canada. The treaties and Section 35 of the Constitution of Canada allow consideration of these possibilities.
- Programs that encompass comprehensive, integrated systems approaches to First Nations needs beyond, for instance, addressing Indigenous housing problems through sponsored First Nations' housing construction and maintenance trades training initiatives help to create a degree of self-sufficient capabilities in First Nations' communities;
- A negotiated and fair redistribution of revenues derived from Canada's natural wealth under a regime that brings First Nations, federal, provincial leaders to the table as partners or interested parties;
- A program implemented immediately and with all reasonable means to ensure that every Aboriginal youth has a genuine opportunity to earn at least a high school diploma as the first step to securing a job; (See for policy example: FCPP, March 07, 2012)
- A program aimed at reinventing the conceptual framework for federal/provincial policies dealing with the incarceration of Aboriginal people. Special emphasis in such reforms should be placed on separating young Aboriginal prisoners from older Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal prisoners as part of a program to disconnect youthful offenders from criminal recruitment and to encourage targeted social rehabilitation.
- Build across Canada on an individual and/or family basis a comprehensive First Nations resettlement program (to include healthcare, secure and safe housing, education/employment programs for all ages) to facilitate and support the voluntary migration of First Nations people from reserves to villages, towns, and cities or high employment areas off-reserve;
- Establish a well-funded First Nations leadership institution devoted to developing practical leadership skills for young First Nations l leaders.
- Build, in cooperation with First Nations leaders, a credible (in the eyes of First Nations people) a democratic and accountable First Nations governance establishment based on Canadian constitutional and legal norms and First Nations' traditions.

The federal government might also act immediately to reinforce the security guarantee in and near First Nations communities by:

- Developing means to increase significantly resources to safeguard Canada's truly critical transportation infrastructure in vulnerable locations;
- Reinforcing the federal security guarantee to First Nations people in vulnerable regions and reserves and in cities with a high proportion of First Nations people;
- Reforming the present Public Safety Canada program "First Nations Policing" (Public Safety Canada, 2 February 2012) by transferring the entire program to the RCMP and building in cooperation with First Nations leaders and communities a highly effective First Nations police establishment; and
- Dealing with the extensive use of illegal drugs in and around reserves, perhaps by expanding federal, provincial, and First Nations' enforcement capabilities.

Enhancing the Feasibility Factor: Aboriginal Options

The options available to Indigenous peoples are extensive, and have been powerfully presented to Canadians during the 2012-2013 protests. The fact that Canada's natural wealth flows unfairly from Indigenous lands and peoples to non-Aboriginal Canadians is a long-standing, justifiable grievance. Therefore, it is morally and ethically just that Indigenous peoples act in their own interests and in the interests of their future generations to correct this unfairness. It is also appropriate that First Nations leaders use or suggest that they will use whatever peaceful means and advantages they have to achieve this outcome. To this end, First Nations leaders might:

It is also appropriate that First Nations leaders use or suggest that they will use whatever peaceful means and advantages they have to achieve this outcome.

- Act together and insist that the federal government respect the First Nations rights as defined in the Constitution of Canada (and specifically Section 35). It is their right and in the collective interests for the First Nations to maintain and enhance peacefully their autonomy and the power provided to them in treaties, Canadian laws and policies.
- Demonstrate Canada's economic resource vulnerability. The reality that Canadian governments have generally ignored the social situation of the Aboriginal people, and constructed a fractured and unfairly administered Canada is no fault of the First Nations. That Canadian governments and entrepreneurs have developed vulnerable infrastructure systems the disruption of which would threaten the nation's economy and private riches is no fault of the Indigenous people. That Canadian governments have neglected the nation's defence and internal security forces is no fault of the First Nations. However, First Nations leaders have only themselves to blame for not developing a coherent, unified strategy aimed at taking advantage of the serendipitous yet powerful situation Canadian neglect has presented to them.
- Assume responsibility for the behaviour and welfare of Aboriginal people. The plague of drugs, the menace of criminals and gangs on- and off-reserve, the neglect of children, and other social blights disfigures many Indigenous communities. In the eyes of many Canadians, these circumstances and situations make Indigenous governments and leaders appear weak and incompetent.. The national reaction to Chief Theresa Spence in January 2013 and the revelations about financial difficulties in her community are a case in point. (See, for example, Yahoo News, 03 January 2013; and QMI Agency, 07 January 2013) These realities undermine the credibility – to the point of crude jokes – in the broader Canadian community that a First Nations insurgency is feasible. A strong, healthy, responsible, self-disciplined set of Indigenous communities would gain considerably more attention and respect from Canadians than they do today. Only the people themselves can effect this change.

- Unify the political power of the First Nations community. To achieve their policy demands and to exploit the political power inherent in their implicit (and potential) dominance of Canada's transportation networks, First Nations people must first overhaul their fractured political system.

Surely, there must be some way to honour the historic independence of individual First Nations while at the same time allowing the collective community for the common good to unite behind a democratically elected leader. Surely, there must be some way for the First Nations leaders to use peacefully the power that successive Canadian governments have unwittingly dropped into their hands. Surely there must be a way past the First Nations history of 'grief and grievance' on the road towards a mature, unified government of all the people.

The Sovereignty Association Dilemma

Sovereignty association has a unique political history for most Canadians. It means – depending on one's point of view – the sly manipulation of the Constitution of Canada by Quebec separatists aimed at producing two distinct sovereignties more or less within one nation. However, because a unilateral declaration of independence (UDI) is deemed too radical and dangerous an option for most Quebecers, political efforts to achieve sovereignty association required that the government of Quebec produce a sovereign entity before a political separation occurred.

Without reconciliation, very little of importance in the First Nations' communities will improve.

This conundrum led to a long, agonizing, still continuing debate inside and outside Quebec aimed at proving – or not – that the province was/is a distinct polity and, therefore, de facto sovereign. The difficulty, then and now, is that the fundamental premise of this argument (that Quebec is before the fact sovereign) is a contested political opinion, not a historical or legal fact. Thus, for Canada to agree to any terms of a possible "sovereignty association" without the established fact of Quebec's sovereignty was and is nonsensical. (A UDI presents, of course, an entirely different proposition.)

The case for Aboriginal people in Canada is fundamentally different. Aboriginal autonomy/sovereignty is a fact today as it has been for centuries after first contact. Moreover, it is a fact agreed upon by the high courts in Canada and acknowledged in Canada's constitution. Indigenous people enjoy distinct rights defined in treaties and Canadian law. In this context, Aboriginal sovereignty association has an agreed-upon definition now, in terms of various treaties and the Indian Act, and in the future as defined by the degree to which Canada and individual or collective First Nations decide to be associated.

Canadians' acceptance of this rationale is equivocal at best. They understand and support the concept of compensation for harm done, as in the case of the residential schools. Notwithstanding the Nunavut and Nunavik settlements – both far out of sight and mind in mainstream Canada – Canadians are very much less likely to accept policies that would divide Canada into many nearby, separate political entities and transfer enormous real and potential wealth to the First Nations in return, perhaps, for very little.

As long as it is convenient, Canadians can believe that the national security questions raised in this essay are merely an arcane, ceaseless contest between government officials, a bunch of greedy lawyers, and opportunistic First Nations chiefs – members together of the so-called "Aboriginal industry." To do so, however, neglects at their peril the insistent declaration of sovereignty by many native leaders – including the moderate AFN National Chief, Shawn Atleo. Such an attitude neglects also the evident undercurrent of hostility many resident in the general non-Aboriginal population hold towards native leaders who aggressively promote their doctrine of national sovereignty.

Harry Swain, a former (1987-1992) deputy minister of AANDC (known as INAC at the time) was a champion for meaningful changes in the laws and regulations governing the way Canadians treat Canada's native people. Yet, in his opinion, the First Nations pursuit of sovereignty in any meaningful form is a dangerous strategy. "At the root of the issue is the persistent claim by [First Nations] that they are sovereign states. It is hard to see anything but capitulation or bloodshed if the issue is forced." (Swain, 2010, p.202)

Closing Thoughts

While the five determinants identified herein suggest that a First Nations challenge to Canada's sovereignty is feasible, the problematic First Nations political structure of bands, reserves, nations and various concepts of chiefs, councils and representatives suggests otherwise. To most Canadians, Canada is safe because the First Nations communities could never competently manage such a daring, risky, and complicated enterprise.

In the First Nations community the sovereignty of each nation is paramount. Yet the idea is a dead-hand when an assembly of more than 600 chiefs each representing but a few hundred people, many living on distant and isolated reserves, attempts to force any issue concerning important national matters with a prime minister of Canada who has no obvious reason to negotiate with them at all. As experience demonstrates, in any competition with a Canadian prime minister of a united government supported by extensive bureaucratic, legal, financial, and security resources First Nations leaders will take home to their communities no more than defeat, disappointment, division, and anger.

On the other hand, a prime minister of Canada confronting an elected leader of some 700,000 unified First Nations people would face a very different situation. If this leader also arrived at the negotiations with the feasibility hypothesis and a powerful reminder of Canada's economic vulnerabilities at the ready, then much more fairness might result.

In the coming year as the appreciation of the power of the feasibility factor grows and matures in the First Nations community, frustration and resentment will grow apace in the non-Aboriginal community, as public reaction to the generally peaceful Idle No More demonstrations attests. Without reconciliation, very little of importance in the First Nations' communities will improve. Without reasonable changes in both communities in the near future, a great deal might change for the worse for the First Nations people and for Canadians.

DR. DOUGLAS L. BLAND,

Professor Emeritus,
Queen's University, Kingston

Dr. Bland retired from the Canadian Armed Forces in 1990 as a Lieutenant Colonel after more than 30 years of service. He held command appointments in Canada and Europe and senior operational staff positions also in Europe and at the Canadian National Defence Headquarters. In his final years of service, Dr. Bland was Senior Staff Officer for Curriculum Development at the National Defence College of Canada.

From 1996 to 2011 Dr. Bland held the Chair of Defence Studies at Queen's University where he conducted research and taught in the fields of defence policy making and management at national and international levels, the organization and functioning of defence ministries, civil-military relations, and insurgency operations. He has published books, articles, and reports and lectured in these fields in Canada, the United States, Europe, South Africa, and Latin America.

Among other works, Dr. Bland wrote, in 1987, The Administration of Defence Policy in Canada, 1947-84, and in 1995, Chiefs of Defence: Government And The Unified Command of The Canadian Armed Forces. In 1999, he wrote "A Unified Theory of Civil-Military Relations" and in 2001, "Patterns In Liberal Democratic Civil-Military Relations" both published in the American professional journal, Armed Forces & Society. In 2004 he completed the book, Campaigns for International Security: Canada's Defence Policy At the Turn of the Century.

Douglas Bland began in 2006 a series of research studies concerned with Canada's internal security situation. He is the author of the political novel, Uprising, (Dundurn Press, 2009) that describes a future First Nations' insurgency against Canada. These studies continue.

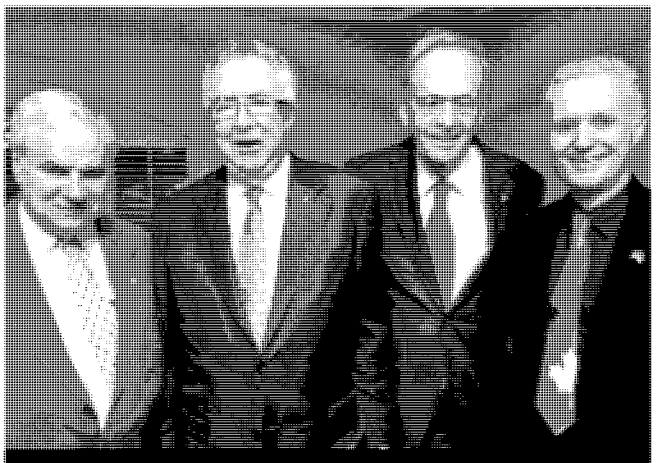
MACDONALD-LAURIER INSTITUTE

True North in Canadian Public Policy

Critically Acclaimed, Award-Winning Institute

The Macdonald-Laurier Institute fills a gap in Canada's democratic infrastructure by focusing our work on the full range of issues that fall under Ottawa's jurisdiction.

- "One of the Top 5 New Think Tanks in the World" for 2011 as rated by the University of Pennsylvania.
- Cited by five present and former Canadian Prime Ministers, as well as by David Cameron, the British Prime Minister.
- First book, The Canadian Century: Moving out of America's Shadow, won the Sir Antony Fisher International Memorial Award in 2011.
- Executive Director & Founder Brian Lee Crowley named one of 100 most influential people in Ottawa in 2012.
- The Wall Street Journal, The Economist, The Globe and Mail, The National Post and many other leading national and international publications have quoted the Institute's work.



Former Speaker of the House of Commons Peter Milliken, former Prime Minister Joe Clark, former Prime Minister Jean Chrétien, and MLI Managing Director Brian Lee Crowley.

Ideas Change the World

Independent and non-partisan, the Macdonald-Laurier Institute is increasingly recognized as the thought leader on national issues in Canada, prodding governments, opinion leaders and the general public to accept nothing but the very best public policy solutions for the challenges Canada faces.

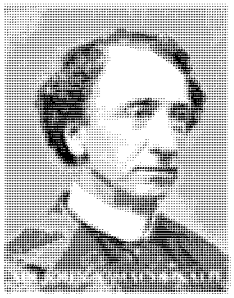
About the Macdonald-Laurier Institute

What Do We Do?

When you change how people think, you change what they want and how they act. That is why thought leadership is essential in every field. At MLI, we strip away the complexity that makes policy issues unintelligible and present them in a way that leads to action, to better quality policy decisions, to more effective government, and to a more focused pursuit of the national interest of all Canadians. MLI is the only non-partisan, independent national public policy think tank based in Ottawa that focuses on the full range of issues that fall under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

What Is in a Name?

The Macdonald-Laurier Institute exists not merely to burnish the splendid legacy of two towering figures in Canadian history – Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier – but to renew that legacy. A Tory and a Grit, an English speaker and a French speaker - these two men represent the very best of Canada's fine political tradition. As prime minister, each championed the values that led to Canada assuming her place as one of the world's leading democracies. We will continue to vigorously uphold these values, the cornerstones of our nation.



Working for a Better Canada

Good policy doesn't just happen; it requires good ideas, hard work, and being in the right place at the right time. In other words, it requires MLI. We pride ourselves on independence, and accept no funding from the government for our research. If you value our work and if you believe in the possibility of a better Canada, consider making a tax-deductible donation. The Macdonald-Laurier Institute is a registered charity.

Our Issues

The Institute undertakes an impressive programme of thought leadership on public policy. Some of the issues we have tackled recently include:

- The impact of banning oil tankers on the West Coast;
- Making Canada a food superpower in a hungry world;
- Aboriginal people and the management of our natural resources;
- Population ageing and public finances;
- The vulnerability of Canada's critical infrastructure;
- Ottawa's regulation of foreign investment; and
- How to fix Canadian health care.

What people are saying about the Macdonald-Laurier Institute

I commend Brian Crowley and the team at MLI for your laudable work as one of the leading policy think tanks in our nation's capital. The Institute has distinguished itself as a thoughtful, empirically-based and non-partisan contributor to our national public discourse.

PRIME MINISTER STEPHEN HARPER

As the author Brian Lee Crowley has set out, there is a strong argument that the 21st Century could well be the Canadian Century.

BRITISH PRIME MINISTER DAVID CAMERON

In the global think tank world, MLI has emerged quite suddenly as the "disruptive" innovator, achieving a well-deserved profile in mere months that most of the established players in the field can only envy. In a medium where timely, relevant, and provocative commentary defines value, MLI has already set the bar for think tanks in Canada.

PETER NICHOLSON, FORMER SENIOR POLICY ADVISOR TO PRIME MINISTER PAUL MARTIN

The reports and studies coming out of MLI are making a difference and the Institute is quickly emerging as a premier Canadian think tank.

JOCK FINLAYSON, EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT OF POLICY, BUSINESS COUNCIL OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Very much enjoyed your presentation this morning. It was first-rate and an excellent way of presenting the options which Canada faces during this period of "choice"... Best regards and keep up the good work.

OTTAWA - As First Nations groups marched on Parliament Hill to mark National Aboriginal Day, NDP Leader Tom Mulcair forecast a "hot summer" as tensions in the country's indigenous communities threaten to boil over.
"I can tell from having talked to hundreds of representatives of First Nations that that frustration is palpable, it's growing, especially amongst the young people," Mulcair said Friday.
"We're going to see a lot of activity on this file during the summer. ... I'm quite concerned that it will be a hot summer on the native file across Canada, on the aboriginal file. Mr. Harper's going to have only himself to blame."
About 150 people started their walk at Victoria Island in the Ottawa River — where Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence staged her liquid-only protest earlier this year — and made their way to the Parliament Buildings.
They whistled, beat drums, sang and waved an array of flags as they brought lunchtime traffic to a halt on the bridge connecting Ottawa and Gatineau, Que. Some carried signs that read "A sacred journey for future generations" and "A walk for unity."
Activists say the march marks the beginning of a "Sovereignty Summer, which is an offshoot of the Idle No More movement that encompasses other aboriginal groups.
The Idle No More cause, which began in December and January, was a protest against the Conservative government's omnibus Bill C-45, which First Nations groups claim threatens their treaty rights set out in the Constitution.

Many of those same frustrations were on full display Friday as the crowd gathered on the lawn of Parliament Hill, the empty scaffolding and stage for the coming Canada Day festivities looming behind them.
"You've journeyed from many miles, you've come here together in unity with your heart and spirit to raise an awareness that we are a people, we have been here since time immemorial," said hereditary leader Claudette Commanda. "You do this on behalf of your youth and those that are not here yet.
"And it is a powerful message that you are giving to all of Canada and as well as to all of the world."
A short distance away, inside the Centre Block which houses the Commons and the Senate, a directive went out to all senators and their staff to steer clear of the activities on Parliament Hill. The Senate is still in session, although the Commons is adjourned for the summer.
A note from Alain Laniel, acting director of Senate security operations, advised senators and their staff to "avoid any interaction with the demonstrators."
Liberal Sen. Lillian Dyck, who was scheduled to speak at the event, took exception to the directive.
"I do not believe that the security operations of the Senate should dictate to parliamentarians and their staff with whom they may or may not interact," she wrote in response.
Last month, thousands of anti-abortion protesters gathered on Parliament Hill, but Senate security made no mention of avoiding interaction with them.
Meanwhile, Nunavut Premier Eva Aariak called National Aboriginal Day an opportunity for an honest inventory of the issues facing Aboriginal Peoples.
"This past year, Canadians across the country rallied together to raise awareness of issues currently facing our aboriginal population and to call on the government for a new relationship," she said in a statement.
In Quebec, the provincial government announced Friday it will extend a $5 million grant to help 14 Inuit villages fight child poverty.
The announcement comes two days after a study by the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives indicated that the rate of child poverty among First Nations in Quebec is double the provincial average. Child poverty was also raised in a meeting between Premier Pauline Marois and Inuit on Friday morning.

The high cost of goods and services, boosted by the lack of land links to remote communities is a big problem, said Marois.
"We realize that it is much larger problem than that targeted by the grant announced today," she said. "However, we are determined to identify effective and sustainable solutions."
Marois also announced $1.4 million for the Tursujuq park and $20 million for maintenance of a road to Salluit and municipal services for 500 homes in Nunavik. The premier also signed a modification of the James Bay and Northern Quebec agreement which would give the province 5,000 kilometres of land for development.

Subject: Concrete action needed from PM to quell any First Nation unrest: Shawn Atleo (CTV, 2013-06-02)

(Emphasis Added)

Heather Scoffield, The Canadian Press
Published Sunday, June 2, 2013 6:25PM EDT

OTTAWA -- The extent of First Nations unrest this summer depends in large part on how much concrete action Stephen Harper authorizes on entrenching ancient treaty rights, says National Chief Shawn Atleo.
In a wide-ranging interview to discuss the relationship with Ottawa, the head of the Assembly of First Nations gave mixed reviews to the process launched with great fanfare in January when Harper and Atleo last met.
"Business as usual just causes ongoing conflict," Atleo told The Canadian Press. "Expressions of good faith -- and implementation of those commitments (from last January) -- are what is required."

Atleo says talks between senior government officials and First Nations from some parts of the country over how to fully implement historic treaty rights seem to be inching ahead. Atleo and many First Nations leaders argue that full recognition of the treaties will lead to improvements in conditions across the board -- in education, housing, and the sharing of the bounty from Canada's natural resources.
"We've seen signals on the part of the government that it is prepared to do that," Atleo said.
But at the same time, the federal government continues to fight First Nations in court over child welfare funding, continues to impose legislation without consulting those it will affect, and resists widespread calls for a national inquiry into hundreds of missing or murdered aboriginal women, the national chief added.
Plus, the government has been withholding much of the documentation needed to understand the impact of residential schools.
At the same time, there is lingering discontent within many First Nations about major changes made to environmental oversight through federal legislation over the past year.
"There's always been this pattern that, 'well, let's just do one or two things now, and the rest, you know, we can deal with later,'" Atleo said.
"No. Transformative change is required because we are still in a big moment of reckoning."
As aboriginal young people become more educated and more connected through social media, they are increasingly skeptical of the establishment, whether it be the federal government or the complex structure of chiefs under the Indian Act, Atleo added.
"They...will not be swayed by press releases or statements from governments that say what they're doing is working and that it is enough. Because it isn't," Atleo said. "They are making it very clear by expressing themselves. And they will be heard."
Atleo and Harper, along with key members of their teams, held a highly contentious winter meeting on January 11, just as the Idle No More protest movement gathered strength in communities across the country.
As the leaders met, large crowds of First Nations activists and environmentalists rallied loudly in the streets, demanding more accountability from both sides.
At the same time, Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence denounced the meeting since it did not include the governor-general or a wide range of chiefs, and persisted with a liquids-only hunger protest. Some chiefs openly discussed blockades and economic disruption, forecasting more upheaval this summer.
A shaken Atleo left the meeting with a commitment from Harper to empower his top officials to negotiate fundamental aboriginal rights, focusing especially on education and resource revenue sharing.
And indeed, insiders on all sides say there is considerable movement.
The new aboriginal affairs minister, Bernard Valcourt, has travelled widely and made some announcements about new regional arrangements for education, speeding up the process to settle specific claims, and working with First Nations to review the comprehensive claims process.
"While this progress is important and will have a positive impact on First Nations, we need to build on it and sustain the momentum that is being created. We will continue to work with First Nations to make concrete progress on our shared priorities," said Jason MacDonald, a spokesman for Valcourt.
Activists are already signalling they are not prepared to wait.
"To me, it's like they (the government and the Assembly of First Nations) are buying time to get through the summer," said Russ Diabo, an outspoken long-time First Nations activist from the network Defenders of the Land. His group has joined forces with Idle No More organizers and other experienced groups to stage a "Sovereignty Summer" that will protest resource projects and pipelines across the country, backed up by demonstrations in cities.
With the British Columbia government dealing the Northern Gateway pipeline proposal another blow last week, opposition will focus around the Line 9 pipeline proposal. That plan would carry bitumen from Sarnia to Montreal, said Clayton Thomas-Muller, spokesman for Sovereignty Summer.
The Line 9 focus implicates Highway 401, one of Canada's biggest and busiest thoroughfares connecting southern Ontario to Quebec.
"Communities are getting ready to make a very significant point over the summer," Thomas-Muller said.
In the interview, Atleo mentioned frequently that the ancient treaties included a commitment to peace and friendship, and that elders are constantly reminding youth of this requirement. He pointed to the "grace and strength" of the Nishiyuu walkers who trekked to Ottawa this winter and were joined by hundreds of supporters -- only to find the prime minister in Toronto greeting panda bears from China.

The walkers responded with dignity, saying they had a gift for Harper when he is ready to hear them, Atleo said. But he warned that such non-violent response should not be taken for granted, pointing to conflicts at Oka, Que., Gustafsen Lake, B.C., Caledonia, Ont., and the fact that the country's jails are dominated by aboriginal prisoners. "We want to see things improve and be better," Atleo said. "Let's make sure we remember that we've had exchanges that result in conflict and physical harm."

APTN National News

OTTAWA--The tears of Elders drove a group of six Mi'kmaq from Listuguj to walk about 900 kilometres from their community in Quebec to Ottawa.

Adam Barnaby, 25, said Elders in his community often shed tears during ceremonies when they spoke about what the Harper government was doing to First Nations people and the land.

"I kept hearing elders cry about what the Harper government was doing to our people, the Mi'kmaq First Nations people, and why are they tearing up the land," said Barnaby.

Initially his friends laughed at the idea of walking from Listuguj to Ottawa but, after a sweat in Eel River Bar First Nation in New Brunswick, Barnaby decided the walk had to happen.

So, on May 1, a group of seven left Listuguj and six arrived in Ottawa early Tuesday at about 2:30 a.m. They called themselves the "Peace and Friendship Walkers" in reference to the Peace and Friendship Treaties signed between the Mi'kmaq and the Crown.

"It was a roller coaster of a ride. We received a lot of positive support. We did receive some negative remarks from people passing by," said Ryan Papineau, 26. "People came out to us in tears; right after someone gave us the middle finger. That is the way the Creator works in these polarities of positive and negative."

The group walked and ran in turns with a van following behind. The three women in the group slept in a trailer and the three men slept in tents. Every morning the group conducted ceremonies to push them on along the highway.

"Our ancestors, they walked with us and gave us the strength we needed to carry on and we sent them off in the evening," said Papineau.

The group sat through question period on Tuesday afternoon, but missed by 30 seconds a statement delivered in the House of Commons from their local NDP MP Philip Toone.

Toone said the walk was "just the latest example of the leadership the Mi'kmaq Nations have taken in the Gaspe and across Atlantic Canada."

Papineau said the "theatrics" of question period, which swirled around Prime Minister Stephen Harper's former chief of staff Nigel Wright's $90,000 gift to Senator Mike Duffy, left him longing for substance.

"I don't have a lot of faith invested in the current system of government," said Papineau. "First Nations people have to develop their own systems of government."

The Mi'kmaq of Listuguj have been at the forefront of the Idle No More movement and community members launched a rail blockade in January in support of the Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence during her hunger strike.

Barnaby said to expect Listuguj to again be on the front lines once Idle No More's Sovereignty Summer hits full swing in the coming months.

"We are not going to stop, we are going to keep blocking the roads and keep blocking the railroads," said Barnaby. "It is Idle No More and we are not idling."

Last week, a group of walkers from Manitoba arrived in Ottawa and in March a group of walkers from Quebec's northernmost Cree community were met by thousands of people on Parliament Hill at the end of their 1,600 kilometre walk.

National protests will support Hamilton Enbridge activists
Ryan Mallough, special to CBC News (http://www.cbc.ca/news/credit.html) Posted: Jun 24, 2013 5:19 PM ET Protestors from across the country will take to the streets in nearly a dozen cities tomorrow in support of activists who took over an Enbridge Inc. pumping station in Hamilton last week.

The action, titled "Swamp Line 9," is in protest of the Line 9 pipeline that runs from Montreal to Sarnia. Enbridge is seeking to reverse the direction of the pipeline in a bid to send tar sands oil from Alberta to the east coast. The protesters moved on to the North Westover site on June 20.
"It's important to show people in the struggle out east that there are people in Alberta that are happy with what they're doing," said Chelsea Flook.
Flook's Sierra Club Prairie Chapter will be hosting a local solidarity action in Edmonton.

http://www.cbc.ca/hamilton/news/story/2013/06/19/hamilton-enbridge-line-9-protest.html)

"At the same time, it's locally important to show Edmontonians that people are united across Canada against tar sands expansions and they are raising their voices," she added.
The National Energy Board has already approved the first leg of the project, with public hearings on the second leg scheduled for the fall. Enbridge has already began construction on the project.
"These communities along the route are giving voice to their concerns. They have a right to say no," said Maryam Adrangi, spokesperson for the Rising Tide's Vancouver chapter.
"They're saying that we care about the land we live on, the water we drink and the air we breathe — they're incredibly legitimate concerns," Adrangi said.
Line 9 crosses several major rivers that drain into Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River as well as Spencer Creek, Hamilton's largest watershed.
Protestors say that the drinking water of millions of people would be at risk in the event of an oil spill.
The protest is part of "Sovereignty Summer," a series of protest actions promoting Indigenous rights and environmental protection led by Idle No More and Defenders of the Land.
Enbridge told CBC Hamilton last week that the company is willing to listen to concerns.
"We are willing to speak with these individuals about their concerns," said Ken Hall, a senior advisor for community relations. "I'm sure we can try to resolve this in due course"

John Ivison: Occupy and Idle No More could team up to block pipelines going east
John Ivison (http://fullcomment.nationalpost.com/author/jivisonnp/) | 13/06/26 | Last Updated: 13/06/26 8:56 PM ET

The failure of Canadian oil and gas producers to get world prices for their product costs the country $28-billion a year, according to the last budget, reducing federal government revenues by $4-billion. No wonder Ottawa has been so keen to push projects that would help get natural resources to Asian and European markets.

Part of the solution is to build new pipelines, but the news on that front has been decidedly mixed. The Northern Gateway pipeline to Kitimat, B.C., looks as dead as a Norwegian blue parrot. The regulatory process is still ongoing, but negative public sentiment in B.C. makes it look a long shot.
The Keystone pipeline between Alberta and the Gulf Coast hangs in the balance, at the mercy of Barack Obama's new climate change action plan. The President said Tuesday the project will only be given the go-ahead if it does not "significantly exacerbate" carbon pollution. Quite what that means remains a riddle, wrapped in a mystery, inside an enigma. Like Churchill's famous quote about Russia, the key to that riddle may be America's national interest. The Harper government argues this would be best served by North American energy security, where Canadian crude replaces equally high carbon imports from Venezuela and Nigeria. It's not yet clear whether the President is convinced
Such is the uncertain future of both projects that great store has been placed in nascent plans by both Enbridge and Trans Canada Corp. to transport crude eastward to refineries in Quebec and New Brunswick, from where it could be exported. (Enbridge is proposing to reverse an existing oil pipeline between Sarnia and Montreal. Line 9A from Sarnia to Westover, near Hamilton, has been granted regulatory approval; public hearings on Line 9B to Montreal will begin this fall. Trans Canada is proposing to convert existing natural gas pipelines for oil transportation between Alberta and tank terminals in Quebec City and Saint John, N.B.).
Politicians of all stripes have shown unusual solidarity in support of moving oilsands crude eastward. The good news for the pipeline companies is that there has not been concerted opposition from environmental and native groups to their proposals – until now.
Last Thursday, a group of environmental protestors took over a pumping station north of Hamilton. The action, dubbed Swamp Line 9, was aimed at blocking plans by Enbridge to reverse Line 9's flow pipeline, which would allow it to eventually pump up to 300,000 barrels of diluted bitumen from the oilsands.
Early Wednesday, police raided the Enbridge pumping station and arrested 20 people.
But that is unlikely to be the end of the matter. The protest was supported by numerous environmental groups, Idle No More and the Occupy movement. This is the activist equivalent of a camel – the veritable horse designed by committee. Each group has its own agenda – the environmental NGOs want to make Energy East a proxy war for the oilsands and bottleneck production on the Prairies; Idle No More threatens more non-violent protests as part of its Sovereignty Summer, unless Ottawa recognizes the rights of native groups to say no to development on their traditional lands (among other demands); while Occupy calls for a "total restructuring of the political and economic system" no less.
Line 9 has been carrying conventional crude from east to west for 20 years without incident, but this protest has been sparked by claims that diluted bitumen from the oilsands is more acidic and corrosive, and thus more likely to spill
Line 9 has been carrying conventional crude from east to west for 20 years without incident, but this protest has been sparked by claims that diluted bitumen from the oilsands is more acidic and corrosive, and thus more likely to spill.
With uncanny timing, the protest culminated just as the U.S. National Research Council released its findings on the transportation of diluted bitumen, concluding that claims by such groups as Friends of the Earth are false. "Diluted bitumen has no greater likelihood of accidental pipeline release than other crude," the report said.
However, as native environmental activist Clayton Thomas Muller pointed out, Enbridge's track record on leaks has done the protesters a big favour. It was an Enbridge pipeline that spilled 3.3 million litres of oil in Michigan and the company reported another leak in northern Alberta last weekend.
"Their narrative is unraveling with every spill," he said.
The Sovereignty Summer is still in its infancy – rallies in sympathy with the Swamp Line 9 protest across the country were sparsely attended Tuesday. But if unrest becomes more coordinated, this could be the start of a long, hot summer.
Line 9 runs through the traditional lands of the Six Nations of the Grand River in southwestern Ontario. As the Six Nations proved in the Caledonia land dispute, they are a far bigger impediment to development they consider unwelcome than a rag-tag band of environmentalists.
While the sea may refuse no river, the quest for Canadian crude to reach tidewater is proving a good deal more problematic.

Joseph and Ben,

FYI, I just retrieved the following information at IdleNoMore.ca/events.

"Brothers and Sisters from the Lheidli Tènneh Nation in Prince George B.C. held a rally on April 14th. A number of people after the rally got talking about Idle No More and the idea`s they have for the movement. One brother in particular told us the how the local park , Fort George Park, was a traditional village of his people before they were forced out by early settlers. then he mentioned he would like to go there and set up a smoke house. A discussion was had and the people decided that they would set up a camp at the park on Canada Day and hold out as long as they could. This is a call out across the entire country to do the same. As the summer gets hotter, and the days get longer, we are getting fed up with all the inaction of the government. This action is to be a peaceful way to show our discontent with the Federal Conservative Government and their policies. We wish to make sure that these actions are done in a good way so we wish to make sure that everyone talks to the spiritual leaders and elders to give their blessing of the actions. All My Relations.

More to come as they are received."

Have a great weekend!

National Stop Harper Campaign

BACKGROUND

The "National Stop Harper Day" is a citizen-driven movement created via social media following a growing number of concerns over what is perceived as being the Conservative Government's disregard of the democratic rights of Canadians. Over fourteen cities across Canada took part in the launch of the "National Stop Harper Day" campaign on July 1st, 2012.

CURRENT SITUATION

The second annual event planned by the "National Stop Harper Day" campaign is expected to kick off the weekend of anti-Harper public demonstrations with "STOP HARPER DAY" on June 28th, 2013 in Calgary during the Conservative Party Convention. The event is expected to wrap up on July 1st with "SAVE CANADA DAY", involving the participation of eighteen (18) cities (see Appendice 1). Ottawa has been listed among the cities participating.

As per information located Canada Day is intended to be a fun day for Canadians to show their patriotism and therefore, "SAVE CANADA DAY" is not intended to disrupt the July 1st celebrations.[1]

"SAVE CANADA DAY" Banner Drop Challenge: The "National Stop Harper Day" campaign is encouraging Canadians to take part in a "Stop Harper" Banner Drop challenge, the largest banner drop ever to take place on Canada Day in honour of Brigitte DePape, the Canadian activist who on June 3rd, 2011 held up a "Stop Harper!" sign in the Senate during the Throne Speech.[2]

the banner drop will take place at three (3) undisclosed locations in the following cities: New Hamburg, Kitchener and Waterloo, all located in Ontario.

ASSESSMENT

Though there is no indication at this time of a plan to drop a banner in Ottawa, given it is the nation's capital we cannot discount the possibility that a banner drop may be planned for the NCR. Members on site should exercise a certain level of vigilance and closely monitor access to restricted areas.

NOTEWORTHY and FOR STRATEGIC CONSIDERATION

In September 2012, in an unrelated event, the Public Service Alliance of Canada hired a pilot to fly a plane pulling a large banner written in French which read: "Stephen Harper nous deteste.ca". The plane was ordered to land by the RCMP.

Though not related to the topic at hand, it is an example of dis-satisfied Canadians exercising their right to free speech.

Some First Nations are calling for a 'Sovereignty Summer' of protests.
OTTAWA -- The extent of First Nations unrest this summer depends in large part on how much concrete action Stephen Harper authorizes on entrenching ancient treaty rights, says National Chief Shawn Atleo.
In a wide-ranging interview to discuss the relationship with Ottawa, the head of the Assembly of First Nations gave mixed reviews to the process launched with great fanfare in January when Harper and Atleo last met.

Enlarge Image (http://media.winnipegfreepress.com/images/5025710.jpg)
Adrian Wyld / The Canadian Press Archives Shaw Atleo wants the government to implement treaty rights. (CP)
"Business as usual just causes ongoing conflict," Atleo told The Canadian Press. "Expressions of good faith -- and implementation of those commitments (from January) -- are what is required."
Atleo says talks between senior government officials and First Nations from some parts of the country over how to fully implement historic treaty rights seem to be inching ahead. Atleo and many First Nations leaders argue that full recognition of the treaties will lead to improvements in conditions across the board -- in education, housing and the sharing of the bounty from Canada's natural resources.
"We've seen signals on the part of the government that it is prepared to do that," Atleo said.
But at the same time, the federal government continues to fight First Nations in court over child-welfare funding, continues to impose legislation without consulting those it will affect and resists widespread calls for a national inquiry into hundreds of missing or murdered aboriginal women, the national chief added.
Plus, the government has been withholding much of the documentation needed to understand the impact of residential schools.
At the same time, there is lingering discontent within many First Nations about major changes made to environmental oversight through federal legislation over the past year.
"There's always been this pattern that, 'well, let's just do one or two things now, and the rest, you know, we can deal with later,' " Atleo said.
"No. Transformative change is required because we are still in a big moment of reckoning."
As aboriginal youth become more educated and more connected through social media, they are increasingly skeptical of the establishment, whether it be the federal government or the complex structure of chiefs under the Indian Act, Atleo added.
"They will not be swayed by press releases or statements from governments that say what they're doing is working and that it is enough, because it isn't," Atleo said. "They are making it very clear by expressing themselves. And they will be heard."
Atleo and Harper, along with key members of their teams, held a highly contentious winter meeting on Jan. 11, just as the Idle No More protest movement gathered strength in communities across the country.
As the leaders met, large crowds of First Nations activists and environmentalists rallied loudly in the streets, demanding more accountability from both sides.
At the same time, Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence denounced the meeting since it did not include the governor general or a wide range of chiefs, and persisted with a liquids-only hunger protest. Some chiefs openly discussed blockades and economic disruption, forecasting more upheaval this summer.
A shaken Atleo left the meeting with a commitment from Harper to empower his top officials to negotiate fundamental aboriginal rights, focusing especially on education and resource revenue sharing.
And indeed, insiders on all sides say there is considerable movement.
The new aboriginal affairs minister, Bernard Valcourt, has travelled widely and made some announcements about new regional arrangements for education, speeding up the process to settle specific claims and working with First Nations to review the comprehensive claims process.
"While this progress is important and will have a positive impact on First Nations, we need to build on it and sustain the momentum that is being created. We will continue to work with First Nations to make concrete progress on our shared priorities," said Jason MacDonald, a spokesman for Valcourt.

Activists are already signalling they are not prepared to wait.
"To me, it's like they (the government and the Assembly of First Nations) are buying time to get through the summer," said Russ Diabo, an outspoken long-time First Nations activist from the network Defenders of the Land.
His group has joined forces with Idle No More organizers and other experienced groups to stage a "Sovereignty Summer" to protest resource projects and pipelines across the country, backed up by demonstrations in cities.

Bon midi,

Tel que discuté il y a quelques minutes, je suis analyste de renseignement criminel au QGN à Ottawa et suis chargé d'effectuer la vigie nationale sur les activités entourant les manifestations autochtones. Pour votre information, le nouveau Centre national de coordination du renseignement (CNCR) fournit ce service aux Services nationaux de police autochtones (SNPA), ayant pour objectif d'informer stratégiquement leurs gestionnaires supérieurs à tous les mercredis (1200). Ce requête vise donc simplement à accroître notre compréhension de la situation locale ci-dessous afin de briefer verbalement nos gestionnaires. Aucun document/rapport n'est requis et je vous invite à communiquer directement avec moi 613-843-4823.

Merci grandement pour votre assistance et passez une excellente semaine.
N'hésitez pas à communiquer avec moi pour toute question ou commentaire!

APTN National News

OTTAWA--

The tears of Elders drove a group of six Mi'kmaq from Listuguj to walk about 900 kilometres from their community in Quebec to Ottawa.

Adam Barnaby, 25, said Elders in his community often shed tears during ceremonies when they spoke about what the Harper government was doing to First Nations people and the land.

"I kept hearing elders cry about what the Harper government was doing to our people, the Mi'kmaq First Nations people, and why are they tearing up the land," said Barnaby.

Initially his friends laughed at the idea of walking from Listuguj to Ottawa but, after a sweat in Eel River Bar First Nation in New Brunswick, Barnaby decided the walk had to happen.

So, on May 1, a group of seven left Listuguj and six arrived in Ottawa early Tuesday at about 2:30 a.m. They called themselves the "Peace and Friendship Walkers" in reference to the Peace and Friendship Treaties signed between the Mi'kmaq and the Crown.

"It was a roller coaster of a ride. We received a lot of positive support. We did receive some negative remarks from people passing by," said Ryan Papineau, 26. "People came out to us in tears; right after someone gave us the middle finger. That is the way the Creator works in these polarities of positive and negative."

The group walked and ran in turns with a van following behind. The three women in the group slept in a trailer and the three men slept in tents. Every morning the group conducted ceremonies to push them on along the highway.

"Our ancestors, they walked with us and gave us the strength we needed to carry on and we sent them off in the evening," said Papineau.

The group sat through question period on Tuesday afternoon, but missed by 30 seconds a statement delivered in the House of Commons from their local NDP MP Philip Toone.

Toone said the walk was "just the latest example of the leadership the Mi'kmaq Nations have taken in the Gaspe and across Atlantic Canada."

Papineau said the "theatrics" of question period, which swirled around Prime Minister Stephen Harper's former chief of staff Nigel Wright's $90,000 gift to Senator Mike Duffy, left him longing for substance.

"I don't have a lot of faith invested in the current system of government," said Papineau. "First Nations people have to develop their own systems of government."

The Mi'kmaq of Listuguj have been at the forefront of the Idle No More movement and community members launched a rail blockade in January in support of the Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence during her hunger strike.

Barnaby said to expect Listuguj to again be on the front lines once Idle No More's Sovereignty Summer hits full swing in the coming months.

"We are not going to stop, we are going to keep blocking the roads and keep blocking the railroads," said Barnaby. "It is Idle No More and we are not idling."

Last week, a group of walkers from Manitoba arrived in Ottawa and in March a group of walkers from Quebec's northernmost Cree community were met by thousands of people on Parliament Hill at the end of their 1,600 kilometre walk.

NATIONAL ABORIGINAL DAY in CANADA

BACKGROUND

In June 1996, the Governor General of Canada declared June 21st to be "National Aboriginal Day", an annual event to recognize and celebrate the cultures and contributions of Aboriginal peoples. June 21st marks summer solstice, a time during which Aboriginal peoples have traditionally celebrated their culture and heritage. As per the Canadian Constitution, there are three recognized groups of Aboriginal peoples: First Nations, Inuit and Métis; each group having a distinct heritage, language, cultural practices and spiritual beliefs.[1]

National Aboriginal Day kicks off the 11 day "Celebrate Canada!" celebration which also includes Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day (June 24 in Québec), Canadian Multiculturalism Day (June 27), and finally Canada Day (July 01).

CURRENT STATUS

Information provided by the Protective Investigations Unit (PIU):

- "Sacred Journey for Future Generations": A group of Stanley Mission residents (near La Ronge, Saskatchewan) began their walk on March 19, 2013. The group of walkers, consisting of 7-8 participants, is expected to arrive in Ottawa by June 21st. The walk is in support of the Idle No More movement, declaring opposition to the Conservative government's Bill C-45.

- "Journey for Earth": A group of five (5) participants originally with "Sacred Journey for Future Generations" have diverged to form the group "Journey for Earth" in an effort to increase their ability to spread awareness of the devastating impact the multiple government-imposed Bills will have on the earth, as well as the controversial international deal known as FIPPA (Foreign Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement), part of the expanding global network of bilateral investment treaties.[2] The five (5) walkers are expected to arrive in Ottawa for the June 21st solstice festivities.

- "Idle No More Ontario": Calling on persons to gather on PH to show their solidarity with First Nations Peoples this solstice. Travelers from all four directions will converge in Ottawa with their messages of protection for Mother Earth. 199 participants have confirmed their attendance.

PERMIT REQUESTS FOR PARLIAMENT HILL (PH)

- "Millions First Peoples March": As part of the Idle No More Movement, a permit for the use of PH has been submitted, 2000 participants are anticipated. The event organizer is known to the Demo Unit and has organized events in support of Idle No More in the past. All events have been peaceful. The permit indicates that the event is to commence at 1200hrs ending at 1800hrs.

  If history dictates, it is anticipated that the number of attendants will be higher than indicated. Due to the number of participants, traffic interruptions should be expected.

Note: In addition to the "Sacred Journey for Future Generations" group and the "Journey for Earth" group, the following groups are expected to gather on Victoria Island to perform ceremonies followed by a march to PH:

  - Paddling for Our Waters, from Kitigan Zibi Reserve, Maniwaki Quebec.
  - Million First Peoples March
  - Calling All Jingle Dress Dancers
  - Journey to the Tar Sands

The number of participants among each group is not available at this time. The PIU and RCMP Aboriginal & Ethnic Liaison Officer will continue to monitor, and will provide updates as the information becomes available.

- "First Nations Child and Family Caring Society of Canada": A permit has been granted for the 2nd annual "Our dreams matter too" walk from Victoria Island to Parliament Hill on Tuesday, June 11th in an effort to raise awareness for equity of First Nations Children in Canada. June 11th is the anniversary of the Prime Minister's apology for the treatment of children in residential schools. However, First Nations children continue to experience inequalities in education, health, child welfare and other government services compared to all other children. The organizer estimates 500 - 1000 participants, the majority of which will be children and youth. In 2012 there were approximately 700 participants, no incidents were reported. It is unknown at this time if this group also plans to attend PH for National Aboriginal Day.

OTHER PLANNED EVENTS IN OTTAWA

- Summer Solstice Aboriginal Arts Festival: Friday, June 21st – Sunday, June 23rd at Vincent Massey Park. The annual International Competition Powwow attracts hundreds of singers and dancers from across North America for a vibrant and lively display of our living culture. The festival provides families a unique opportunity to experience and celebrate the diverse Aboriginal cultures of the NCR.

- A second event is scheduled for PH on June 21st. A permit has been granted to a group representing the "Medicinal Cannabis Patient's Alliance of Canada Inc." to gather prior to a press conference being held in the Charles Lynch Room at 0930hrs. PROS file 2013-516747.

ASSESSMENT

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS

- As in previous years, construction work and installations on Parliament Hill for the Canada Day celebration will commence Wednesday, June 12th. Trailers are expected to be delivered on the 12th & 13th of June and will be placed on Upper Drive and on the West lawn. Construction of the the stage will begin Friday, June 14th.[3]

- Since the declaration of National Aboriginal Day in 1996, there have been no reported incidents of violence or conflict in the NCR on June 21st.

CONCLUSION

It is requested that any pertinent information relevant to National Aboriginal Day not captured in this report be communicated to Nicole NIKITA (via GroupWise) of the National Division Criminal Intelligence Sector.

National Aboriginal Day is intended to be a peaceful day to showcase Aboriginal culture and achievements. However, the potential for isolated incidents still exists, which may require a modification in security. The PIU and RCMP Aboriginal & Ethnic Liaison Officer will continue to monitor information as it becomes available.

A subsequent Situational Report will be disseminated on Friday, June 14th.

- "Paddling for our Waters": Members of the Kitigan Zibi Anishinabeg Reserve have confirmed that 18 canoes (16 x 2-person canoes and 2 x 10-person canoes) carrying a total of 52 people are expected to take part in the canoe excursion using their traditional travel route from Wakefield to Lac Leamy and then on to Victoria Island in an effort to raise awareness of the need to protect the water and eco systems along the Ottawa River watershed. A group of five (5) canoeists will be dropped off at the Rideau locks and will walk to PH, while the core group of canoeists will proceed to Victoria Island where they will be greeted by a welcoming committee.

NOTE: The event organizer has confirmed that canoeists will be leaving their canoes at Victoria Island and will then join the rest of the group on the march to PH.[1] The number of canoes noted above is confirmed by the Algonquin organizer for the Kitigan Zibi Reserve. The organizer does not know how many other canoes/canoeists may join along the way.
Furthermore, the RCMP Aboriginal & Ethnic Liaison Officer confirms that the RCMP Marine Unit will be present in the immediate vicinity as the volume of canoeists is expected to be higher on the river from 13:00 – 17:00hrs.

- "Journey for Earth": The five (5) walkers
  . The group recently had another five (5) walkers join the walk,
  As of June 17th, the ten (10) walkers were expected to overnight in Madoc. On June 19th the group is scheduled to overnight in Carleton Place, they will then continue along County Road 29 to Arnprior. The final leg will be along old highway 17 to Ottawa on June 21st. The group's arrival in Ottawa for the June 21st festivities is not expected to have any significant impact on the number of persons attending PH.

NOTE: The group is being escorted by 2 individuals in a grey 2004 Chevrolet Impala.

"Keepers of the Land" started in BC defending Aboriginal Rights concerning mining & logging issues. The movement has since grown to include water and land issues and has spread across Canada. Traditionally, everyone is, should be, or could be considered a "Keeper of the Land" if they respect Mother Earth and the environment.

[1] Information obtained by PIU from Demo Unit

- "Journey for the Tar Sands": Two brothers are walking from Halifax, NS to Fort McMurray, AB. The purpose of their walk is to interact with people of various cultures in an effort to raise awareness of the reality First Nations people are faced with due to extraction of Natural Resources. The brothers are expected to stop in Ottawa on June 21st.

ASSESSMENT

CONCLUSION

It is requested that any pertinent information relevant to National Aboriginal Day not captured in this report be communicated to Nicole NIKITA (via GroupWise) of the National Division Criminal Intelligence Sector.

National Aboriginal Day is intended to be a peaceful day to showcase Aboriginal culture and achievements. However, the potential for isolated incidents still exists, which may require a modification in security. The PIU will continue to monitor information as it becomes available and Cpl. Thank you for publishing my article as is. I realize that the length of the article was an issue but required to deal with extensive documentation of the information.

It is 8 p.m. on the evening of Sunday June 23 here in Winnipeg. Tomorrow, at 2 p.m., I will be in court facing the Attorney General of Canada, the Attorney General of Manitoba and the Canadian National Railway who want the court to put a permanent injunction on our people from "trespassing" on CN railway lines.
In January 2013, we blocked a main railway line in Manitoba. In minus 34 degree Celsius for six hours. On January 15, a day before the blockade, CN got a temporary injunction while no one was there from us to oppose the injunction and we were served that injunction about two hours before we left the railway blockade. CN wants not only a permanent injunction, they want costs, plus damages which will be millions of dollars. They want to intimidate our people. Once they get the court injunction, we will move to begin boycotts of British Columbia lumber sold in the United States. We have support amongst people in the United States.
Everything we have done is peaceful and we sent the government advance notice of the blockade. January 16, 2013 was a commitment by the Chiefs to put pressure on Canada with action. AIM Winnipeg blocked a railway line. When railway lines are blocked by covert activity, the situation will become far worse. For now, there is peace in Canada, it will not last.

Publishing the article gives many people around the world the ability to anticipate what will happen in Canada. Americans have ignored the issues in Canada for a long time. In 1989, we organized THE RUN FOR HUMAN RIGHTS, and we ran 1,000 miles from Winnipeg to Chicago to try to wake up Americans to the human rights issues in Canada. More recently, as Chiefs, we were in Washington 12 days before the first Inauguration of President Obama. We were there to ask the incoming Obama administration to do something about the environmental devastation that the sale of oil to the United States was doing to northern Alberta in the Tarsands.

Nothing has happened from the American Government. They have ignored all our efforts to get them to do something about human rights violations in Canada. The American government will condemn Iran for voicing concerns about human rights violations in Canada but the American government itself will continue to ignore those issues.

On Thursday June 27, AIM Winnipeg will hold a Press Conference and a meeting to organize our own investigation process on five murdered and missing indigenous women whom the City of Winnipeg Police and RCMP have not solved. Shaun Lamb who is charged with three murders of indigenous women in Winnipeg has stated that he has information on five other women who were killed. One of our AIM leaders has been speaking to Lamb. Winnipeg Police Officer Sutherland laughed at Lamb in an interview, refusing to listen to what Lamb is saying. Totally unprofessional, all leads and information must be investigated not ignored. Robert Picton would have been caught years earlier if Vancouver police had been more diligent. Picton would not have killed 49 women if police had done what they were supposed to. They ignored leads just like they are doing here in Winnipeg.

Thank you for publishing the article, it is my hope that other countries will question Canada and its treatment of indigenous people. I will follow up with information on the Dakota people who are facing court in September for selling cigarettes. Another group, the Cree in northern Manitoba is facing court action by HudBay who is mining in their territory without permission from the indigenous people. The Cree face a $400 million lawsuit by HudBay for the blockade done by the Cree. Meanwhile, the mining of sixty different metals and minerals continues every day in Canada, all the while, Canada refuses to pay anything to the indigenous people for those natural resources.

Subject: Update on NADP & Daily Briefing (June 25)

Good morning,

For your information only, I wanted to do a quick update on our monitoring of National Aboriginal Demonstrations and Protests with current available intelligence. More updated details will be disseminated later today, as we decided to produce today a daily briefing for senior managers.

2- "Cross-Canada actions on June 25 in support of Tar Sands blockade in Ontario"

"Protest actions are planned outside Enbridge offices and other key locations in nearly a dozen cities across Canada in support of activists who took over a pumping station north of Hamilton, Ontario early Thursday morning. This action, dubbed Swamp Line 9, aims to prevent construction on Line 9 and block the transport of Tar Sands through Ontario and Quebec. This action is also part of the Idle No More campaign Sovereignty Summer." At this time, the following locations has been identified (details and number of participants to be confirmed): Aamjiwnaang First Nations (Sarnia), Edmonton, Guelph, Hamilton, London, Peterborough, St. Catharines, Toronto, Vancouver.

3- Sovereignty Summer Campaign Calling for National Solidarity Actions and Support for Elsipogtog First Nation Front Line Activists - IDLE NO MORE & Defenders of the Land put out National Call to Action!

"This is an official notice and "Call Out" to all Idle No More & Defenders of the Land – Sovereignty Summer - activists, allies and supporters, and partnership organizations to act in aid and in the defence of grassroots Elsipogtog First Nation, families, community members, and supporters near Moncton, New Brunswick. In the last few weeks, Elsipogtog First Nation community members and allies have taken peaceful action to prevent seismic testing vehicles and workers from testing for shale gas deposits for purposes of resource exploitation on Indigenous territories."

APTN National News
OTTAWA--

The tears of Elders drove a group of six Mi'kmaq from Listuguj to walk about 900 kilometres from their community in Quebec to Ottawa.
Adam Barnaby, 25, said Elders in his community often shed tears during ceremonies when they spoke about what the Harper government was doing to First Nations people and the land.
"I kept hearing elders cry about what the Harper government was doing to our people, the Mi'kmaq First Nations people, and why are they tearing up the land," said Barnaby.
Initially his friends laughed at the idea of walking from Listuguj to Ottawa but, after a sweat in Eel River Bar First Nation in New Brunswick, Barnaby decided the walk had to happen.
So, on May 1, a group of seven left Listuguj and six arrived in Ottawa early Tuesday at about 2:30 a.m. They called themselves the "Peace and Friendship Walkers" in reference to the Peace and Friendship Treaties signed between the Mi'kmaq and the Crown.
"It was a roller coaster of a ride. We received a lot of positive support. We did receive some negative remarks from people passing by," said Ryan Papineau, 26. "People came out to us in tears; right after someone gave us the middle finger. That is the way the Creator works in these polarities of positive and negative."
The group walked and ran in turns with a van following behind. The three women in the group slept in a trailer and the three men slept in tents. Every morning the group conducted ceremonies to push them on along the highway.
"Our ancestors, they walked with us and gave us the strength we needed to carry on and we sent them off in the evening," said Papineau.
The group sat through question period on Tuesday afternoon, but missed by 30 seconds a statement delivered in the House of Commons from their local NDP MP Philip Toone.
Toone said the walk was "just the latest example of the leadership the Mi'kmaq Nations have taken in the Gaspe and across Atlantic Canada."
Papineau said the "theatrics" of question period, which swirled around Prime Minister Stephen Harper's former chief of staff Nigel Wright's $90,000 gift to Senator Mike Duffy, left him longing for substance.
"I don't have a lot of faith invested in the current system of government," said Papineau. "First Nations people have to develop their own systems of government."
The Mi'kmaq of Listuguj have been at the forefront of the Idle No More movement and community members launched a rail blockade in January in support of the Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence during her hunger strike.
Barnaby said to expect Listuguj to again be on the front lines once Idle No More's Sovereignty Summer hits full swing in the coming months.

"We are not going to stop, we are going to keep blocking the roads and keep blocking the railroads," said Barnaby. "It is Idle No More and we are not idling."

Last week, a group of walkers from Manitoba arrived in Ottawa and in March a group of walkers from Quebec's northernmost Cree community were met by thousands of people on Parliament Hill at the end of their 1,600 kilometre walk.

BOC ACTIONS | ACTIONS DU COF

The BOC is taking the following steps in preparation of the planned protests:

- Border Alerts have been prepared in advance should an alert need to be issued at a moment's notice in response to a port closure and/or disruption
- Act as the point of communication for Regional Operations Centres (ROCs)
- Issue appropriate significant event notifications as information is received from various locations

Back/Retour

COMMUNICATIONS | COMMUNICATIONS

- Support the Border Alert process for advising the public of any closures and/or significant disruptions
- Address service disruptions at points of entry as would happen with any other disruption.
- Activities will focus on informing the public that access to our POEs is limited and offering advice on alternate ports of entry.
- Respond to questions directly relating to the status of our operations.
- Provide high-level responses to admissibility questions that may arise if Idle No More protestors who are inadmissible to Canada attempt to enter the country from the United States.
- Any other questions will be referred to the appropriate Government of Canada department of law enforcement agency for response.
- Conduct media monitoring.

SYNOPSIS | SYNOPSIS

Idle No More is an ongoing protest movement originating among the First Nations and other Indigenous Peoples in Canada. It has quickly grown and garnered worldwide support from other Indigenous Peoples as well as sympathetic non-Indigenous Canadians and Americans. It has consisted of a number of political actions worldwide, inspired in part by the hunger strike of Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence and further coordinated via social media. The movement claims that the Canadian government's omnibus bill C-45 infringes on a number of historical treaty rights, however, according to open sources, Chief Theresa Spence is not supporting these protests.

Large protests are expected to take place on January 5, 2013, in various regions, with the largest protest expected to occur at the Cornwall Port of Entry in Ontario. Other smaller protests may have a limited impact on CBSA operations at ports of entry in the Southern Ontario Region (Sarnia, Fort Erie and Niagara Falls); Northern Ontario Region (Fort Francis and Sault Ste. Marie); Pacific Region (Douglas, Osoyoos, Kingsgate and Victoria) and the Prairie Region (Boissevain and Carway).

The movement has gained support from other similar mass movements, including Occupy Canada and Council for Canadians as well as Greenpeace.

Although protests conducted under the Idle No More banner remain peaceful, there is the potential for violence the more they impact the public.

The Intelligence Operations and Analysis Division (IOAD) and Regional Enforcement and Intelligence Divisions (E&I) are continuing to liaise with partner agencies, including the Ontario Provincial Police (OPP), the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), US Customs and Border Protection (US CBP), US Border Patrol, the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service (CSIS), the Integrated Terrorism Assessment Centre (ITAC), Transport Canada (TC) and the Sûreté du Québec to monitor and assess threats in relation to planned blockades.

« Idle No More » est un mouvement de protestation en cours d'origine entre les Premières Nations et d'autres peuples autochtones du Canada. Il s'est rapidement développé et il a recueilli un soutien dans le monde entier à partir des peuples autochtones ainsi que les Canadiens et Américains non autochtones, sympathique au mouvement. Il a consisté en une série d'actions politique dans le monde entier, inspirée en partie par la grève de la faim de la chef Thérèse Spence d` Attawapiskat et plus coordonnée via les medias sociaux. Le mouvement affirme que le projet de loi omnibus du gouvernement canadien C-45 viole un certain nombre de droits issus des traités historiques. Cependant, selon des sources ouvertes, la chef Theresa Spence ne soutient pas ces protestations.

De grandes manifestations devraient avoir lieu le 5 janvier 2013, dans différentes régions et la plus grande manifestation devrait avoir lieu au port d'entrée de Cornwall en Ontario. D'autres manifestations plus petites peuvent avoir un impact limité sur les opérations de l`ASFC aux points d'entrée dans la Région Sud de l`Ontario (Sarnia, Fort Erie et Niagara Falls); Nord de l`Ontario (Fort Francis et Sault Ste Marie); Région du Pacifique (Douglas. Osoyoos, Kingsgate et Victoria) et la région des Prairies (Boissevain et Carway).

Le mouvement a gagné l'appui de d'autres mouvements de masse similaires, y compris « Occupy Canada » et le Conseil des Canadiens, ainsi que Greenpeace.

Bien que les protestions menée sous la bannière d'inactivité « Idle No More » ont restées pacifiques, il y a un potentiel de violence qui ont plus un impact sur le public.

Les opérations de renseignement et de l'analyse (IOAD) et application régionale et les divisions du renseignement (E&I) continuent d'assurer la liaison avec les organismes partenaires, y compris la Police provinciale de l`Ontario (PPO), la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), US Customs and Border Protection (US CBP), la US Border Patrol, le service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS), le Centre d'évaluation intégrée terrorisme (ACTI), Transport Canada (TC) et la Sureté du Québec pour surveiller été évaluer les menaces pas rapport aux blocages prévus.

Protest – Hunger Strikes – Two First Nation Members – Demand for Treaty Meeting with Crown
On Tuesday, December 11, 2012, media reported that Chief Theresa Spence of the Attawapiskat First Nation (ON) had begun a hunger strike protest. Chief Spence is demanding a meeting between the Prime Minister, the Crown, and First Nations leaders to discuss "treaty issues for First Nations across the country".

On Friday, December 14, 2012, media reported that Emil Bell, a 72 year old elder of the Canoe Lake Cree First Nation (SK) began a hunger strike on Wednesday, December 12, 2012, in solidarity with Chief Spence.

As of Friday, January 4, 2013, Chief Spence's and Mr. Bell's hunger strikes continue.

Updates will be provided as new information becomes available.

Protests in Opposition to Bill C-45 Situation Report
Since Sunday, December 9, 2012, approximately 108 protests have occurred as part of an announced "National Day of Action" which was promoted through traditional and social media.

These events were also held as a part of a program of activism called "Idle No More." Idle No More is partly a response to Bill C-45, the omnibus budget bill which includes changes to the Indian Act, the Fisheries Act and the Navigable Waters Protection Act and partly a call for changes to the broader relationship between Canada and First Nations.

Although all protests which have already occurred were peaceful, some affected the transportation sector. To date, approximately 55 protests have resulted in interruptions to rail services and delays on various highways, streets and bridges.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

It has been reported that a number of solidarity protests are taking place in the United States. EIMD will not be monitoring these protests.

During all full blockades of highways, law enforcement have been able to arrange for detours for traffic and to notify the public of planned blockades.

Canadian Border Services Agency (CBSA) advises that all affected border crossings are in the process of preparing operational plans. Border Alerts have been prepared by the Border Operations Centre in advance in the event that alerts need to be issued for a port closure.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper and Aboriginal Affairs Minister John Duncan say they will meet a delegation of First Nations leaders on January 11, 2013.

Except where otherwise stated, all information in this report was provided by AANDC Regional Offices, Public Safety Canada and media reports.

Currently there are no blockades occurring of any bridges, highways or rail lines.

Planned Protests
There are approximately 15 protests planned for Saturday, January 5, 2013. It is unknown at this time how many protestors will be participating in these planned protests. It is expected that 11 of these will result in delays at highways and international bridge crossings.

CN obtained an Injunction through the Moncton Court of Queens Bench late this afternoon. The Injunction was served by a third party about an hour ago. The protesters removed the barricade and left the area. There is no clear indication of their intentions for tomorrow.

RCMP members on site were not required to intervene; the protest was peaceful for its duration.

Initially, their plans were to protest during the day onlyj over a period of four days. So, they could be following this plan.

We will have our members periodically check this location to determine if the protesters return. CN police are keeping a presence on site.

Members from Richibucto District will be contacting the protest leader from Elsipogtog First Nation to find out their plans for tomorrow.

Have a good evening.

PROS 2012 1642112
ABORIGINAL PROTEST - RAILWAY BLOCKADE

ISSUE:

• To inform of a protest movement by Elsipogtog First Nations in District 5, which is aimed at blocking the CN Railway for seven days.

BACKGROUND:

• Earlier today, a group of protesters set up to block a portion of the CN Railway parallel to Route 126 in Adamsville, 50 kilometres north of Moncton.

• This is a continuation of the Idle No More Protest in Rexton on December 21st to December 24th where Aboriginal protesters blocked Route11 for 4 days.

CURRENT STATUS:

- Protesters, are communicating openly with the RCMP and plan to protest peacefully 24 hours a day, each day.

- Additional resources are being deployed to assist with highway and railway safety concerns and general security. This resource will be maintained until the situation is resolved..

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS:

STRATEGIC COMMUNICATIONS:

- Our divisional media unit has developed a strategy to respond to media and public enquiries both pro-actively and re-actively

Elsipogtog man charged in spat with DFO agents

Last Updated: Wednesday, November 11, 2009 | 11:29 AM AT

CBC News

An Elsipogtog First Nation man is facing eight charges after a dispute with Department of Fisheries and Oceans officers in September.

John Levi was charged with seven counts of assaulting a police officer and one count of dangerous operation of a vessel on Tuesday at the provincial court in Richibucto, N.B.

After Levi was charged, he vowed that he would bring counter-charges against the DFO officers who he said stopped him and his son from exercising their traditional fishing rights.

Levi said he has support from the community of Elsipogtog, formerly known as Big Cove.

"The chief and council support me in regards of fighting for our food-fishing rights here in Elsipogtog," Levi said.

"The chief and council don't also don't approve with the DFO hitting my son with a paddle."

The incident happened around 2 a.m. on Sept. 24 when RCMP based on the reserve responded to a call on the Richibucto River.

DFO officers said they were assaulted with bear spray while trying to enforce laws against illegal fishing.

Levi says he was exercising his food fishery rights by setting salmon nets. He also says the DFO officers assaulted his son Jonathan, 21, breaking a paddle against his back.

The case was set over to Dec. 8 for Levi to enter a plea.

RCMP
ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Executive Summary

•"Idle No More" organization publicly stated their intent to protest at the Victoria COHO ferry terminal on January 5th, 2013.

•Protest activity is assessed to include; drumming, singing, dancing and social awareness.

•The nature and demeanor of the planned protest in Victoria is assessed to be peaceful and lawful.

•The Idle No More group remains independent of aboriginal leadership in Ottawa.

THREAT of a Port of Victoria "shutdown" is NEGLIGIBLE

RCMP ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Background 'Idle No More' movement.

1. The "Idle No More" movement is a leaderless organization using web technologies and social media to coordinate civil resistance, which is political action that relies on the use of non-violent methods by civil groups to challenge a particular power, force, policy or regime. "Idle No More" is part of a larger indigenous movement that is purposefully distanced from political and corporate influence. There is no elected leader, no paid executive director, and no hierarchy that determines what any person or First Nation can and can not do. The "Idle No More" movement protests are opposing the omnibus Bill C-45 introduced by the Conservative Government.

2. There are indications that individuals intend to participate in a protest directed at Victoria BC, COHO ferry facility, a key critical infrastructure on January 05, 2013. The nature of this participation is assessed to be peaceful and lawful:

3. Other Indigenous movements in Canada, in support of "Idle no More", have called for all border crossings in Canada to be shut down on January 5th, 2013. We asses this as Highly Unlikely to occur.

RCMP ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Assessment

5. RCMP MSOC(W) assesses that "Idle No More" supporters in Victoria will likely participate in the protest at the Victoria COHO ferry terminal. The nature of this participation is assessed to be peaceful and lawful.

7. possibility of an individual actor participating in violence cannot be excluded. It is assessed that direct action such as vandalism or violence against critical infrastructure at the port in Victoria is Highly Unlikely.

8. RCMP MSOC(W) assesses that the B.C Ferry systems will not be affected or targeted on January 5, 2013.

THREAT of a Port of Victoria shutdown is NEGLIGIBLE

Negligible: A vessel / individual/ organization has been identified that could have hostile intention, but are highly unlikely to have the capability to carry out the defined threat. It is unlikely that this threat will manifest itself.

The following is new information received, in addition to what was disseminated at 1500 EST on January 4, 2012.

Potential border service disruptions may occur on January 5, 2013, at the following ports of entry:

Region
Port of Entry/Location

Date/Time[1] (#_ftn1)
Weather Forecast
Activity Type

Northern Ontario Region

Akwesasne/Cornwall
of Demonstrators: 800 – 1,100 (based on social media responses, actual numbers may be lower due to weather and requirement to carry identity documents)

2013-01-05 11:00 EST

Weather: Sunny, -7° to -6°C, wind-chill of -15°C predicted
At 0847 EST, Organizers will let the crowd decided at the staging location today if they will do both bridges or not.

Protest activity commencing in Roosevelt, New York, proceeding by foot across Cornwall Island through CBSA Port of Entry to the City of Cornwall traffic circle. The demonstrators will then return to Cornwall Island. According to Facebook, 1,100 people have indicated they will participate and organizers are expecting a large number of participants. However, inclement weather and the requirement of demonstrators to be processed by CBSA may reduce the number of participants. Indications that criminally inadmissible persons may be part of the demonstration entering Canada. Indications of possible participation by members of the Mohawk Warrior Society, who have been asked not to wear camouflage so as not to attract law enforcement attention. The bridge will be closed to vehicle traffic during the protest (4-6 hours).

Fort Frances/International Falls
of Demonstrators: 400 (based on social media responses, including US demonstrators; Canadian contingent travelling expected to be significantly smaller)
2013-01-05 13:00 EST
Weather: Sunny/cloudy, -15° to
-6°C
At 0830 EST, No new information was reported.

Solidarity Protest on U.S. side of the Ft. Frances / International Falls border crossing. Expecting Canadian residents to cross into the US to attend the protest and return in the evening. Possible protest to be staged on Canadian side near the Fort Frances Port of Entry. Reports now indicating that demonstrators will attempt to close the bridge for an unknown period of time.

Sault Ste. Marie
of Demonstrators: unknown

At 0830 EST, No new information was reported.

Plans for a small demonstration have been cancelled; however a small protest may be staged at the Port of Entry, similar to what has been staged there before as part of Idle No More.

Southern Ontario Region

Fort Erie Peace Bridge
of Demonstrators: 600 (based on social media responses, includes the US contingent; Canadian participation will likely be significantly less)
2013-01-05 11:00 EST
Weather: Cloudy, -1° to 1°C
At 0830 EST, No new information was reported.

Protest with two contingents – demonstrators gathering on the Buffalo, NY side and a demonstration in Fort Erie. Bridge operator allowing protestors to march across the bridge occupying one lane of traffic.

Niagara Falls
of Demonstrators: 250 (based on social media responses)

The BOC is taking the following steps in preparation of the planned protests:Border Alerts have been prepared in advance should an alert need to be issued at a moment's notice in response to a port closure and/or disruptionAct as the point of communication for Regional Operations Centres (ROCs)Issue appropriate significant event notifications as information is received from various locations

Back/Retour (#TableOfContents)

- Support the Border Alert process for advising the public of any closures and/or significant disruptions
- Address service disruptions at points of entry as would happen with any other disruption.
- Activities will focus on informing the public that access to our POEs is limited and offering advice on alternate ports of entry.
- Respond to questions directly relating to the status of our operations.
- Provide high-level responses to admissibility questions that may arise if Idle No More protestors who are inadmissible to Canada attempt to enter the country from the United States.
- Any other questions will be referred to the appropriate Government of Canada department of law enforcement agency for response.
- Conduct media monitoring.

Back/Retour (#TableOfContents)

Idle No More is an ongoing protest movement originating among the First Nations and other Indigenous Peoples in Canada. It has quickly grown and garnered worldwide support from other Indigenous Peoples as well as sympathetic non-Indigenous Canadians and Americans. It has consisted of a number of political actions worldwide, inspired in part by the hunger strike of Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence and further coordinated via social media. The movement claims that the Canadian government's omnibus bill C-45 infringes on a number of historical treaty rights, however, according to open sources, Chief Theresa Spence is not supporting these protests.

Large protests are expected to take place on January 5, 2013, in various regions, with the largest protest expected to occur at the Cornwall Port of Entry in Ontario. Other smaller protests may have a limited impact on CBSA operations at ports of entry in the Southern Ontario Region (Sarnia, Fort Erie and Niagara Falls); Northern Ontario Region (Fort Francis and Sault Ste. Marie); Pacific Region (Douglas, Osoyoos, Kingsgate and Victoria) and the Prairie Region (Boissevain and Carway).

The movement has gained support from other similar mass movements, including Occupy Canada and Council for Canadians as well as Greenpeace.

Although protests conducted under the Idle No More banner remain peaceful, there is the potential for violence the more they impact the public.

The Intelligence Operations and Analysis Division (IOAD) and Regional Enforcement and Intelligence Divisions (E&I) are continuing to liaise with partner agencies, including the Ontario Provincial Police (OPP), the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), US Customs and Border Protection (US CBP), US Border Patrol, the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service (CSIS), the Integrated Terrorism Assessment Centre (ITAC), Transport Canada (TC) and the Sûreté du Québec to monitor and assess threats in relation to planned blockades.

« Idle No More » est un mouvement de protestation en cours d'origine entre les Premières Nations et d'autres peuples autochtones du Canada. Il s'est rapidement développé et il a recueilli un soutien dans le monde entier à partir des peuples autochtones ainsi que les Canadiens et Américains non autochtones, sympathique au mouvement. Il a consisté en une série d'actions politique dans le monde entier, inspirée en partie par la grève de la faim de la chef Thérèse Spence d` Attawapiskat et plus coordonnée via les medias sociaux. Le mouvement affirme que le projet de loi omnibus du gouvernement canadien C-45 viole un certain nombre de droits issus des traités historiques. Cependant, selon des sources ouvertes, la chef Theresa Spence ne soutient pas ces protestations.
De grandes manifestations devraient avoir lieu le 5 janvier 2013, dans différentes régions et la plus grande manifestation devrait avoir lieu au port d'entrée de Cornwall en Ontario. D'autres manifestations plus petites peuvent avoir un impact limité sur les opérations de l`ASFC aux points d'entrée dans la Région Sud de l`Ontario (Sarnia, Fort Erie et Niagara Falls); Nord de l`Ontario (Fort Francis et Sault Ste Marie); Région du Pacifique (Douglas. Osoyoos, Kingsgate et Victoria) et la région des Prairies (Boissevain et Carway).
Le mouvement a gagné l'appui de d'autres mouvements de masse similaires, y compris « Occupy Canada » et le Conseil des Canadiens, ainsi que Greenpeace.

Bien que les protestions menée sous la bannière d'inactivité « Idle No More » ont restées pacifiques, il y a un potentiel de violence qui ont plus un impact sur le public.
Les opérations de renseignement et de l'analyse (IOAD) et application régionale et les divisions du renseignement (E&I) continuent d'assurer la liaison avec les organismes partenaires, y compris la Police provinciale de l`Ontario (PPO), la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), US Customs and Border Protection (US CBP), la US Border Patrol, le service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS), le Centre d'évaluation intégrée terrorisme (ACTI), Transport Canada (TC) et la Sureté du Québec pour surveiller été évaluer les menaces pas rapport aux blocages prévus.

Protest – Hunger Strikes – Two First Nation Members – Demand for Treaty Meeting with Crown

On Tuesday, December 11, 2012, media reported that Chief Theresa Spence of the Attawapiskat First Nation (ON) had begun a hunger strike protest. Chief Spence is demanding a meeting between the Prime Minister, the Crown, and First Nations leaders to discuss "treaty issues for First Nations across the country".

On Friday, December 14, 2012, media reported that Emil Bell, a 72 year old elder of the Canoe Lake Cree First Nation (SK) began a hunger strike on Wednesday, December 12, 2012, in solidarity with Chief Spence.

As of Friday, January 4, 2013, Chief Spence's and Mr. Bell's hunger strikes continue.

Updates will be provided as new information becomes available.

Protests in Opposition to Bill C-45 Situation Report

Since Sunday, December 9, 2012, approximately 108 protests have occurred as part of an announced "National Day of Action" which was promoted through traditional and social media.

These events were also held as a part of a program of activism called "Idle No More." Idle No More is partly a response to Bill C-45, the omnibus budget bill which includes changes to the Indian Act, the Fisheries Act and the Navigable Waters Protection Act and partly a call for changes to the broader relationship between Canada and First Nations.

Although all protests which have already occurred were peaceful, some affected the transportation sector. To date, approximately 55 protests have resulted in interruptions to rail services and delays on various highways, streets and bridges.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

It has been reported that a number of solidarity protests are taking place in the United States. EIMD will not be monitoring these protests.

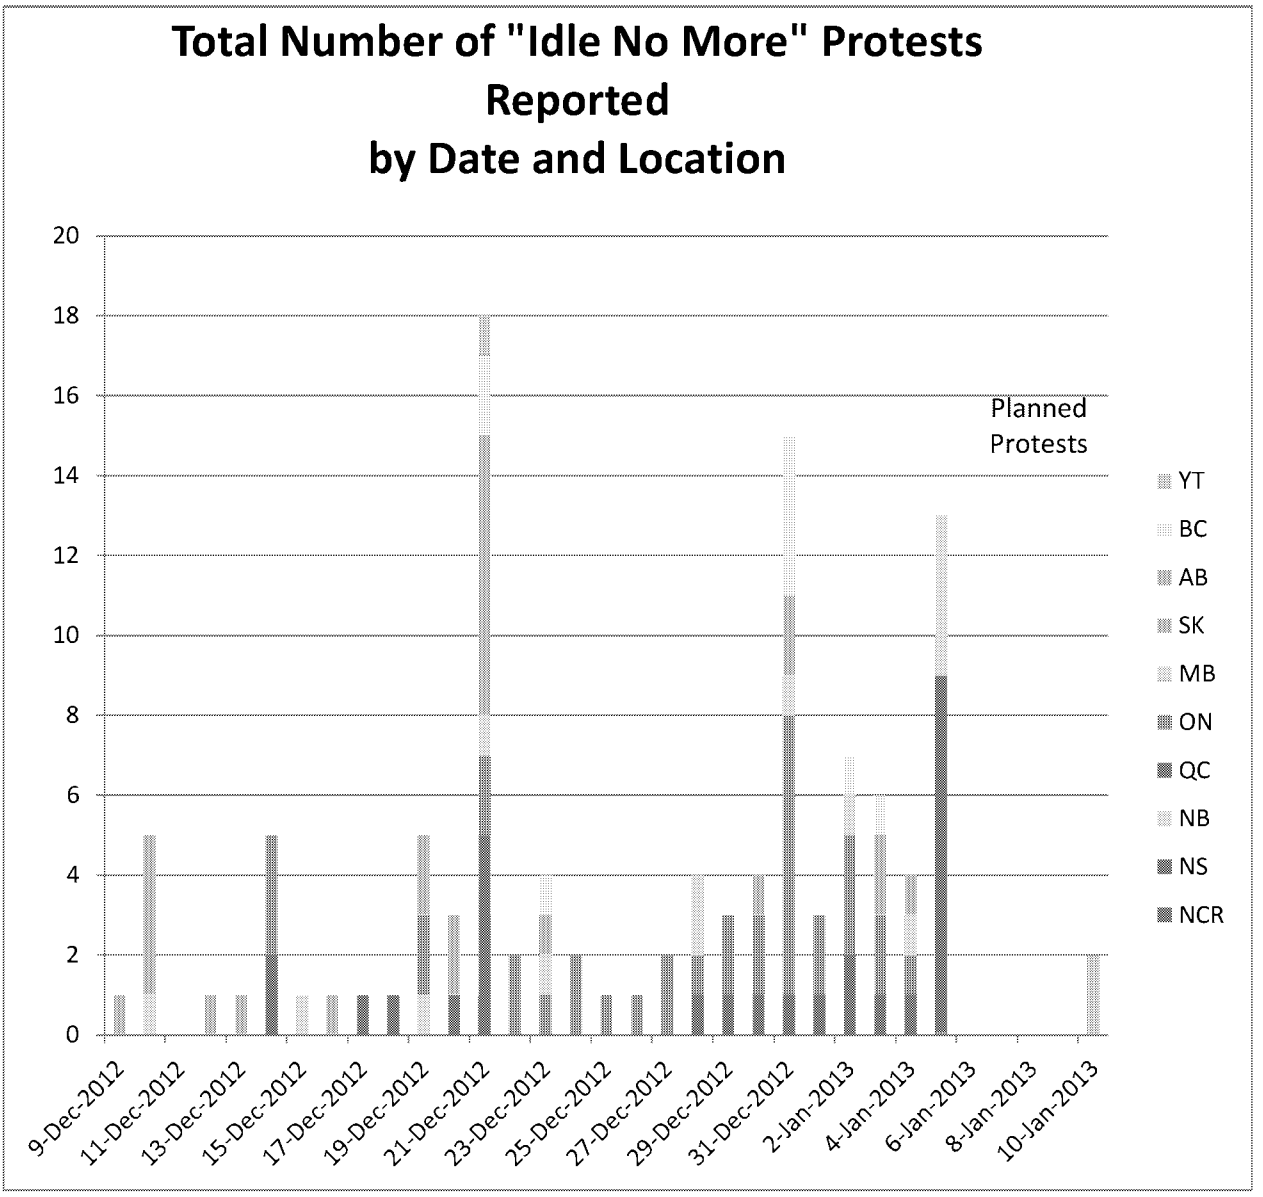
During all full blockades of highways, law enforcement have been able to arrange for detours for traffic and to notify the public of planned blockades.

Canadian Border Services Agency (CBSA) advises that all affected border crossings are in the process of preparing operational plans. Border Alerts have been prepared by the Border Operations Centre in advance in the event that alerts need to be issued for a port closure.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper and Aboriginal Affairs Minister John Duncan say they will meet a delegation of First Nations leaders on January 11, 2013.

Except where otherwise stated, all information in this report was provided by AANDC Regional Offices, Public Safety Canada and media reports.

Currently there are no blockades occurring of any bridges, highways or rail lines.



Planned Protests

There are approximately 15 protests planned for Saturday, January 5, 2013. It is unknown at this time how many protestors will be participating in these planned protests. It is expected that 11 of these will result in delays at highways and international bridge crossings.

Planned Protests for January 5, 2013

Good morning,

I found an article online from the Times and Transcript (attached) quoting John Levi saying that they intend on blocking the railway for 4 days, 24 hours per day. They indicate they will be allowing Via Rail passenger trains to pass and will only be stopping CN cargo trains, putting his truck across the tracks if he had to. He indicates that if the cargo train tries to force its way through, they will block the Via one as well.

Situation Report

Incident Number: ST122-12H

Incident: First Nations Protests

Date: Information valid as of 04 Jan 2013, 16:30 (HNE)

Description of current incident: A number of First Nations (FN) Protests are occurring as a result of a grassroots campaign called "Idle No More" which is protesting Bill C-45, the government's omnibus budget legislation.

Source(s) of reporting: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, PS Regional Offices, ON Ministry of Transportation (MTO), New Brunswick Department of Public Safety, Transport Canada, Canada Border Services Agency, media/open source reporting.

Current actions: GOC is monitoring the situation and has established contact with key partners in order to maintain cohesive information sharing.

Event management of the protests falls under the purview of local jurisdictions and local law enforcement agencies, as appropriate.

On 04 Jan, the Prime Minister announced he will be meeting with a delegation of FN leaders, coordinated by the Assembly of First Nations (AFN), on 11 Jan. The meeting will include the AANDC Minister and focus on two areas: 1) the treaty relationship and aboriginal rights and 2) economic development. Media reporting indicates Chief Spence will take part in the meeting.

The protest activities are dynamic in nature and subject to change. At this time, the GOC is aware of the following "Idle No More" related protest activities planned for 05 Jan 2013.

Protest Events (Possible Disruptions)

Ontario

- 11:00 – 14:00 EST at Fort Erie. The Peace Bridge Border blockade will occur between 13:00 – 14:00 EST.
- 11:00 EST at Cornwall. Seaway International Bridge blockade.
- 11:00 – 12:00 EST at Sarnia. Blue Water Bridge blockade.
- 13:00 EST in the Hamilton area. Closure of Highway 403 at Main Street.
- Oshawa (Time unknown). Rally at Albert Street over Highway 401.
- Potential protest on the CN Rail Line through Tyendinaga in Eastern ON. Note: Via Rail issued a travel advisory regarding a potential blockade at Marysville.
- Pic River - Marathon (10:00 – 16:00 EST). Rail blockade on CP Railway line at Highway 627.

- Walpole Island Ferry (Time unknown): Protest

New Brunswick
- There is currently a blockade of the CN Rail line near Adamsville, Kent County. The blockade may continue for several days.
- A peaceful protest is taking place near, but not on, Highway 102 (the former TransCanada Highway) – near Kingsclear FN. No end time is indicated.
- Woodstock, NB. Houlton, Maine Border blockade (reportedly cancelled).

Saskatchewan
- 13:00 EST Peaceful Slow Down Barricade on the Trans-Canada Highway. (exact location not yet determined).

Alberta
- 08:00 – 09:00 EST in Hardisty. "Turn off the Taps! blockade at the Pipeline Terminal".

British Columbia
- Douglas Peace Arch 14:00 EST: Peaceful protest to "block the border".
- Rykerts / Porthill 17:00-19:00 EST: Solidarity gathering.
- Coho / Seattle - Victoria Clipper Ferry, Terminal – Victoria, BC 17:30 – 20:30 EST: Peaceful protest / traditional bone game to be played at the entrance / exit of the terminal to coincide with the afternoon arrival of the MV Coho ferry from Port Angeles, Washington.

Northwest Territories
- 12:00 – 13:00 EST at Fort Providence. Highway 3 blockade at the Deh Cho Bridge.

United States
- 11:00 – 12:00 EST at International Falls MN. "Idle No More Solidarity Round Dance International Falls, MN Border Crossing (at Fort Frances, ON).

Other Protest Events

Quebec
- Unknown time in Gaspésie. Protesters from the Gesgapegiag Band Council are planning a march.

Saskatchewan
- 12:00 – 13:00 EST at the White Buffalo Youth Lodge in Saskatoon. "Idle No More Saskatoon Rally".
- 11:00 – 12:00 EST at Buffalo Narrows. Peaceful gathering.

Alberta
- 15:00 – 18:00 EST at the West Edmonton Mall. "Latin@s in Edmonton in Solidarity with Idle No More".

British Columbia
- Osoyoos 16:00 EST: Demonstration to be staged outside the Port of Entry (not expected to impact operations).
- 16:00 – 18:00 EST at Centennial Park, Ganges, Salt Spring Island. Solidarity with First Nations event.

- 17:00 – 18:00 EST at Orchard Park Shopping Centre, Kelowna. Flash Round Dance.

United States
- Presque Isle Mall, Maine (Time unknown). Flash mob drum circle event.

Assessment/Analysis: Although it may have a mitigating effect, it is unclear what implications the 11 Jan meeting between the Prime Minister and FN leaders, including Chief Spence, will have on planned protest activities. To note, some activities planned for 05 Jan have been cancelled as of 04 Jan.

The protests have been peaceful in nature. However, some protests have disrupted rail operations and resulted in delays on various highways.

Departments and Agencies with further information on this incident are asked to report to the GOC.

Additional situation reports: Further situation reports will be issued as significant developments occur.

Additional Products: Geomatics and other products will be attached to a follow-on message.

Rapport de situation

Numéro de l'incident : ST122-12H

Incident : Manifestations des Premières Nations

Date : Renseignements mis à jour le 4 janvier 2013, à 16 h 30 (HNE).

Description de l'incident : Diverses manifestations des Premières nations sont en train de se dérouler dans le cadre d'un mouvement populaire intitulé « Idle No More », qui critique le projet de loi omnibus C-45 du gouvernement portant sur le budget.

Sources des renseignements : Affaires autochtones et Développement du Nord Canada, les bureaux régionaux de Sécurité publique Canada, le ministère des Transports de l'Ontario, le ministère de la Sécurité publique du Nouveau-Brunswick, Transports Canada, l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada et les médias/sources générales Mesures en cours : Le COG surveille la situation et est en communication avec des partenaires afin de maintenir un échange d'information cohérent.

La gestion des manifestations relève des autorités et des organismes d'application de la loi locaux, le cas échéant.

Le 4 janvier, le Premier ministre a annoncé qu'il rencontrerait une délégation de chefs des Premières Nations le 11 janvier; l'Assemblée des Premières Nations (APN) va coordonner cette rencontre. La réunion, à laquelle participera le ministre des Affaires autochtones et du Nord canadien, portera, d'une part, sur les relations découlant des traités et les droits autochtones et, d'autre part, sur le développement économique. Les médias ont indiqué que la chef Spence participera à la rencontre.

Les activités associées aux manifestations peuvent changer à tout moment. À l'heure actuelle, selon les informations dont dispose le COG, les activités suivantes sont planifiées le 5 janvier 2013.

Manifestation (perturbations possibles)

Ontario
- 11 h – 14 h (HNE) à Fort Erie. Le passage frontalier du pont Peace sera bloqué de 13 h à 14 h (HNE).
- 11 h (HNE) à Cornwall. Le pont international de la Voie maritime sera bloqué.
- 11 h – 12 h (HNE) à Sarnia. Le pont Blue Water sera bloqué.
- 13 h (HNE) dans la région d'Hamilton. Fermeture de la route 403 au niveau de la rue Main
- Oshawa (heure non précisée). Regroupement dans la rue Albert au-dessus de la route 401.

- Il pourrait y avoir une manifestation sur la ligne ferroviaire de CN Rail à Tyendinaga dans l'Est de l'Ontario. Rem. : Via Rail a émis un avis aux voyageurs concernant un barrage possible à Marysville.
- Pic River - Marathon (10 h – 16 h [HNE]). Barrage sur la voie ferrée de CP Railway au niveau de la route 627
- Traversier de l'île Walpole (heure non précisée) : Manifestation

Nouveau-Brunswick
- La voie ferroviaire de CN Rail est actuellement bloquée près d'Adamsville, dans le conté de Kent. Le barrage pourrait être maintenu pendant plusieurs jours.
- Une manifestation pacifique se déroule, sans barrage, près de la route 102 (ancienne route transcanadienne) – à proximité de la Première Nation Kingsclear. On ne sait pas quand la manifestation prendra fin.
- Woodstock (N.-B.). Barrage à Houlton, sur la frontière avec le Maine (aurait été annulé).

Saskatchewan
- 13 h (HNE) Barrage de ralentissement pacifique sur la route transcanadienne. (Le lieu exact n'a pas encore été indiqué).

Alberta
- 8 h – 9 h (HNE) à Hardisty. « Turn off the Taps! blockade at the Pipeline Terminal » (« Fermez les robinets! Barrage au terminal pipelinier »)

Colombie-Britannique
- Douglas (Peace Arch), 14 h (HNE) : Manifestation pacifique pour « bloquer la frontière »
- Rykerts/Porthill, 17 h - 19 h (HNE) : Rassemblement de solidarité
- Coho/Seattle – Gare portuaire du traversier Victoria Clipper – Victoria (C.-B.) 17 h 30 – 20 h 30 (HNE) : Manifestation pacifique/les manifestants joueront au « jeu de l'os », jeu traditionnel, à l'entrée et à la sortie de la gare, dans l'après-midi, au moment où le traversier Coho arrivera de Port Angeles (État de Washington).

Territoires du Nord-Ouest
- 12 h – 13 h (HNE) à Fort Providence. Barrage sur la route 3 au pont Deh Cho

États-Unis
- 11 h – 12 h (HNE) à International Falls (Minnesota). Ronde pour exprimer la solidarité envers le mouvement « Idle No More » au poste frontalier d'International Falls (à Fort Frances, Ontario).

Autres manifestations

Québec
- Heure non précisée, en Gaspésie. Des manifestants venant du conseil de la bande Gesgapegiag prévoient un défilé.

Saskatchewan
- 12 h – 13 h (HNE) au White Buffalo Youth Lodge à Saskatoon. Rassemblement de soutien au mouvement « Idle No More » de Saskatoon
- 11 h – 12 h (HNE) à Buffalo Narrows. Rassemblement pacifique

Alberta

- 15 h – 18 h (HNE) au centre commercial de West Edmonton. « Latin@s in Edmonton in Solidarity with Idle No More » (personnes originaires d'Amérique latine manifestant pour soutenir le mouvement « Idle No More »)

Colombie-Britannique

- Osoyoos, 16 h (HNE) : Manifestation organisée à côté du poste frontalier (ne devrait pas perturber la circulation)
- 16 h – 18 h (HNE) au parc Centennial de Ganges, sur l'île Salt Spring. Élan de solidarité envers les Premières Nations
- 17 h – 18 h (HNE) au centre commercial Orchard Park de Kelowna. Rassemblement éclair pour faire une ronde

États-Unis

- Centre commercial Presque Isle, Maine (heure non précisée). Rassemblement éclair avec cercle de tambours

Évaluation/analyse : Bien que la rencontre du 11 janvier entre le Premier ministre et des chefs des Premières Nations, dont la chef Spence, puisse avoir un effet d'atténuation, on ne sait pas quelles seront les implications pour les manifestations prévues. Certaines activités qui devaient avoir lieu le 5 janvier ont été annulées le 4 janvier.

Jusqu'à maintenant, les manifestations ont été pacifiques. Cependant, quelques manifestations ont causé l'interruption de services ferroviaires et des retards sur diverses routes.

Les ministères et les organismes qui ont plus de renseignements au sujet de cet incident sont priés de communiquer avec le COG.

Autres rapports de situation : D'autres rapports de situation seront émis au fur et à mesure que des développements importants se produisent.

Autres produits : Des produits de géomatique ainsi que d'autres produits seront joints à des messages subséquents.

SYNOPSIS | SYNOPSIS

Idle No More is an ongoing protest movement originating among the First Nations and other Indigenous Peoples in Canada. It has quickly grown and garnered worldwide support from other Indigenous Peoples as well as sympathetic non-Indigenous Canadians and Americans. It has consisted of a number of political actions worldwide, inspired in part by the hunger strike of Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence and further coordinated via social media. The movement claims that the Canadian government's omnibus bill C-45 infringes on a number of historical treaty rights, however, according to open sources, Chief Theresa Spence is not supporting these protests.

Large protests are expected to take place on January 5, 2013, in various regions, with the largest protest expected to occur at the Cornwall Port of Entry in Ontario. Other smaller protests may have a limited impact on CBSA operations at ports of entry in the Southern Ontario Region (Sarnia, Fort Erie and Niagara Falls); Northern Ontario Region (Fort Francis and Sault Ste. Marie); Pacific Region (Douglas, Osoyoos, Kingsgate and Victoria) and the Prairie Region (Boissevain and Carway).

The movement has gained support from other similar mass movements, including Occupy Canada and Council for Canadians as well as Greenpeace.

Although protests conducted under the Idle No More banner remain peaceful, there is the potential for violence the more they impact the public.

The Intelligence Operations and Analysis Division (IOAD) and Regional Enforcement and Intelligence Divisions (E&I) are continuing to liaise with partner agencies, including the Ontario Provincial Police (OPP), the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), US Customs and Border Protection (US CBP), US Border Patrol, the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service (CSIS), the Integrated Terrorism Assessment Centre (ITAC), Transport Canada (TC) and the Sûreté du Québec to monitor and assess threats in relation to planned blockades.

« Idle No More » est un mouvement de protestation en cours d'origine entre les Premières Nations et d'autres peuples autochtones du Canada. Il s'est rapidement développé et il a recueilli un soutien dans le monde entier à partir des peuples autochtones ainsi que les Canadiens et Américains non autochtones, sympathique au mouvement. Il a consisté en une série d'actions politique dans le monde entier, inspirée en partie par la grève de la faim de la chef Thérèse Spence d` Attawapiskat et plus coordonnée via les medias sociaux. Le mouvement affirme que le projet de loi omnibus du gouvernement canadien C-45 viole un certain nombre de droits issus des traités historiques. Cependant, selon des sources ouvertes, la chef Theresa Spence ne soutient pas ces protestations.

De grandes manifestations devraient avoir lieu le 5 janvier 2013, dans différentes régions et la plus grande manifestation devrait avoir lieu au port d'entrée de Cornwall en Ontario. D'autres manifestations plus petites peuvent avoir un impact limité sur les opérations de l`ASFC aux points d'entrée dans la Région Sud de l`Ontario (Sarnia, Fort Erie et Niagara Falls); Nord de l`Ontario (Fort Francis et Sault Ste Marie); Région du Pacifique (Douglas. Osoyoos, Kingsgate et Victoria) et la région des Prairies (Boissevain et Carway).

Le mouvement a gagné l'appui de d'autres mouvements de masse similaires, y compris « Occupy Canada » et le Conseil des Canadiens, ainsi que Greenpeace.

Bien que les protestions menée sous la bannière d'inactivité « Idle No More » ont restées pacifiques, il y a un potentiel de violence qui ont plus un impact sur le public.

Les opérations de renseignement et de l'analyse (IOAD) et application régionale et les divisions du renseignement (E&I) continuent d'assurer la liaison avec les organismes partenaires, y compris la Police provinciale de l`Ontario (PPO), la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), US Customs and Border Protection (US CBP), la US Border Patrol, le service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS), le Centre d'évaluation intégrée terrorisme (ACTI), Transport Canada (TC) et la Sureté du Québec pour surveiller été évaluer les menaces pas rapport aux blocages prévus.

Natives plan Blue Water blockade
Local members of the Idle No More native protest movement plan to block traffic on the Canadian side of the Blue Water Bridge for one hour Saturday. Sarnia police said the bridge would be closed in both directions from noon until 1 p.m., with drivers in the area of Exmouth and Front streets asked to be patient. They should expect traffic to be heavy and even stopped at times during the demonstration. Protesters are expected to meet at the Soul's Memorial along the waterfront in Point Edward, beginning at 10 a.m. They will march to Hwy. 402 and plan to block traffic in both directions near the currency exchange until noon. Idle No More protests target bridges across Canada
The Idle No More protest movement continues to gain steam with more demonstrations Saturday, after Prime Minister Stephen Harper announced he would meet with a delegation of First Nations chiefs, including Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence who is now on day 26 of a hunger strike. Several groups have pledged to block bridges, several of which straddle the Canada-U.S. border. Organizers with Idle No More have organized several other demonstrations on Saturday at sites including: The Peace Arch crossing in Surrey, B.C., from 1 to 2 p.m. PT, NWT's Deh Cho Bridge between 2 and 4 p.m. MT, the Canadian side of the Blue Water Bridge in Sarnia, Ont., for one hour. Sarnia police said the bridge would be closed in both directions from noon until 1 p.m. The Peace Bridge between Fort Erie and Buffalo in the Niagara region, starting at 1 p.m. ET. Organizers say it will be "peaceful," and they will occupy only one lane of traffic on the international bridge, A disruption is also planned at the Queenston/Lewiston Bridge between Niagara Falls and Niagara on the Lake. Cornwall bridge reopened after Idle No More protest
Police in Cornwall, Ont., have reopened the International Bridge after an Idle No More protest attracted about 100 demonstrators and closed the bridge for more than three hours. The bridge closed at about 10:30 a.m. when the march began and reopened at about 2 p.m. CBC News; Canadian Press (Global Montreal); Ottawa Citizen; Cornwall Seway News

Idle No More activists to block Deh Cho Bridge
Drivers who plan to N.W.T.'s Deh Cho Bridge this afternoon could have trouble as Idle No More activists plan to disrupt traffic. Event organizers say the prime minister's commitment to meet with First Nation leaders has only fuelled the Idle No More fire. Organizer Nellie Norwegian said they chose to block the recently opened Deh Cho Bridge to show, even though the federal and territorial governments built the link, it is still on Dene land. She said they do not expect the upcoming meeting to change any of the government's priorities. They hope to draw attention to the need for environmental protection for land and water in the North. The rally and a round dance are expected to block bridge traffic from 2 to 4 p.m., followed by a feast. CBC News

Protest underway at the Peace Bridge
Several "Idle No More" protests are planned for today. Protestors have gathered at the Peace Bridge in Fort Erie for a rally, and a march will take place at 1p Saturday. The "peaceful" march will occupy one lane of traffic on the bridge. The single lane closure and is not expected to impact traffic movements or cause border delays. A gathering will be held at the Fort Erie Native Friendship Centre following the march. 610 CKTB; Global BC

SYNOPSIS | SYNOPSIS

Idle No More is an ongoing protest movement originating among the First Nations and other Indigenous Peoples in Canada. It has quickly grown and garnered worldwide support from other Indigenous Peoples as well as sympathetic non-Indigenous Canadians and Americans. It has consisted of a number of political actions worldwide, inspired in part by the hunger strike of Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence and further coordinated via social media. The movement claims that the Canadian government's omnibus bill C-45 infringes on a number of historical treaty rights, however, according to open sources, Chief Theresa Spence is not supporting these protests.

Large protests are expected to take place on January 5, 2013, in various regions, with the largest protest expected to occur at the Cornwall Port of Entry in Ontario. Other smaller protests may have a limited impact on CBSA operations at ports of entry in the Southern Ontario Region (Sarnia, Fort Erie and Niagara Falls); Northern Ontario Region (Fort Francis and Sault Ste. Marie); Pacific Region (Douglas, Osoyoos, Kingsgate and Victoria) and the Prairie Region (Boissevain and Carway).

The movement has gained support from other similar mass movements, including Occupy Canada and Council for Canadians as well as Greenpeace.

Although protests conducted under the Idle No More banner remain peaceful, there is the potential for violence the more they impact the public.

The Intelligence Operations and Analysis Division (IOAD) and Regional Enforcement and Intelligence Divisions (E&I) are continuing to liaise with partner agencies, including the Ontario Provincial Police (OPP), the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), US Customs and Border Protection (US CBP), US Border Patrol, the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service (CSIS), the Integrated Terrorism

Assessment Centre (ITAC), Transport Canada (TC) and the Sûreté du Québec to monitor and assess threats in relation to planned blockades.
